NOTE.

1. A special note is necessary in introducing the third and concluding volume of the Manual.

2. First object.—The first object of the volume is to establish the necessary connection between the English and the vernacular languages in matters where this can be most suitably done by a publication made with Government resources. In considering that connection, it will be found that there are always three difficulties present; uncertain orthography, imperfect correlation between the languages, and multiplicity of synonyms even after correlation is established. It is the object of this volume to supply a definition in each of these cases of ambiguity; the definitions to be taken as standards whenever it is thought fit, or to the extent which is thought fit. In carrying out the process etymology has been added as a necessary attendant upon it.

3. Uncertain orthography arises chiefly in the form given to native words when they are employed in English writings. A statement of the past history and present condition of this question has been given at Volume I, pages 544–549. The words in question have been incorporated in Anglo-Indian usage during two centuries, in which period the peculiarities of the English language have made them assume very numerous shapes. Of late a movement has taken place, which is likely in the end to prove successful, in the direction of abandoning altogether the attempt to express such words on English principles, and instead of that of employing a method of strict transliteration from the exact letters of the original, combined with the use of the Continental and especially the Italian powers of the Roman alphabet, to which accents and other signs are applied. The latter is however in effect so far as writing is concerned a new language, and the country is in a state of transition from one style to the other. This therefore only adds to the number of forms at the present moment requiring to be treated by a glossary. The definition adopted in this case in the present volume is to place first as title the average Anglo-Indian form, and then next after it in brackets the average form on the purely transliterative or as it is in this book called Continental system. The average Anglo-Indian form means the form arrived at by applying Volume II, Appendix XXI. Though ignorance and fashion have introduced an extreme number of irregularities, yet it is a mistake to suppose that there is no system in the English style of orthography applied to native names. It is less regular than the Continental style, but in the usage of the best writers it displays an organic character and method quite its own. The selection of an average has therefore been the result of analysis and not arbitrary. The forms here selected for title may be said to be those which are now just beginning to go out of fashion, but which were exclusively in use in Southern India as late as twenty years ago. The average Continental form means the form arrived at by applying Volume II, Appendix XXIII. It rejects the diacritical marks shown in Volume II, Appendix XXIV, other than the acute accent. It is a form that may be used at any time without encumbering manuscript or embarrassing printers and is sufficient for all purpose of ordinary identification. In cases only where the Tamul character expresses Tamul words derived from the Sanscrit, for which purpose it is very defective, will the transliterations be found not suitable for practical requirements. The Continental forms where differing from the English forms re-appear as titles in the index at the end of the volume. By giving the two average forms cross-referenced in this manner it is believed that the difficulty of finding words has been reduced to a minimum. As regards the current text, or that portion of the matter not devoted to definition, it has been considered from the commencement of the work that a mixed or varying style of orthography was unsuitable to this publication. The choice was then between adopting either the English style throughout or the Continental style throughout; and this was found on experiment to be at the present date a choice between a slight archaism or decided pedantry. The former alternative was taken.

4. Imperfect correlation between the English and the vernacular languages appears chiefly in the process of ascertaining vernacular equivalents for English terms connected with the natural kingdom, and especially terms bearing on economical subjects. A vast amount of information has been acquired on this head in Southern India during the present century, but very little has been collated or put forward in a suitable, accurate, or accessible form. Nor has any attempt been made hitherto to analyze the native nomenclature in contraposition to European structural classification, yet such a process is very necessary if it is sought to go at all below the surface. The present volume aims at defining this subject on fixed principles of verification and with the greatest accuracy at present attainable; and the reader who will be at the trouble to set against one another the different parts of the work will find that the whole subject has been systematically elaborated. The results show that the natives of the country have a much more intimate acquaintance with structure in the natural kingdom than is generally supposed; and the establishment of the correlations will, it is believed, subserve many useful ends. There are 50,000 such correlations in the present volume.

5. Multiplicity of synonyms occurs in connection with the last-named subject, in the three branches into which that subject resolves itself; the Anglo-Indian terms (otherwise commercial), the scientific terms, and the vernacular terms. The number of aliases in these cases, and the great confusion and inconvenience thence arising are well known. It is not too much to say that the number of aliases in the scientific botanical system form one of the chief technical impediments to the compilation and diffusion of information regarding the economic uses of the vegetable kingdom. Thus to take the simplest example, in Drury's "Useful Plants," a modern and practical work, 50 per cent. of the botanical terms taken as title differ from the previous writer Roxburgh, and 10 per cent. are in turn altered by the later Flora of British India (Kew). When such a process is applied cumulatively to a number of economic writers the extent of the confusion which arises may well be conceived. The present volume has undertaken the function of collecting all the synonyms under each head, and selecting from them a standard, one for each head; and it is to be distinctly understood that no such term has been quoted in this volume without being exposed in an exhaustive manner to that process. In the case of Anglo-Indian (or commercial) terms, the one selected will be known by not being quoted as an alternative. In the case of scientific terms the same. In taking botanical names for standard in the vegetable economic system, the Flora of British India (Kew) has been nearly always followed where applicable; it is to be observed however that the object in this connection is not so much to get the best standard as to get any standard whatever to which variants can for the practical purpose mentioned be reduced. In the case of vernacular terms, the one selected in each language will be found with vernacular type next after title or sub-title. As a general principle it has been considered that one vernacular equivalent in each language, and that the most typical and generally applicable, is sufficient; as otherwise this work would have exceeded all limit. But in some cases vernacular alternatives are shown later in the text.

6. Etymologies of all the principal Anglo-Indian and vernacular terms will be found in the work. They may be said to be all new and form one of the chief parts of the labour of the undertaking. They number about 35,000. In the case of names of places, indigenous etymologies have been in the great majority of instances substituted for the Sanscrit corruptions usually received on the authority of stalapooraunams. The modern example of a Sanscrit corruption shown under the item Saint Thomas's Mount is an exact type of the process which has been going on for hundreds or rather probably for thousands of years. This matter contributes with others to show the fallacious nature of the old theory of Aryan invasion. Hindooism is indeed all absorbing, but it is only by great intellectual effort. Many place names so far from having the Sanscrit derivations usually assigned to them appear to belong to a period when the present Dravidian dialects had not yet branched off as such from the original Dravidian stock, or when they differed much less from each other than they do now. In matters other than place names also the general tendency of the volume will be found to be one of de-sanscritizing the etymology.

7. Second object.—The second object of this volume is in conjunction with the glossary titles to bring forward such general information on the different heads as either is available from indigenous and local sources alone, or has been compiled by former quasi-official labours and remains now almost inaccessible on the shelf; the work of reduction being in both cases such as none but a Government agency could in this country perform. Special attention may be drawn to the geographical items (about 5,000), which in conjunction with pages 47–169 of Volume II and various parts of Volume I form an approximate gazetteer to the province, as indicated in the Preface; and to the economic items (about 4,000), which form the only economic dictionary for the Presidency at present available. Information is however given on very many other subjects in which it appears desirable to illustrate European topics by ascertaining and exhibiting the native point of view; in this connection such heads as Astrology, Astronomy, Customs, Festivals, Literature, Natural history, Philosophy, Proper names, Religion, Weights and measures, &c., have been fully and systematically treated.

8. Books from which in certain cases free quotation has been made, and which therefore require to be specified, are:—in religion and philosophy, Ziegenbalg's Genealogie der Malabarischer Götter (1713); in economic flora, Roxburgh's Flora Indica (1832), Drury's works; in zoology Jerdon's, Day's, and Günther's works. All these authors except the one last-mentioned have been South Indian writers.

9. The remark made in the Preface as to the admixture of original and compiled matter may be here repeated; with the proviso that there is much more original matter in this than there was in the two previous volumes. About one-twentieth of the descriptive matter mentioned in para. 7 is merely compiled; the remainder is matter either rewritten or original, and translations have been made of many native papers.

10. Signs, &c.—Round brackets ( ) indicate that the vernacular words contained therein are spelt on the new Continental system. Square brackets [ ] indicate current cross-references. The sign * indicates a form of spelling adopted by Government for official correspondence.

11. Throughout the bulk of the vernacular equivalents vernacular type has been given. A roman type to act as a substitute in one work for all the languages of Southern India would take the very inconvenient form shown in Volume II, Appendix XXIV. The typography has therefore been in the main polyglot in sixteen vernacular languages combined with the ordinary roman.

12. It will be found that there is a more sparse use of capital letters in the text than usual. This method has been indispensable for classifying matter, throwing catch-words into relief, and alphabetically arranging whole phrases, in columns so closely printed.

13. As the etymological and classificatory method employed often conflicts to a certain extent with the alphabetical, and also with a view to the different variations set out in paragraphs 3–5 above, it will be necessary when using the volume as a work of reference to constantly consult the index at the end (about 65,000 items). It is an integral part of the design. When either the commencement or the termination of a compound word falls quite naturally within the alphabetical arrangement of the main text, the reader is left to trace the word for himself; but in all other cases assistance is given through the index.

14. Conclusion.—It may be observed in summing up the contents of the present volume that its frequent use as a work of reference can scarcely fail to bring conviction as to the truth of the main thesis advanced in the first 188 pages of Volume I, a thesis however very imperfectly recognized at the date of the commencement of this publication; namely that the Dravidians or population of Southern India form one of the world's separate and very great nations, and that the exterior Aryan influence which has been brought to bear upon them has given only the thinnest veneer to their original characteristics and institutions.

15. Finally though no pains have been spared and every precaution has been taken, it will be impossible in a volume going into so many details but that some mistakes will eventually be found.

GLOSSARY.

A (अ - a, आ - á, San.; ا - alif, Hind.; அ - a, ஆ - á, Tam.). —(1) Short San. symbolic of Vishnoo, especially as the first letter of the three sounds in the sacred syllable om; also of Bramh. Long San. symbol of Shiva and Lutchmy. Hind. in arithmetic one; in almanacs and astronomical books, Sunday and Taurus. Short Tam. sign of the numeral 8. The long letter in all the Dravidian languages is the ordinary Dravidian vocative, followed constantly by long "o" if the reply is not immediate; thus (appá), then (appó). It is also the Dravidian direct interrogative, "o" being the interrogative of doubt. Among the lowest Tamulians "á" forms termination also of numerous expletive particles; and all these "á" sounds are nasally prolonged. Hence character for want of euphony given by Europeans on superficial acquaintance to Tamul, a mellifluous and resounding language.—(2) Sanscrit short is negative prefix.——Achit (अचित् - achit, San.). Not mind; that is to say matter. With the Shreeveishnavas chit or mind is the spirit of Vishnoo; this, achit or matter, and eeshwaran or supreme ruler, form the three predicates of the universe [shreeveishnava]. See Vol. I (89).——Acsha tadiya (అక్షతదియ - akshatadiya, Tel.). From (akshaya, san. undying + tritíya, san. third); observance gives permanency to actions then performed. Otherwise Balarama jayanty. Lunar holiday [pundigay, 3e]. 3rd tity of waxing moon of 2nd lunar month Veishaukham [mausam], between April 16th and May 16th. Anniversary of beginning of Tretayoog.——Acshayam (अक्षय - akshaya, San.). From (kshaya, san. destruction). Unfailing. The seventh day of a lunar month if it fall on a Sunday or Monday, the fourth if it fall on Wednesday, is called Acshaya or auspicious day; the reasons are astrological. Acshaya pautram, from (above + pátra, san. utensil), is a charitable allowance to Bramins from the gross produce.——Adharmam (अधर्म - adharma, San.). From (dharma, san. virtue). Vice, demerit; opposite of Dharmam. According to Jeinas it causes soul's continuance with the body.——Adity (अदिति - aditi, San.). From (diti, san. the mother of asuras). Not dity. One of the wives of Cashyapan, and the mother of the gods and sooras or divinities [asooran]; her offspring are called Audityans.——Adweitam (अद्वैत - advaita, San.). From (dvaita, san. duality). Non-duality or identity. Unity of God and all his emanations. Bramins and their followers are of three classes according to the distinctions made by a combination of creed and philosophy. The Smartas worship Shiva and prosecute the Adweitam development of vedantic philosophy; being followers of Shuncaracharry. The Madhwas worship Vishnoo and prosecute the Dweitam development; being followers of Madhwacharry. The Shreeveishnavas worship Vishnoo and prosecute the Vishishtaudweitam development; being followers of Ramaunoojacharry. Of the three philosophies the old or Adweitam is that which prevails most in Southern india. This system regards the supreme spirit and the human spirit as one; in a state of degradation through ignorance, but re-absorbed on obtaining true wisdom. The world is an illusion. All external objects are different forms of the one deity, besides whom there exists nothing else. As gold is one, though in various forms, as money, earrings and other ornaments; so the one sole existent deity is found in all the various forms that appear to exist around mankind. The body of man is a temporary prison. On its decease the soul flows into deity; as air in a closed earthen vessel, when such is broken, flows into the common atmosphere. The Adweitam denies the existence of moral evil. Many treatises in Tamul, Teloogoo and Canarese on Adweitam philosophy. See Darshanam for philosophy generally. See Vedauntam for the main body of philosophy which underlies the Adweitam. For the founder of Adweitam see Shuncaracharry. See also Vol. I (74), (76). Cf. Spinozism.——Aghoran (अघोर - aghóra, San.). From (ghóra, san. terrific). Euphemistic title of Shiva. A religious mendicant.——Akhandam (अखण्ड - akhanda, San.). Means undivided. Akhanda cauvery is the country of the broad undivided Cauvery. The W. portion of Trichinopoly district from Caroor to Tirpalatoray; the latter being place where Cauvery divides into two branches, Cauvery and Coleroon. Epithet also for lamps kept burning at Hindoo shrines.——Akhilam (अखिल - akhila, San.). From (khila, san. gap). Whole. Akhilandayya, from (anda, san. egg) is Shiva, the lord of the universe. Akhilaunda naicky is Parvaty. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Amaram (अमर - amara, San.). From (mri, san. to die). Immortality. Amara cosham, from (kósha, san. vocabulary), otherwise Tricaundam meaning three parts, otherwise Naumalingaunooshausanam meaning name + gender + rules, is a Sanscrit vocabulary by Amaran found in all Indian languages. In verse. Synonymous words are collected into one or more verses and placed in fifteen chapters, which treat of as many subjects. Sixteenth contains homonymous terms arranged alphabetically, in the Indian manner, by final consonants. Seventeenth is a full catalogue of indeclinables, i.e., adverbs, prepositions, conjunctions, and interjections. Last chapter is on gender of nouns.——Amareshwaran (अमरेश्वर - amaréshvara, San.). From (mara, san. death + íshvara, san. lord). Either Vishnoo or Shiva.——Amogham (अमोघ - amógha, San.). From (muh, san. to err). Unerring. Amogha varshan, meaning one who showers benefits unerringly, was Jeina king of Tondeimundalam at end of 9th century of Christian era. The principal Jeina pooraunams were written in his reign by his spiritual preceptor Jainasainan acharry.——Amoortam (अमूर्त - amúrta, San.). From (múrta, san. shape). Artificial division of time as opposed to Moortam or practical division [caulam, 3]. It has no natural standard. Used in astrology. The following is a scale of Amoortam time:—100 trooty or atoms = 1 tatparam or speck, 30 tatparams = 1 nimisham or twinkling, 18 nimishams = 1 caushtay or bit, 30 caushtays = 1 calay or indian minute, 30 calays = 1 ghaticam or indian hour, 2 ghaticams = 1 cshanam or double hour, 30 cshanams = 1 day. Approximate actual value:—1 ghaticam = 24 English minutes 1 trooty being $\frac{1}{33750}$ of an English second.——Amritam (अमृत - amrita, San.). From (mrita, san. dead). Immortal. Ambrosia, the beverage of the gods, produced at the churning of the ocean; and cause of war between Sooras and Asooras. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar], as Amritam iyer, Amritammaul. Amritanaicken is common among non-bramins. Amrit mahaul is title of a cattle breeding establishment in Mysore. Amritam is plant title, as:—Anona squamosa, Citrus medica, var. limetta, Methonica superba, Phyllanthus emblica, Psidium guyava, Pyrus communis, Terminalia chebula, Tinospora cordifolia; see gloss. paragraphs.——Anangan (अनङ्ग - ananga, San.). From (anga, san. body). Incorporeal. Cauman, the Indian cupid.——Ananta chatoordashy (అనంతచతుర్దశి - anantachaturdashi, Tel.). From (ananta, san. vishnu, the infinite + chaturdashí, san. fourteenth day). Otherwise Ananta vratam and Anantapudmanaubha chatoordashy. Lunar festival [pundigay, 3a]. 14th tity of 6th lunar month Bhaudrapadam [mausam] first pacsham, between Sep. 1st and Sep. 30th, sacred to Vishnoo, the infinite or the lotus-navelled. The corresponding religious ceremony is observed by males only. At the break of day the Bramin family priest consecrates a vessel, by reciting certain formulas. He is then presented with cloths and money. Those who keep it take but one meal and tie a red silk string on the right arm. This festival, as well as that of Varalutchmy vratam in Shrauvanam [mausam] or August and of Kedaury vratam in Aushweejam [mausam] or October, is not obligatory; but having once kept it, the celebration always must be continued. Even the posterity of those who have observed it are subject to this law, till they get released from their tacit vow.——Anantan (अनन्त - ananta, San.). From (anta, san. end). The eternal deity, Vishnoo or Shiva. Also Audy sheshan [q.v.]. Ananta shayanan, from (shayana, san. bed), is he who has Sheshan the serpent for his couch, Vishnoo. Appears in comp.; Ananta narayanan, Ananta pudmanaubhan, Ananta sadaushivan, &c. Ananta teertan means the devotee of Vishnoo. Anantayya is common Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [anantapore, peyar]. Anantaraushy is an infinite quantity in mathematics. Anantam, alluding to spreading roots, is plant name common to:—Barleria prionitis, Cynodon dactylon, Hemidesmus indicus.——Anaudy (अनादि - anádi, San.). From (ádi, san. beginning). Immemorial. Anaudibeed is ground waste from time immemorial.——Animisham (अनिमिष - animisha, San.). From (nimisha, san. winking). One whose eyes do not wink; a god.——Anyaunam (अज्ञान - añána, San.). From (ñá, san. to know). Ignorance. In philosophy not merely a negative, but an active principle which, consisting of the three goonas, viz., Satwam, Rajas and Tamas, and preventing the soul from realizing its identity with Bramh, causes self to appear a distinct personality and matter to appear a reality. Hence equivalent to Pracrity or nature and termed a divine shacty, synonymous with Mauyay or illusion. Anyauny is a heathen in Christian publications.——Anyauyam (अन्याय - anyáya, San.). From (nyáya, san. rule). Injustice. Complaint of injustice. Plaint in a civil suit.——Aparapacsham (अपरपक्ष - aparapaksha, San.). Means latter + fortnight; dark fortnight. Lunar festival [pundigay, 3e]. The whole of waning moon of 6th lunar month Bhaudrapadam [mausam]; any 15 days between 1st Sep. and 15th Oct. Same as Bramha sauvitry in Bengal.——Aranyam (अरण्य - aranya, San.). From (ri, san.

to go). Place neither cultivated nor grazed. Forest. Suffix in place names; as Vedaranyam, meaning sacred writing + forest. ——Aravam (ارْوِی - arví, Hind.; అరవము - aravamu, Tel.). From (rava, san. sound). Name for Tamul among Mussalmans, Teloogoo and Canarese, on account of its being destitute of aspirates. Not to be confounded with the Tamul word aravam, sound. The latter word means sound, whilst the former means being without sound. The people who are represented by Ptolemy as occupying the portion of the Coromandel coast near Nellore are called by him the ἀρούαρνοι, which may represent the Tamul fishermen. There is a large caste of Aravas or Tamul caupoos in the Teloogoo country.——Arogyam (आरोग्य - árógya, San.). From (róga, san. sickness). Health. Common Hindoo 2nd or pers. name among non-bramins. Also Arogyasawmy [peyar].——Aroondhaty (अरुन्धती - arundhatí, San.). From (rudh, san. to check); above suspicion. Star in the Great bear regarded as wife of Vasishtan, a pattern of chastity. Pointed out to bride at marriage ceremony. There is a Tamul proverb :—அம்மி மிதித்து அருந்ததி பார்த்ததுபோல— "like one standing on a grindstone and looking at Aroondhaty," meaning the same. ——Asat (असत् - asat, San.). From (sat, san. entity). Nonentity [sat].——Atalam (अतल - atala, San.). From (tala, san. bottom). Bottomless. Subterranean world. One of the 14 locams.——Atchootan (अच्युत - achyuta, San.). From (chyu, san. to fall). Means who cannot fall, Vishnoo. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar]. Atchoota deva royel was Rajah of Vijianugger of the Narsimha dynasty, next after Krishna deva. A.D. 1530–1542. His reign remarkable for grants to Bramins and temples. Conquered down to Tinnevelly, took away one of the Pandyan ruler's daughters and fixed a pillar of victory on the banks of the Tamrapurny. Fort of Kurnool built in his time. See Vol. I (153). Atchoota vijayaraghavan was the last of the Naick dynasty of Tanjore. Built forts at Arantaungy and Puttoocottah, Tripatore, and the Rajagopaulsawmy pagoda at Munnargoody. His refusal to give his daughter in marriage to the rajah of Madura, led to a war. Atchootan fought and was killed. Had previously made preparation for burning his women's apartments, which was done. Scene was the now unoccupied tower at the south-west corner of the Tanjore palace. See Vol. I (121); and II, 126.——Avibhactam (अविभक्त - avibhakta, San.). From (vibhaj, san. to divide). Undivided. Avibhacta cootoombam is the well known Indian undivided family. Roman law, and modern European law following it, look upon co-ownership as an exceptional and momentary condition of the rights of property. But here this order of ideas is reversed, and it may be said that separate proprietorship is always on its way to become proprietorship in common. As soon as a son is born, he acquires a vested interest in his father's substance, and on attaining years of discretion he is in certain contingencies permitted by the letter of the law to call for a partition of the family estate. As a fact however a division rarely takes place even at the death of the father, and the property constantly remains undivided for several generations though every member of every generation has legal right to an undivided share on it. The domain thus held in common is sometimes administered by an elected manager, but more generally it is managed by the eldest agnate, that is to say by the eldest representative of the eldest line of the stock. Such an assemblage of joint proprietors, a body of kindred holding a domain in common, is the simplest form of a village community in this country. There is no such thing as succession, properly so called, in an undivided family. The whole body of such a family, consisting of males and females, constitutes a sort of corporation; some of the members of which are coparceners, that is to say persons who on partition would be entitled to demand a share, while others are only entitled to maintenance. In Malabar and Canara, where partition is not allowed, the idea of heirship would never present itself to the mind of any member of the family. Each person is entitled to reside and be maintained in the family house, and to enjoy that amount of affluence and consideration which arises from his belonging to a family possessed of greater or less wealth. As he dies out his claims cease, and as others are born their claims arise. But the claims of each spring from the fact of their entrance into the family, not from their taking the place of any particular individual. Deaths may enlarge the beneficial interest of the survivors, by diminishing the number who have a claim upon the common fund, just as births may diminish their interests by increasing the number of claimants. But although the fact that one is the child of another, introduces the former into the family, it does not give him any definite share of the property, for the latter himself has none. Nor upon the death of the parent does the child succeed to anything, for the parent has left nothing behind to succeed to. Elsewhere also the position of an undivided family is the same, except that within certain limits each male member has a right to claim a partition if he likes. What happens when the family is broken up, can be seen under the head of Bhaugam or Partition. The detailed management of an undivided family is best illustrated again by what happens in the Malabar district. The senior male member in a Malabar family is by law the Carnaven, that is to say the natural guardian of every member within the family. He alone can sue and be sued as the representative of the family. In the absence of fraud or collusion, a decree against the Carnaven as such is binding upon the other members of the family, although they are not parties to the suit. The Carnaven for the time being has an almost absolute control over the distribution of the family income and the family expenditure. The Carnaven may delegate his powers of management, but he cannot, without the assent of those to whom the obligations are owing, that is to say the members of the family generally, assign his rights and privileges so as to be unable to resume them. His powers of management may however be limited by contract. The rights of the junior members of the Malabar family are the right of the males to succeed to the headship by seniority, and the right of the males and females to be supported in the family house. A separate maintenance will not be allotted to a junior member who voluntarily and without lawful excuse separates himself or herself from the family. They cannot call for an account, except as incident to a prayer for the removal of the manager for misconduct, nor claim any specific share of the income, nor even require that their maintenance or the fair outlay should be in proportion to the income. An absolute discretion in this respect is vested in the manager. Their position is analogous to what was the position of the members of a Roman family under the Patria potestas. The Carnaven is as much the guardian and representative for all purposes of property, of every member within the tarwaud, as the Roman father or grandfather. In South canara the custom is still more archaic, and there the senior female is the manager. Compare the headings Aliya santauna and Maroomakkatoyem, which explain the law of inheritance on the West coast. Certain reigning families in Malabar also preserve the custom of female management. The remarks just made apply for the most part to the headship of any joint Hindoo family. The law under which a Hindoo inherits his claims in the joint family can be seen under the two headings just named, and under that of Dauyam or inheritance.——(3) Sanscrit long is intensive particle.——Achandraurcam (ஆசந்திரார்க்கம் - ásandirárkkam, Tam.). From (chandra, san. moon + arka, san. sun). As long as the sun and moon endure.——Ahy (अहि - ahi, San.). From (han, san. destroy). Greek ἔχιδνα. Serpent.——Amooctam (आमुक्त - ámukta, San.). From (much, san. to set free). Liberated. Amoocta maulyada, from (mályа, san. garland), otherwise Vishnoo chitteeyam, meaning story of Vishnoochittan or periyalwar, the Vishnoo devotee, is a poem by Alasauny peddanna, to show southern progress of Veishnava system. A story in this resembles Arabian nights [alaf leila]. A raucshasan having caught a dausy, purposed to kill and eat her. To this the dausy made up her mind; but begged permission first to relate some stories. She then narrated the Hindoo account of the origin of the world, and the whole of the Hindoo mythology. At last the raucshasan renounced his purpose [periyalwar]. ——Anandam (आनन्द - ánanda, San.). From (nand, san. to gladden). Joy. The supreme spirit. Shiva; Hindoo 2nd or pers. name. Common among Madhwas [peyar]. Ananda rauz was Rajah of the Northern circars and 5th ancestor of the present Maharajah of Vizianagram. Ally of English, whom he assisted at battle of Condore against French in 1758. See Vol. I, 54. ——Aradhyan (आराध्य - áródhya, San.). From (rádh, san. to propitiate); fit to be propitiated. Sectarian title of Jangam or Lingayet bramins. They do not intermarry with any other classes of Bramins in the province to which they belong. They nevertheless act as gooroos or family instructors of the higher classes of natives. They adhere to caste; and though they believe in the unity of the deity as Mahadevan, symbolized by the lingam, they observe the Braminical initiation, and worship the sun by the repetition of the gayatry. By the Lingayets themselves they are considered only half converts to their system. Number in Presidency about 8,000.——Arohanam (आरोहण - áróhana, San.). From (ruh, san. to rise). Hoisting the flag when a festival begins [avarohanam]. In music the gradual raising of the pitch.——Ayoodham (आयुध - áyudha, San.). From (yudh, san. to attack). Weapon, tool. Ayoodhacutty is the Nayar's national weapon; connected in tradition with Parshooraman's battle-axe.——Ayoodha peojay (आयुधपूजा - áyudhapújá, San.). From (áyudha, san. weapon + pújá, san. worship). Lunar festival [pundigay, 6d]. The 9th day of the waxing moon of the 7th lunar month Aushweejam [mausam] between Sep. 23 and Oct. 24. The last day of Dusserah. On this day the Navarautry feast ends, and the people make offerings and supplications to the tools and implements which they use in the exercise of their various professions. The laborer brings his plough, hoe, or other instruments used in his work. These he piles together and offers a sacrifice, consisting of incense, flowers, fruits, rice, &c., after which he prostrates himself before them at full length; then returns them to their places. The mason offers the same adoration and sacrifice to his trowel, rule, &c. The carpenter does the same with the hatchet, adze, and plane. The barber, with his razors. The writing master makes an offering to the iron pencil or style with which he writes. In the same way the tailor to his needles, the weaver to his loom, and the butcher to his cleaver. The women bring together their baskets, their rice mill, the wooden cylinder with which they bruise the rice, and other household implements. The festival is concluded by erecting a roughly formed statue composed of flour paste. This represents a shacty or female divinity. Being placed under a canopy, it is carried about through the streets and receives the homage of the inhabitants. The Ayoodha poojay is a feast so sacred that if a Hindoo is attacked on the day of its celebration, he will not take arms to defend himself. It is related that the general of the Soobah of the Deccan, who besieged Jinjee, chose this day for the assault, being persuaded the besieged would not defend themselves, and that he actually entered the place without meeting with the least resistance.

Especially intercalary in astronomy, and in daily almanac prescribed by Bramins. See description of almanac at Vol. I, 611. Twelve lunations form a lunar year of about 354 solar days; so that the lunar falls behind the solar year of 365 solar days more than 11 solar days every lunar year. Hence intercalary months about every third year [mausam]. So often as the sun remains in the same sign of the zodiac during two Amavausyays [pundigay] or days of the moon's change, the month to which the last Amavausyay belongs is named twice over; it is first considered Adhicam or intercalary, and after being completed is reckoned over again, under its proper name. Distinguish from Abhijit or intercalated partial Nacshatram, used mainly in astrology. Adhicam is also prefixed to the name of a lunar day or tithy, to show that it is repeated on two consecutive days in the calendar [jyotisham]. Adhica vauram is a division of the crop in which a larger share is assigned to Bramins or other privileged persons.——Adhicauram (अधिकार - adhikára, San.). From (kri, san. to do). Sanscrit name (yádavagiri), means Krishna of the Yaudava race + hill.——(1) Talook, Bellary district. Tahsildar's pay Rupees 200. Area 839 square miles; population 160,795; language Tel. and Can. N.E. talook of district. Bounded on the north by Toongabudra river, south by Aulore talook, east by Putticondah talook of Kurnool district, west by Toongabudra and Hagary rivers. The country is flat, though here and there are detached masses of rock. The country between Adony and Yemmiganore is also hilly. The highest hill in the talook is the Adony rock or rather cluster of rocks on which the fort is built. There are smaller hills at Cotecull, &c., but all are of volcanic origin and devoid of foliage. To the north of the town of Adony, the land gradually slopes away to the basin of the Toongabudra. The soil is chiefly red, though near Cosgy and in the south of the talook the black soil is abundant. For the non-agricultural classes weaving is the chief occupation. The Adony fabrics are thought highly of, and there is a demand for them even in the markets of other districts. Cotton carpets are made and sent to Bellary. Silk is obtained from Collegaul in the Coimbatore district and from South mysore; and silk and cotton cloths are exported in large quantities to Dharwar and the Hyderabad country. There is no great trade in grain, but a large trade in cotton and several steam presses. The Toongabudra channel is taken off from the Toongabudra river by the anicut at Toombiganore. The two most important tanks are at Chinna toombalam and Haulhervy. There are smaller ones at Adony, Chirtahully, and Isvy. Best camping grounds:—Canacaveed, Chinnatoombalam, Cosgy, Cowtaul, Halvy, Hatsahully, Maudavaram, Rampooram and Yemmiganore. Places of archæological interest:—Adony, Alsandigootty, Badinehully, Basaracode, Basarvully, Beichigherry, Cadabore, Cadimetla, Canacaveed, Capaty, Caumavaram, Chinnatoombalam, Chyaugy, Coopgal, Coorvutty, Cosgy, Cottalchinta, Cowtaul, Dayyamdinney, Goorzaula, Gungavaram, Halvy, Hatsahully, Haulhervy, Hissaurmoorvany, Manchaula, Nandavaram, Nettecull, Nyaulacosgy, Parvatipooram, Peddacadabore, Peddatoombalam, Peekalbetta, Rampooram, Sultanpore, Tangardona, Vattoomoorvany, Yenoogabaula. Trig. station in lat. 15° 38′ 52·79″; long. 77° 19′ 14·14″; height 2,000 feet; from Adony town N. 1½ miles; from Bellary N.E. 43 miles. The largest town but one in the district near the north-western frontier towards the territory of the Nizam. The fort of Adony, now in ruins, stands upon five rocky granite hills to the north-west of the town, two of the peaks being 800 feet high. Half way up is a fine tank of drinking water. Formerly the fort played a conspicuous part in the intestine wars of the Deccan. It secured the passage of the Toongabudra and its possession was therefore essential to an army, which, invading the Carnatic from the Deccan, wished to keep its retreat secure. Being fortified with eleven ramparts, one within another, it was considered impregnable. Traditionally founded in 1200 B.C. by Chunder sen in the reign of Bheemasainan of Beedar. It was taken by Krishna deva royer of Vijianugger early in the sixteenth century. Ramrauz, his successor, received it as a dowry with his wife, and appointed his brother Caunoin rajah as governor. On the fall of the Vijianugger dynasty in 1565, it passed to the Mahomedan kings of the Adil shahy dynasty of Beejapore and Golcondah. They built the lower forts and the outer walls. The revenue of the district amounted then to 6 lakhs and 75,900 pagodas, and the military establishment consisted of 4,000 horse and 8,000 foot. Ferishta refers to it as "situate on the summit of a high hill "and containing many lakes and fountains of clear and sweet "water, with princely structures." In 1690 it was taken after a determined resistance by the generals of Aurungzeeb and included in the soobah of Beejapore. As the central authority of Delhi declined, Beejapore was merged in the territories of the Nizam, and the fortress and province of Adony became a family dependency of a younger branch of the house. In 1748 held by Moozuffer jung, and, on his death, in 1752, it descended, through the influence of M. Bussy, to his son. In 1757 it passed to Basaulut jung, the brother of the Soobahdar of the Deccan, who, making it his capital, attempted to establish an independent principality. Hyder ally twice attacked the fortress without success, and though in 1778 he defeated the Mahrattas under its walls, and in the following year laid waste the country round, it did not surrender. In 1782 Basaulut jung died, and Hyder ally soon afterwards. In 1786 Tippoo, by a siege of a month, took the fort and razed its battlements. After the peace, Adony was restored to the Nizam, and in 1799 was ceded to the English. Cloths of cotton and silk, the latter made from the Collegaul cocoons, and carpets, constitute its chief manufactures, and occupy more than a third of the total adult male population. Connected by rail with Madras and Bellary since 1870. Roads run to Gooty and Siroogooppa, while numerous country tracks converging on Adony act as feeders to the railway. Cholera used at one time to be frequently epidemic here, but, owing to recent municipal reforms in street-widening, cleansing, and sanitation, the health of the town has of late improved greatly. The tomb of Malik rahman khan, the first Mussalman governor, on the Taulibanda hill, is still an object of veneration. The Jumma musjid, built by his son, is the best specimen of Mahomedan architecture in this part of the country. The large square well close to the mosque was built by Vencannah punt, Diwaun to the former [charitram].

ADRAK (ادرک - adrak, Hind.). From (árdraka, san. ginger). Same as Ginger.

ADRY (अद्रि - adri, San.). From (ad, san. to protect). Mountain. Cf. Sheshaudry.——Adricam (अद्रिक - adrika, San.). Upper or mountain Keralam [abdhicam].

ADUL OIL (ஆதளையெண்ணெய் - áthalaiyenney, Tam.). Same as Rat aumanac [q.v.].

ADY (ಅಡಿ - adi, Can.; അടി - ati, Mal.; அடி - adi, Tam.). From (adu, tam. to approach); near the ground. Foot [adee], bottom, source, beginning, vicinity, &c. Suffix in place names; as Coilady, meaning temple + vicinity. A title among lower classes. Originally a slave. Fifteen classes of slaves are recognized by ancient Hindoo law:—Anaucaulabhritan, taken as a slave in a time of famine; Auhitan, taken as a pledge; Autmavikrayee, one who sells himself; Bhactadausan, one who is a slave for his food; Creetan, one purchased; Critan, one who makes himself a slave for a definite term; Dauyaudoopaugatan, inherited; Grihajautan, one born in the house of the owner by a female slave; Labdan, one acquired, as by gift; Panejitan, won in a wager; Pravrajyauvasitan, apostate, one who having entered religious order, forsakes it and thereby becomes a slave of the rajah; Rinadausan, one becoming a slave in payment of a debt; Tavauham, one who voluntarily makes himself a slave, saying, I am thine; Varavahritan, one who becomes a slave by marrying a female slave; Yooddhaprauptan, acquired in war.——Adicherry (அடிச்சேரி - adiççéri, Tam.). From (shéri, tam. village). Suburb.——Adikole அடிக்கோல் - adikkól, Tam.). From (kól, tam. rod). Measuring rod.——Adima (അടിമ - atima, Mal.). Bondage, slavery. Remains in Malabar as a kind of feudal dependency. Also the name of a land-grant. Most persons there under the rank of Nayar acknowledge a dependence upon some Tumbiraun or superior, being by that means Adiyauns. Persons of this description were not formerly allowed to possess land in Jenm right; and therefore, when a Jenmy made over land to a person in the condition of an Adiyaun, it went by the special name of Adima grant. This grant is almost the same at present day as the inam or maunyam of other districts. In it the land is made over in perpetuity to the grantee, either unconditionally as a mark of favor, or on condition of certain services being performed. But in either case a nominal fee of about two fanams a year is payable to the landlord to show that he still retains the proprietary title. Land bestowed as a mark of favor can never be resumed; but where it is granted as remuneration for certain services to be performed, like service inam, the non-performance of such services involving the necessity of having them discharged by others will give the landlord power to recover the land. The non-payment of the annual fee will form no ground for ousting the grantee, but it will be recoverable by action. The land will also revert if there are no heirs. Adima has been granted to Cheroomar and other low caste people to enable them to bury or burn their dead in spots where the latter were not liable to be disturbed. It has been largely granted in favor of village artisans, washermen, and others, who in return for the bulk of the rent of the land were bound to perform certain services. The hereditary property of native princes cannot be conferred on this tenure, the ruling prince having only the right of enjoyment during life, without power to alienate. For inam lands to higher castes, see Anoobhavam, Santaty bramhasom. Compare Coodima for ordinary tenancy. Also Chungautam, which however only applies to superior castes. For a succinct view of Malabar tenures, see Vol. II, 104, 105.——Adimaday (அடிமடை - adimadai, Tam.). From (madai, tam. channel). Head of a water channel.——Aditchaul (அடிச்சால் - adiççál, Tam.). From (shál, tam. furrow). The first furrow in ploughing.——Adivauram (அடிவாரம் - adivá-ram, Tam.). From (váram tam. slope). Foot of a hill.——

Adiyaul (அடியாள் - adiyál, Tam.). Means foot + fem. pers. termination. Female Pariah name. Masc. form adiyaun.——Adiyaun (അടിയാൻ - atiyán, Mal.). Literally slave. In Northern division of Malabar, term applies generally to Cheroomar, who were formerly real slaves. In South malabar it means a person, especially Teeyan, who without holding any land owns a dependence on some Tumbiraun or superior. This Tumbiraun being bound to protect the Adiyaun and redress his wrongs. The Teeyan acknowledging his dependent state by yearly presents, and being ready with personal services on the occasion of any private quarrel by his patron. This kind of dependency gives the patron no right of disposal of the person of his dependent as a slave, nor does it acquit the dependent individual of a superior obligation to the rajah or his representatives, the Deshavauly and Naudvauly, upon a public emergency. Individuals are often Adiyauns to the temple, which, by means of its representatives the Ooraular, is bound to protect them. Adiyaun also means a holder on Adima tenure. Also an Ambalavausy caste in Travancore [antaraulam].——Adiyody (അടിയോടി - atiyóti, Mal.). Means foot runner. Hindoo 3rd or caste name [peyar], especially among Nayars of Cadatnaud in North malabar.

ADYAR (அடையாறு - adaiyáru, Tam.). From (adai, tam. to silt up + áru, tam. river).—"a" River in Chingleput and Madras districts. Rises under Chembrambaukam tank, the surplus waters of which flow into it. After forming the southern boundary, it enters Madras district on the south-west, and flowing through it for 3 miles empties itself into the sea. On its banks are some of the largest and handsomest private residences of the city. The Buckingham canal crosses it at the south-western end of Madras district, with locks on either side of the river. Alwarpett and Mylapore are on the north bank. Its southern bank is the limit of Chingleput district. The river has no commercial value, but many natives in the neighbourhood make a living by fishing. It is crossed by three important bridges; one near the Mount, a second the Marmalong at Sydapett, and a third very long one near the sea called Elphinstone bridge erected in 1842.—"b" Zemindarry, Village; Chingleput dist., Sydapett tal.; pop. 1,830; acres 1,426; lat. of village 13° 01'; long. 80° 18'; from Sydapett E.S.E. 1¾ miles; from the sea W. 2½ miles. Includes Guindy and the Little mount. Peshcush Rs. 98.

AFTAUB (آفتاب - áftáb, Hind.). Sun.——Aftaubgeer (آفتاب گیر - áftábgír, Hind.). From (gír, pers. catcher). A parasol.——Aftauby (آفتابی - áftábí, Hind.). Acbar's gold coin, value Rs. 12 [naunyam, 2e].

AFZAL (افضل - afzal, Hind.). From (fadala, ar. to exceed). Excellent. Mahomedan slave-alam. Also part of lacab [ism].——Afzal ood dowla (افضل الدولہ - afzaluddaulah, Hind.). From (daulah, ar. empire). Eighth Nizam of Deccan and father of the present ruler. See Vol. I, 9.

AGAM (അകം - akam, Mal.; அகம் - agam, Tam.). Inside; mind; dwelling place; low land; grain. Prefix in place names, as Agattettara, meaning inside + village. Suffix in place names as Vaudikagam, meaning enclosure + inside.——Agambadiyaur (அகம்படியார் - agambadiyár, obl.; அகம்படியான் - agambadiyán, pers. sing.; அகம்படியார் - agambadiyár, pers. pl., Tam.). Corr. of Agamoodeiyaur. Caste-title. One of the principal elements in the agricultural population of the Marava country. These people are nearly connected with the Maravar by descent, and they also resemble them closely in appearance, habits and customs. The chiefs of the Maravar are accustomed to marry Agambadiyaur women; and of the children born of such marriages, the males must marry Agambadiyaur females and belong to their wives' caste, whilst the females must marry Maravar and belong to their husbands' caste. The honorific title of an Agambadiyaun is Sherveicauran, or captain of a band. The Agambadiyaur are slightly less numerous than the Maravar; as they are somewhat inferior to them in estimation. Men of this caste are employed in large numbers by zemindars and others as retainers and domestic servants. They are also employed in temples. But the great body of them are poor and humble ryots. Number about 300,000; most in Madura and Tanjore [jauty].——Agamodeiyaun (அகமுடையான் - agamudaiyán, Tam.). From (udai, tam. owning). A land-holder. Among Tam. Bramins, respectful way to speak to a woman of her husband.——Agapodwaul (അകപ്പൊതുവാൾ - akappotuvál, obl.; അകപ്പൊതുവാൾ - akappotuvál, pers. sing.; അകപ്പൊതുവാന്മാർ - akappotuvánmár, pers. pl., Mal.). From (potuvál, mal. the caste). Caste-title. Temple servants in Malabar [jauty, podwaul].——Agaporool (அகப்பொருள் - agapporul, Tam.). From (porul, tam. subject matter). A treatise on the composition of amatory poems by Naurcavirajan, Jeina poet.——Agappay (அகப்பை - agappai, Tam.). A ladle of stick and half cocoanut shell. There is a Tamul proverb:—கண்ணாற் கண்டதுபொய் அகப்பைக்குறி மெய்—"that which one has seen is false, the sign of agappay is true." The mark of the agappay on the grain-heap is taken as better evidence than what an eye-witness saw. Derisive of justice.——Agattumaur (അകത്തമ്മമാർ - akattammamár, Mal.). From (amma, mal. mother). Honorific form. A Braminy in Malabar [antarjanam]. Almost gosha. When compelled to travel, preceded by a Nayar woman who cries out to warn off male passengers [jauty, maryauday].——Agavilay (அகவிலை - agavilai, Tam.). From (vila, tam. price). The market price of grain.

AGAR AGAR (دریاکی پاچی - daryákípáchí, Dec.; اگرا گر - agaragar, Malay; సముద్రపుపాచి - samudrapupáchi, Tel.; கடற்பாசி - kadarbási, Tam.). Title from malay meaning sea weed. Other vern. means sea + moss. Malay also (sajarkarang), meaning sea-weed. Title otherwise Ceylon moss, Edible sea-weed, Jaffna moss. Giving Lichen starch. Botanically the Gracilaria genus, algæ [vricsham, 163]. Rose-spored; distinguished by its cylindrical compressed or flat fronds. Alga zeylanica, Fucus amylaceus of chemists. The species best known to the natives is lichenoides or ceylon moss [q.v.]; grows on ceylon coast; a light purple or greenish sea-weed; in medicinal properties resembles carrageen or rock-moss, being emollient; in decoction constitutes a food for invalids and children; gives to pharm. decoctum gracilaræ; officinal, like iceland moss. Other common species are:—confervoides, spinosa.

AGARAM (அகரம் - agaram, Tam.). From (agára, san. house). Latin ager. Agricultural village, subsequently Bramin village. Suffix in place names; as Periyagaram, meaning large + agricultural village. Sometimes used by mistake for Agrahauram.

AGARIC (غاریقون - gháríkún, Pers.; اغاریقون - aghárikún, Dec.; காரிக்கன் - kárikkún, Tam.). An old sarmatian word and thence borrowed by the arabs. Title otherwise Garikoon, Hard amadou, Hard tinder, Male agaric, Moxa, Punk, Spunk, Touch-wood. Botanically Polyporus ignarius, fries., fungi [vricsham, 161]. Alias Boletus ignarius. A fungus growing on trees; powder a purgative. Anthelminticus is similar. The Soft amadou, female agaric, german tinder, vegetable tinder, surgeon's agaric, is fomentarius.

AGAROO (अगरु - agaru, San.). From (a, san. negative prefix + guru, san. heavy); from light wood.—"a" Botanically the Excæcaria genus, euphorbiaceæ [vricsham, 118]. Mostly woody shrubs, but some form small trees; leaves usually alternate, and either entire or with margin toothed; flowers produced in catkins; fruit three-celled. The species best known to the natives are:—Agallocha [tiger's milk], Sebifera [china tallow]. Other S. indian species indigenous or naturalized are:—baccata, cochin chinensis, indica, insignis, oppositifolia.—"b" Also used for Aquilaria agallocha [eaglewood].—"c" Agaroo gandham or eaglewood scent is Pterocarpus santalinus [red sanders].

AGASA (ಅಗಸ - agasa, obl.; ಅಗಸ - agasa, pers. sing.; ಅಗಸರು - agasaru, pers. pl., Can.). Caste-title; personal forms, Agasa, sing., Agasar, pl. Canarese washermen. The corresponding terms are:—Hind. Dhoby, Tel. Saucala, Mal. Veloottaidan, Tam. Vunnaun. They worship Oobbey, or the steam issuing from the boiling water in which the clothes are steeped. Animals are sacrificed to Oobbey, in order to preserve the clothes from burning. They follow no profession but that of washing, and in all public processions are bound without reward to carry a torch before the images and the chief officer of Government. Both men and women wash. Their proper beasts of burthen are asses. They confine their marriages to a few families which they know to be of pure descent. They marry a number of wives if they can afford it. They may eat meat and drink spirituous liquors. They rank in Canara with the Punchaulas [jauty].

AGASTYAN (अगस्त्य - agastya, San.; அகத்தியன் - agattiyan, Tam.). From (aga, san. mountain + as, san. to throw). Thrower of mountains, meaning pioneer over mountainous regions.—"a" One of the Sapta rishies who escaped in a vessel at Menoo's flood, all represented in sky in Ursa major. Agastyan is on apex of an obtuse triangle, and over it is a small star for his wife Anoosya. Is a chiranjeevy. Also called Atry, his wife Atreyee [matam].—"b" The better known historic Agastyan is a Maha moony. Also called Tamizhmoony, the Tamul sage. Sometimes ascribed to times of Coolashekharan, first Pandyan king. Answers to the North india vyausan. This Agastyan is in the sky the star Canopus. Also called Coombha yony, as born from a water jar. He was a Thibetan, and not bramin. Said to have been short of stature [irattaiyaur]. He came south as a missionary, and the Scaundapooraunam has account of his humbling the pride of the Vindhyas, causing them to lie at his feet. Hence his name Vindhyacootan, evidently amplification of Agastyan. Farther south occurred the incident of Vautaupy and Ilvalan [kankar]. This is a well known legend of Odin in Scandinavia. Thence to promontory of Canya comaury or Cape comorin, where he took up his residence on Agastyamullay or Mount pothigay [q.v.], near the present Courtallam. The highest peak is inaccessible, and popular belief for a hundred miles around considers him to reside there still. This Agastyan diffused worship of Shiva amongst Tamuls; and taught them medicine, chemistry, astronomy, and other sciences. His treatise on Tamul grammar contained 12,000 sootrams, but excepting fragments preserved in quotations by Tolgauppyan is not now extant. However most Tamul works ascribed to Agastyan are not his. He had a wife Lopamoodray, and a son by her Sagaran. He had twelve disciples to whom he taught the arts and sciences :—Adancottay asiriyan, Avinyaut nayar, Caukkaypaudinyan who wrote a standard grammar, Cazhauramban, Nuttattan, Panambauran who wrote the preface to Tolgauppyam, Shempootcheyan, Tolgauppyan who wrote the celebrated grammar, Tooralingan, Vauman, Veiyaubigan, and Vyepiyan. The Agastya nyaunam, or Agastyan's wisdom, otherwise Agastya paudal or Agastyan's chant, written in Shen tamul high dialect, teaches a pantheistic monotheism leaning to Sheivism. His Mooppath or thirty stanzas are like the wisdom of Solomon. In one of these he refutes notions about Shiva, Vishnoo, and Bramha; states that penance, bathing, and self-immolation are unne cessary for a passage to Keilausam; and instructs men to worship Parabrahm. Example from a hymn ascribed to Agastyan :—பரமானந்தம் பரமசுகதம் கேவலஞானமூர்த்திம் த்வந் த்வாதீதம் ககனசதிரிசம் தத்வம் அசியாதிலக்ஷியம் ஏகம் நித்யம் விமலமசலம்சர்வதாசாக்ஷிபூதம் பாவா தீதம் திரிகுணரகிதம் சற்குரும் தம்நமாமி.—"I salute the "great teacher, the bestower of divine happiness and supreme "bliss; the image of perfect wisdom; who is removed from all "opposite states; who is represented by the sky; who is "denoted by truth and other names; the one, eternal, stainless, "stable, and omniscient, the incomprehensible, who is without "the 3 goonams of satwam, rajas, and tamas."——Agasteeshwaram (അഗസ്തീശ്വരം - agastíshvaram, Mal.). From (íshvara, san. lord).—"a" Talook; Travancore state, Pudmanaubhapooram division; area 97 square miles; pop. 78,979. Sub-divided into six Pidaugas and contains 475 caras or villages. Bounded N. by Tovaula talook, E. by Tinnevelly district, S. by Indian ocean, W. by Yerraneel talook. Greatest length from N. to S. is 12 miles and greatest breadth from E. to W. is 10 miles. Except the Maroothamala, there are no hills. Soil generally loose, but sandy near coast. Good for paddy cultivation, and growing mangoes. Most people are ryots, but near Cottaur are traders. In Cottaur are silk-weavers, Shauliyas and Mahomedans, who make laced muslin cloths or country coarse cloths. Many Shaunaur. Palmyra jaggery exported through Colachel. Sources of water-supply are Palayaur, Poottanaur and Anantanaur. Anicuts across Palayaur. No water at all goes to sea. Tanks are Sooshindram, Porakye, Poottary and Tairoor.—"b" The village of same name is in lat. 8° 06′; long. 77° 33′; from Sooshindram S.E. 5¼ miles; from Trivandrum S.E. 46 miles; from the sea N. 1½ miles.

AGATTY (അകത്തി - akatti, Mal.). Means remote. Island; Malabar dist.; pop. 1,183; sq. mile 1⅛; lat. 10° 52′; long. 72° 28. One of the Laccadives, lying about 35 miles north-west of Cavarathy, most westerly of the Laccadive group. Lies north-east and south-west and has on its western side a fine lagoon. The coral shoal upon which it stands is between 6 and 7 miles in length and from 3½ to 4 miles in breadth. Besides the main island, the reef also encloses the small uninhabited island of Cauliputty, to south of Agatty proper and separated by a narrow and shallow channel. The main island is long and narrow, being nearly 5 miles in length, whilst its greatest breadth is under 1,000 yards. The southern portion consists of a strip, averaging for more than 2 miles of its length little over 100 yards in width. At about 5 miles north lie the uninhabited islands of Paraly, Tinnakara and Vangara, but these, though upon an extension of the Agatty coral shoal, are enclosed by a separate range of reefs and the channel between is deep. The island is divided into three cherries or sub-divisions, viz., Tekkancherry, Vadacancherry, and Yedacherry. The entire island is a Melacherry or low caste island. The people are exclusively Mahomedans. The language bears a closer resemblance to Tamul than that of the other northern islands. Fish is abundant. The soil is comparatively sterile. About two-thirds of the island are under cocoanut cultivation, the rest is waste; there are no large jungles. Lands claimed by Pundauram or circar are of small extent. Attempts have been made to form a tottam or artificial low land for cultivation of cereals, but the extent is trifling and the quality very poor. A plant called Ittlah grows in Bangara, from the root of which a sort of tapioca is obtained, used as diet for invalids. In June 1880, a British steamer, the Mahableshwar, was wrecked on the reefs of this group of islands.

If Arya siddhauntam elements were taken for this last, the mean lunation would be $\frac{1577917500}{53433336}$ or 29d 31g 50v 5p 40s, 21, &c.— "e" The following example shows use and application of the above tables. Wanted the Solar aharganam for the beginning of the solar year 4924 of the Caliyoog, or 4923 complete, A.D. 1822, according to the Arya siddhauntam.

Sanscrit name (anantagiri), meaning infinite + mountain ; either from the many hills about the village or from Vishnoo the infinite.—(1) Talook, Salem district. Tahsildar's pay Rupees 200. Area 841 square miles. Length from east to west 29 miles, from north to south 34 miles. Language Tamul. In the south-east portion of the district between N. lat. 11° 19′ and 11° 52′ and E. long. 78° 19′ and 78° 53′. Bounded north by Cullacoorchy talook of South arcot, and Ootancaray talook of Salem district; east by Cullacoorchy and Vriddhauchellam talooks, South arcot ; south by Perambalore talook, Trichinopoly ; and west by Salem and Namcull talooks. Hill bound on the north and south, and partially so on the west. On the north-west limit the Tennaunday mullay reaches eastward to the Cottapputty pass. East of this pass is a range which on the northern side takes the name of the Aryagownden naud and on the Ahtoor limits is termed the Chinna and Periya culroyens. The Collamullays enclose the talook to the south ; and, after a considerable drop towards the plain, the Putchamullays trend away to the south and east. The talook is divided by the Pytore mullay into two principal water-sheds, those of the Vasishtanuddy and Shwetanuddy. The soil alternates in stretches of red loam and black alluvium, its fertility being in many parts greatly reduced by the excessive quantity of lime contained. The higher hill ranges are syenite and gneiss, quartz occurring rarely. Talcose schist occurs in the north-east. Magnesian limestone and steatite are found. The magnetic iron beds are apparently inexhaustible. Trap dykes occur in many places, notably in the Pytore and Mullicaray hills and above Gungavully on a spur of the Putchamullays. South-east of Ahtoor in the Munjiny caradoo and Shevaroy hills may be seen long bands of a peculiar altered gneiss which, with trap dykes, form the backbone of the ridge. Auragalore is the only important weaving village. Strong country carts are made at Ahtoor, and iron is smelted there and at Condayampully, Mekkapilleiyore, Naugayamputty, Shendaraputty and Tammamputty. White stone pots are manufactured in Keeriputty, Mungalapooram and Naurakinar. Staple crops are varagoo on poonjah and paddy on nunjah lands. Other products are raggy, cholum, tinay, tovray, oolandoo, putchaypayar, shaumay, yelloo, avaray, cotton, sugar-cane, grain of all kinds, oilseeds, tobacco, chillies, coriander, saffron, mustard, ground-nut, vendayam, narypayar, tuttapayar, motchacottay, betel, cocoanuts, &c. Areca palms and palmyras abound along the river drainage lines. Exports are paddy, oil-seed, motchacottay, coriander, cotton, chillies, tobacco, indigo, betel-nut, saffron, jaggery, cadookye, capilapody, cocoanuts and tamarind. Garden produce is sent to South arcot from Varagore and villages north of Talavausal. The Trichinopoly markets are accessible from Tammamputty and from the south-east corner of the talook. Indigo is cultivated to some extent. Veeraganore exports plantains and East rajahpolliem cotton. Sugar is imported from Razipore and Salem, and salt from South arcot. Cloths are imported by Lubbays from Madras, and by others from Combaconam and other places. Cattle are scarce in comparison with other talooks of the district. Water is almost entirely raised by manual labour with picottahs. The water is said to be unwholesome for cattle. The anicuts on the Vasishtanuddy are :—Bailore chinna anicut, Bailore periya anicut, Cottavaudy, Calyaunagherry, Abhinavam, Yaittapore, Chinnasamoodram, Yerrasamoodram, Peddanaickenpolliem, Appasamoodram, Ahtoor, Ammapolliem, Cauttcottay, Deviya coorchy and Talavausal. The anicuts on the Shwetanuddy are :—Condayampully, Shendauraputty, Gungavully periya anicut, Gungavully chin ia anicut, Aneiyamputty, Poothore, Tittacherry, Veeraganore and Laddivaudy. Periya combay anicut, Mauvaur private anicut and Jangama samoodram agrahauram anicut are on the Periya combay, a tributary of the Shwetanuddy. On the Oonantaungal, another tributary of the Shwetanuddy are Oonantaungal, Moollcoorchy, and half a dozen other anicuts. The chief tanks are :—Yerrasamoodram near Peddanaickenpolliem, Chittairy near Auragalore, and Shendauraputty. A large tank called the Krishnapooram project is under construction. Camping grounds Ahtoor, Peddanaickenpollie n, Talavausal and Vaulapaudy. Zemindarry :—Sheccadiputty. Places of archæological interest :—Ahtoor, Alagaupooram, Auragalore, Bailore, Caliyamputty, Calpaganore, Cariya ramancoil, Cullanuttam, Moommoody, Munjany, Odiyattore, Periyairy, Ramanaickenpolliem, Tadavoor, Talavaputty, Tammamputty, Yetapoor. The leading places in the talook are the following :——Ahtoor (ஆற்றூர் - áttúr, Tam.). See below.——Auragalore (ஆறகளூர் - áragalúr, Tam.). On Vasishtanuddy, about three miles from foot of Periya calroyen. The eastern portion on south of river is Poothoopett, the western is Ahtoor proper. North of river is a large fort, the builder of which found an immense treasure of gold buried in seven iron pots, one of which is still in Vishnoo temple in fort. The fort is square, with batteries and bastions in the angles and sides. The highest point is the flagstaff battery in the centre of the south face. The glacis to the east is over-grown with trees. The south side is guarded by the river, which when in flood runs some 20 feet deep, and the other faces are protected by a ditch, which at the south-west angle is always full of water. The outer wall of the ditch is roughly, and the river bank strongly, revetted. The ramparts are of cut stone, well fitted without mortar. Inside are three large and one small bombproof chamber, the roofs of the larger magazines being accessible by hidden stairs. There are the remains of two houses, the larger of which was occupied by Company's officers. The lower part is in native, and the upper part in European, style. The smaller house was residence of Commanding officer. A large vaulted chamber, occasionally utilized as a Roman catholic chapel, formerly used as a cutcherry. On south face of ramparts is an old pleasure house, a roof on pillars with obtuse pointed arches. Near this is a water gate strongly defended, leading to river, and on west face is another leading into ditch. On south-west angle is another flagstaff battery. The fort gate is in centre of east face. The buildings inside fort, which contains temples of Shiva and Vishnoo and a shrine of Mooniyappan, the guardian of the fort, are called Cottay; those outside the fort and north of the river are Moollavaudy. Cart-building. Iron-smelting to a small extent. Much through traffic passes on the Cuddalore and Salem road. A spacious chuttram cost Rs. 25,000 by one Nutter sahib. Four indigo factories. London mission school.

Dec. from sanscrit. Can. from (hedda, can. large + mara, can. tree). Tel. similar. Tam. from (perumai, tam. largeness + maram, tam. tree). San. also (pisháchavriksha), meaning demon + tree. Can. also (doddamanimara), meaning great + bead + tree. Tel. also (peyyápa), meaning large + melia azadirachta, linn. Tam. also (peruppí), meaning large + sterculia fœtida, linn. Title otherwise Large bastard poon, Large neem, Large yaipy, Tree of heaven, Tree of the gods. Botanically the Ailanthus genus, simarubeæ [vricsham, 33]. Lofty trees, with large alternate leaves and small flowers in terminal or axillary panicles. The species best known to the natives are Coromandel, Japanese, and Malabar. Cf. Water ailanto, another genus.——Coromandel ailanto (ارنا - arná, Hind.). Title from habitat. Hind. from (aranya, san. forest). Title otherwise Arnah. Botanically Ailanthus excelsa, roxb., simarubeæ [vricsham, 33]. Large tree; bark of trunk rough and scaly, gray within; leaves abruptly pinnated, tomentose when young, afterwards glabrous; leaflets ten to fourteen pair, coarsely toothed at the base; petals five, almost glabrous in the inside; filaments glabrous, shorter than the anthers; calyx five-cleft; samaræ linear-oblong, three to five, one-seeded; panicles terminal; flowers fascicled, green. Resembling the ash in general appearance; bare of leaf for several months, too brittle to stand much wind; much planted, growing rapidly from large cuttings; much attacked by white ants. Gum resembles moringa gum and consists of large rounded tears of a deep vinous red. Decoction of stem and root bark is tonic; substituted for british cinchona bark, calumba and gentian. Gives a dye. Wood soft, white, not durable.——Japanese ailanto (جپان ارنا - japánarná, Hind.). Title otherwise False varnish tree, Japan varnish tree. Botanically Ailanthus glandulosa, desf., simarubeæ [vricsham, 33]. Introduced; allied to malabarica.——Malabar ailanto (अतिसारहिता - atisárahitá, San.; गुग्गुलधूपवृक्ष - gugguladhúpavriksha, Mahr.; ಮಡ್ಡಿಧೂಪದಮರ - maddidhúpadamara, Can.; പൊന്നല്യം - ponnalyam, Mal.; කුඹලු - kumbalu, Singh.; மட்டிப்பால்மரம் - mattippálmaram, Tam.). Singh. also (valbilin), meaning wild averrhoa bilimbi, linn. Title otherwise Walbiling, Wild blimbing [q. v.]. Giving Mutty paul. Botanically Ailanthus malabarica, dec., simarubeæ [vricsham, 33]. Alias Ailanthus pangelion. Pangelion, from malayalam. Tree, leaves abruptly pinnated; leaflets quite entire, ovate-lanceolate, unequal-sided, oblique at the base; panicles large, terminal; peduncles and calyx pubescent; petal glabrous, obovate, much longer than the calyx; samaræ oval, oblong, obtuse at both ends; flowers small, white; dense moist forests of western ghauts, to 3,000 feet, from s. canara to cape comorin; commonly painted, very ornamental; bark rough and very thick. Fragrant resinous balsam known as muttipaul exudes from trunk; this as commonly met is dark brown or grey plastic, opaque, agreeable in smell; contains much impurity; is very soft, having consistence of thick treacle, doubtless the reason why it is always mixed with fragments of earth which makes it more easy to handle; alcohol readily dissolves it; when burnt it gives out a fragrance. Muttipaul reduced to powder mixed with milk and strained is medicinally stimulant, astringent and expectorant; much given in dysentery; substituted for british gummi rubrum and benzoinum. Bark in decoction and tincture is tonic and stomachic; used in dyspeptic complaints; substituted for british calumba, quassia, and gummi rubrum. Both in pharm. non-officinal. Muttipaul is burnt in temples. Wood white, very soft and spongy.——Water ailanto (നീർപ്പൊന്നല്യം - nírpponnalyam, Mal.). From (nír, mal. water + ponnalyam, mal. ailanthus malabarica, dec.). Botanically the Dolichandrone genus, bignoniaceæ [vricsham, 99]. Trees; flowers white; fruit, a flat capsule opening at margin. The species best known to the natives are:—arcuata [night paulay], crispa [flowering pauthiry], falcata [wody], rheedii [long-leaved wody].

AIR (ఏరు - éru, Tel.). River. Suffix in river names; as Pennair, meaning great + river. Also in place names; as Pulmanair, meaning Pullavan's tank. A thin pronunciation of Tamul aur [q.v.]; not the same as airy [q.v.], a sheet of water.

AIRY (ಏರಿ - éri, Can.; ഏരി - éri, Mal.; ஏரி - éri, Tam.). Tank. A large tank or natural reservoir for irrigation outside a principal village. Differ from Coolams which are generally artificial tanks, stone-built or otherwise, found in every village and town. ALAVEE (علوی - alaví, Hind.). From (alí, ar. the caliph). Syeds descended from Ally by his other wives, but not by Fatimah daughter of the prophet.

ALBACA (اجاص - ijjás, Ar.; آلو - álú, Pers.; آلوبخارا - álúbukhárá, Hind. and Dec.; ఆల్పొగడ - álpogadá, Tel.; ஆல்பொகடா - álbogadá, Tam.). Title from hindostany. Hind. from (álú, pers. plum, prunus + bukhárah, pers. bokhara town). Tel. and tam. from hindostany. Title otherwise Bokhara plum, Bollas, Bullas, Cabool prune, Wild damson. Botanically Prunus [auloo] communis, huds., var. insititia, rosaceæ [vricsham, 49]. Alias Prunus aloocha, bokhariensis. The prunes brought dried from cabool; sub-acid, cold and moist; digestive and aperient. Root astringent and gum may be used for gum arabic. For amygdalus or almond see Baudam; for armeniaca or apricot see Mishmish.

ALCARA (هرکارہ - harkárah, Hind.). From (har, pers. every + kár, pers. business). French spelling for harcarra.

ALDEA (الضيع - addai, Ar.). Portuguese from Arabic. A hamlet. Fr. aldée is still used.

ALEEF (الف - alif, Hind.). First letter of Persian and Arabic alphabets.

ALEEM (علیم - alím, Hind.). From (ilm, ar. knowledge). Omniscient. Epithet of God, used as alam, or with Abd [ism]. Fem. is Aleema.——Abd ool aleem (عبدالعلیم - abdulalim, Hind.). Slave of the omniscient.——Aleem khan (علیم خان - alímkhán, Hind.). Alam + alaumat.

ALEEYAT (علیت - alíyat, Hind.). From (ally, ar. caliph + female suffix). Female slave of Ally. Equivalent to Abd, and similarly used.

ALHAMD (الحمد - alhamd, Hind.). Praise.——Alhamd oolillah (الحمدالله - alhamdulilláh, Hind.). From (lilláh, ar. to god). Praise be to god. Mahomedan ejaculation of thanksgiving.

ALIYA SANTAUNA (ಅಳಿಯಸಂತಾನ - aliyasantána, Can.). From (aliya, can. nephew + santána, san. succession). The law of inheritance by the female line among the Bunts, Nayars, &c., of Canara, being the equivalent of Maroomakkatoyem in Malabar further south [maroomakkatoyem]. The principle that the inheritance vests in the females in preference to the males is more consistently carried out in Canara, where even the management of property vests ordinarily in females, and not as in Malabar in the males. The following is an abstract translation of the original set of rules which make up the law. The law prescribes fourteen canons for the guidance of the three classes of people other than Bramins; these canons going by the names Jauty, Neety, Mauna, Maryauday, Hoottoo, Cattoo, Hindey, Moondey, Hetchoo, Cummy, Baly, Banna, Aly, and Ooly. Added to these fourteen canons are fourteen cuttaleys or commandments. The following are the fourteen canons in alphabetical order.——Aly (ಅಳಿ - ali, Can.). Death.—"a" That the eldest female, the eldest male children of the senior and junior maternal aunts shall stand entitled to aly ooly or succession to property on death. The eldest female is also the Yejmaun or manager answering to the Carnaven in Malabar.—"b" That the children of the elder and younger sisters shall not enter into a division of property.—"c" That the remaining members shall act in union.—"d" That if misunderstandings arise between the sisters, the elder sister shall provide the younger with a house and household articles, retaining herself the management of the property and the right to Oorisiry or participation and liability in respect of all that is either good or bad.—"e" That only the surviving heir, enjoyer of aly ooly, shall be entitled to Puttah putty honors.—"f" That on the death of such heir, the next surviving male member of the family shall succeed to the Puttah.——Baly (ಬಳಿ - bali, Can.). Tribe. The Balies are sixteen in number, and they are enumerated.——Banna niroobaly (ಬಣ್ಣನಿರುಬಳಿ - bannanírubali, Can.). This refers to classes that have no places or marks of honor, but simply the color of a caste. They are three in number, viz.:—persons unfit to enter any of the higher classes; persons who have not established Balisauvirabramhas; persons who have no king for the country in which they live.——Cattoo (ಕಟ್ಟು - kattu, Can.). This precept contains the formal introduction of the Aliya santauna law, as shown in the following fixed rules:—"a" That the wife and children shall observe the Sootacam on the occasion of death, and shall participate in the effects of sin or virtue. Sootacam is impurity from child-birth, as Pautacam is impurity from death of relatives. They shall also share in the virtue accruing from gift and charity and in the fame or infamy arising from any deeds.—"b" That the Santaunam shall succeed to the property, and shall observe the Sootacam on the occasion of birth only, and not on that of death. Santaunam is literally offspring, and here applied to the successors of an Aliya santauna family or those who claim through them; in contradistinction to Cootoomba, applied to the wife and children.—"c" That no auspicious ceremony shall be celebrated through Bramins.—"d" That no Mahaulyam [pundigay, 6d] shall be performed for the deceased. This rule is not observed.—"e" That no Puncha gavyam [q.v.] shall be taken.—"f" That no Poonya homam [q.v.] shall be made with the use of the Darbhay on occasions of birth, as well as of death.—"g" That only the Nirmaulyam shall be taken on occasions of birth and of death in the names of those that brought forth the children in the former and in those of the death in the latter. Nirmaulyam is the remains of an offering presented to a deity, Shiva especially.—"h" That the Poojay and Abhishaica shaunty shall be performed besides the Samaraudhanay. Poojay is worship. Abhishaica shaunty is the anointing of the idol with milk, honey, sugar, ghee, curds, &c. Samaraudhanay is the feeding of Bramins on occasions of religious ceremonies.——Cummy (ಕಮ್ಮಿ - kammi, Can.). Inferiority. This rule contains the distinctions of respect which each caste observes towards the other.——Hetchoo (ಹೆಚ್ಚು - heççu, Can.). Superiority, similar.——Hindey (ಹಿಂದೆ - hinde, Can.). Behind [moondey].——Hoottoo (ಹುಟ್ಟು - huttu, Can.). This precept contains the abolition of the rival Makkala santauna law.——Jauty (ಜಾತಿ - játi, Can.). This precept enumerates the castes that are to follow the Aliya santauna law. They are:—Agasar, washermen; Andeycoragar, a hill-tribe; Carinyaurar, a class of pariahs; Coombaurar, potters; Cshowricar, barbers; Devadigar, menial servants who perform out-door services at temples; Haleypeiks, toddy-drawers, same as Billawar.; Harischetties, merchants corresponding to comaties above the ghauts; Holeyar, pariahs; Jeinas; Malaicoodies, a hill-tribe; Malavar, a class of laborers; Mausaudicar, a class of bunts who eat flesh; Moondaular, a class of pariah; Nayar; Parivaurs, an inferior class of bunts; Punchaular, artizans; Shauliyar, weavers; Tooloovar. It will be observed that all are Shoodras and Pariahs.——Maryauday (ಮರ್ಯಾದೆ - maryáde, Can.). This contains the honor to be enjoyed from generation to generation "in the order of four, eight and sixteen." Those enjoying the highest dignities are meant by the four and those next to them the eight, and the last sixteen. They are:—Arasooputtah, title of kings; Pagady, fixed periodical tributes; Putty, occasional tributes, such as nuzzers, &c., as entered in certain lists or putties.——Mauna (ಮಾನ - mána, Can.). This contains the dignities to be enjoyed "in the order of four, eight and sixteen." They are:—Arasoo, privileges attached to kings; Ballaula, privileges attached to chiefs who rank next to kings; Heggadey, privileges attached to those who rank equally with Ballaulas; Keerty, honorary distinctions; Mauey, respect due to the social position of certain families; Nauma, title; Pirapp, line of descent; Stala, respect due to the holders of certain lands or premises.——Moondey (ಮುಂದೆ - munde, Can.). Before [hindey]. This gives different degrees of superiority consisting in the Puttah and Puttauvaly honors held by 4, 8 and 16 houses respectively. Puttah is an inscribed plate fastened on the forehead. It is here used to signify the dignity enjoyed by a person. Puttauvaly is the plural of Puttah. The sixteen houses refer to the 16 Balies.——Neety (ನೀತಿ - níti, Can.). This is the rule enacted for the guidance of the Jauty. Each of the classes shall behave itself in respect of its superiority or inferiority, and also in such a manner as the manners and customs peculiar to each class may direct.——Ooly (ಉಳಿ - uli, Can.). This enunciates succession by heirship to property. It provides:—"a" That excepting the wedding gift given to a married girl, the property that may be given to her by the husband of his own accord, however trifling it may be, even with the consent of the family, shall be taken away by the members of the family. The family here is Santauna not Cootoomba.—"b" That one shall assign to his children in gift movable or immovable property of his own acquisition, but not ancestral property.—"c" That on failure of heirs a girl of the same Baly that may be fostered shall be considered an adopted child. Adoption by a female having male issue is invalid.—"d" That no male shall be adopted.—"e" That no right shall be sold on the plea of absence of heirs, nor conferred on the wife and children on the same plea. The right refers to estates.—"f" That if a family become extinct without adoption, the heads of the country in the order of 4, 8 and 16 shall choose a girl and boy of the same Baly to stand as representatives of such extinct family.—"g" That these representatives alone shall succeed as heirs, but not the wife and children [maryauday].

ALKHAULAK (الخالق - alkhálak, Hind.). Means measured and cut. Over-coat; double breasted dress, made with long sleeves, and to fit to the form as low as the hips with skirts reaching down to the calf of the leg, tied across the chest on the left side.

ALLAH (الله - alláh, Hind.). From (al, ar. the + iláh, ar. god). Means worthy of adoration. Name of God as opposed to his ninety-nine attributes, which connected together in a certain order form the rosary of the Mahomedans, ending with Allah as the hundredth.——(1) The following are the attributes. They are divided into glorious and terrible. All are used with Abd [q.v.] to make common Mahomedan lacabs [q.v.], now used often in the sense of simple alams [q.v.].——Adl (عدل - adl, Hind.). ALLEPPEY (ആലപ്പുഴ - álappuzha, Mal.). From (ála, mal. broad + puzha, mal. river). Greek Βάρις. Town, Port, Judge's head-quarters; Travancore state, Quilon division, Ambalapoya tal.; pop. 22,768; lat. 9° 30′; long. 76° 23′; from Ambalapoya N.N.W. 8 miles; from Bombay S.S.E. 692 miles; from Cauttore S. 5 miles; from Cochin S. 33 miles; from Cottayam W.S.W. 14 miles; from Nagarcoil N.W. 115 miles; from Paravore S. 46 miles; from Poracaud N. 10 miles; from Quilon N.N.W. 44 miles; from Trivandrum N.N.W. 80 miles. Chief sea-port town of Travancore, seat of Commercial agent to Travancore government. On coast midway between Cochin and Quilon. The town lies on narrow strip of sea-coast between backwater and sea, and has a canal running from the former through it till within a few yards of the sea. Two good roads run along the banks of the canal from east to west, and the bazaars, merchants' godowns and places of business are situated on them. It communicates southward with Quilon and Trivandrum, northwards with Cochin, by canals parallel to coast and backwaters. Excellent anchorage always available, for although there is no protecting headland, a mud bank of about 1¼ miles in length breaks the force of the roughest seas. This natural breakwater has shifted slightly within the last century. A similar deposit exists at Naracal. Light on the beach about one cable inland. Lat. 9° 30′ 0″; long. 76° 19′ 0″. White, revolving. 17 miles. Visible from all directions seaward. Masonry round white tower. To guide vessels to the smooth water anchorage during the south-west monsoon. Contains a very varied population, including even Arabs, Negroes, and Malays. Bartolomeo records that Alleppey was opened to foreign trade in 1762 and mentions the canal. In 1809 a detachment of European soldiers and Company's sepoys, who had halted here on their way up the coast, were massacred by the Nayars. Alleppey is the chief depôt of the Travancore government for the sale of forest produce, chiefly cardamoms. Is a place of considerable foreign trade. European merchants have settled here, and coir-matting and other industries are extensively carried on. Trade is chiefly in teak, cocoanuts, coir or cocoanut fibre, betel-nut, vegetable produce, coffee, ginger, fish, pepper, cardamoms, &c. The rajah has an establishment for building small craft.

Tam, from (kal, tam. stone + tázhai, tam. screw-pine, pandanus odoratissimus, linn.); from hard blades of leaves. San. also (kantala), meaning thorn plant; (kanyá), meaning maiden. Ar. also (sabbárá). Dec. also (kalbandá). Greek ἀλόη. Title otherwise Demon leaf, Maiden plant, Stone screw-pine. Botanically the Aloe genus, liliaceæ [vricsham, 136]. Succulent plants, of liliaceous habit; stem short; leaves fleshy; flowers arranged in erect spikes or clusters; fruit membranous, consisting of three cells, each containing a great number of seeds. Leaves of several species furnish a bitter malodorous resinous juice, which when inspissated forms the drug aloes. The commercial kind of aloes are:—"a" Socotrine, Turkey, or Extract of spiked, from aloe socotrina, lamb.—"b" Genuine hepatic, Bombay, or East indian, from the same.—"c" Barbadoes, from aloe vulgaris, lam.—"d" Cape and Caballine, from several species.—"e" Mocha, from the socotrine species, being the refuse of the market.—"f" Indian so called, not East indian, from various indian species, especially aloe indica, royle, and aloe litoralis, "g" Curacoa, from aloe vulgaris, lam. Socotrine aloes is reddish brown, its surface shining, structure transparent, fracture shelly, taste very bitter, the powder is of bright-yellow color. Genuine hepatic aloes, produce of the same, differs in being opaque and olive-colored. Barbadoes aloes is in common usage termed hepatic, it is exported in gourds, ranges in color from dark-brown or black to red or liver-color, fracture dull or glossy, odour disagreeable, and increased by breathing upon the surface, powder dull olive-yellow. Cape aloes is deep brown, shining, of greenish tint and resinous fracture, edges transparent and ruby-colored, powder greenish-yellow, odour strong. Caballine aloes is now no longer found in commerce. Common bazaar aloes is black, brittle, of semi-vitreous fracture. Aloes are obtained by making transverse incisions through the leaves, and allowing the juice to drop out; this is evaporated to dryness by a gentle heat. In small doses, aloes used as a stomachic tonic; in larger doses purgative, and indirectly emmenagogue; locally applied, dissolved in glycerine, as a stimulant application in skin diseases; although aperient, yet unlike other cathartics the effect is not increased if given in large doses beyond a certain point; both aloe indica, royle, and aloe litoralis, koen., are in the pharmacopœia of india; common bazaar aloes is too impure for medical use. In veterinary practice:—purgative 3 to 5 drachms; alterative 1 drachm with 2 drachms of gentian every morning, until the bowels are acted upon; 1 drachm of ginger powder to each bolus. Various species of Agave, especially agave americana, l., are popularly called aloe; these are plants of mexico; botanically genus agave differs from genus aloe; from a chemical point of view also there is no analogy between the two [american aloe, bastard aloe]. A fourcroya also is called aloe [foreign aloe]. Again the word Aloes or Lign aloes, in latin Lignum aloes, is used in ancient writings to designate a substance totally distinct from the modern aloes, namely the resinous wood of Aquilaria agallocha, roxb., thymelæaceæ [eagle-wood]. There is a Tamul proverb:—கற்றாழை நாற்றமும் பித்தளை விச்சமும் போகாது—"The ill odour of the aloe and the bad smell emitted from brass will not leave them." There is another:—கற்றாழை சிறுத்தாலும் ஆனை அடி வைக்காது—"Though the aloe be small, the elephant will not tread upon it"; on account of its spikes. The species of aloe best known to the natives are shown below; all give aloes. Two agaves and a fourcroya also, as above said, come under this title; these give no aloes.——American aloe (कालकण्टल - kálakantala, San.; راکس پتا - rákaspattá, Hind., Dec.; ಅನೇಕತ್ತಾಳೆ - ánekattále, Can.; ದಡ್ಡೊಳಿ - daddoli, Too.; రాకాశిమట్ట - rákáshimatta, Tel.; പനങ്കറ്റാഴ - panankattázha, Mal.; ஆனைக்கற்றாழை - ánaikkattázhai, Tam.). ALSEE (अतसी - atasí, San.; अळसी - alasí, Mahr.; كتان - kattán, Ar.; زغير - zaghír, Pers.; السى - alsí, Hind. and Dec.; ಅಗಸಿಗಿಡ - agasigida, Can.; అవిశి - avishi, Tel.; ଝୋଟୋ - jhottó, Oor.; ചെറുചണം - cheruchanam, Mal.; ஆளி - áli, Tam.). Title from hindostany. Hind. from sanscrit. Mal. from (cheru, mal. small + chanam, mal. indian flax, crotolaria juncea, linn.). Tam. from (ál, tam. to cultivate). San. also (umá), meaning weaving, as used in clothing. Hind. also (javas), from mahrattee; (musíná); (tisí), from sanscrit. Dec. also (ambárá). Can. also (alasigida); (atasigida); (háru). Tel. also (gógu); (madanagindzachettu), meaning pleasing + seed + plant; (nallaagisi), meaning black + alsee; (nallavishi), meaning black + alsee. Tam. also (aligi); (áliviraiççedi), meaning linseed plant; (shanal); (shirusanal), meaning small + crotolarea juncea, linn. Title otherwise Flax, Linseed plant, Small hemp. Botanically Linum usitatissimum, linn., lineæ [vricsham, 28]. Alias Linum arvense, mucronatum. Annual, erect, about 15 inches, glabrous slender stem; leaves alternate, lanceolate or linear, acute, entire; panicles corymbose; sepals ovate, acute or mucronate, with scarious or membranaceous margins; petals slightly crenated, three times larger than the calyx; stamens alternate with the petals, having their filaments united together near their basis; capsule roundish, pointed at the apex, five-celled, each cell divided into two partitions, containing a single seed; seeds oval, smooth, brown or white, mucilaginous outside, with oily and farinaceous kernels; flowers blue, bell-shaped. Tenacity of its cortical fibres places it at the head of textile plants; linen and cambric made from it. Has long been cultivated here for the seed and oil; there being no demand for flax till last few years, plant has after harvest usually been burnt, for if it stands it becomes poisonous for cattle; seldom covers whole fields; generally sown along side of fields bordering on roads and cattle-paths, as cattle will not eat it. The linseed-oil is obtained in two ways:—either cold drawn, when it is of a pale color; or by the application of heat at a temperature of not less than 200°, when it is of deeper yellow or brownish color, and is disagreeable in its odour. Linseed-meal is the oil-cake coarsely pulverised. Flax is prepared by steeping the plant, stripping off the bark, and beating so as to separate the fibres. Linseeds are medicinally demulcent, nutritive and emollient; much used in poultice which may be made either of the seed simply ground or of the pulverised cake; an infusion of the seeds called linseed tea is demulcent; linseed-oil is aperient, but seldom used as such, chief medicinal use in preparation of carron-oil, applied with cotton to burns and scalds, substituted for british olive oil; oil officinal in pharm.; the products are not much used by hindoos in medicine. Oil-cake given to cattle; unripe capsules eaten by natives; linseed-oil one of chief ingredients in oil varnishes and printer's ink; also used in soft soap; dried stalks of plant used as materials in building houses. Indian substitutes for flax are the following:—Ananas sativus, pine-apple fibre [ananas], susceptible of being split by carding and of being worked as flax; Calotropis gigantea, yercum fibre [yercum], employed in making cambrics, but the mode of picking it from the inner bark has always made it expensive, used for fishing lines, nets, bowstrings, gins for catching large game, and for the braminical cord worn over the right shoulder; Cryptostegia grandiflora, paulay fibre [paulay silk cotton], similar to yercum; Tylophora asthmatica, coorinjah fibre [indian ipecacuanha] containing strong white fibre. There are three forms of the linum plant, with white, red, or brown seeds; the white-seeded is best. No other species here.

ALTAMGHAH (التمغا - altamghá, Hind.). From (al, turk. red + tamghá, turk. a stamp). A royal grant under seal.

ALVANDAR (ஆளவந்தார் - álavandár, Tam.). From (ál, tam. to rule + vandán, tam. he who came). Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar]. A Tamul poet. Wrote Tamul poetical version of Sanscrit Nyauna vausishtam; the standard work on Vedantism in South india. Is in 2,055 stanzas. Example:— அத்தமியாதசோதியருக்கரையனவிலாதாய் மெத்தியபிணியிலாதாய் மேவரும்பிறப்பிலாதா யெத்தலங்களினுமென்றுமியாவுமாயாவுஞ்செய்த முத்தியுமாகியோங்குமுதற்பரம்பொருளொன்றுண்டு. "There is a supreme "being; he is the sun who shines with unreflected light with-"out setting, he is infinite, he is free from infirmity, he is not "subject to birth, he is everywhere and at all times, he is all "and the creator of all, he is the final beatitude itself."

ALWAR (ஆழ்வார் - ázhvár, Tam.). From (ázh, tam. to be profound). Title of the 12 ancient devotees of Vishnoo, and generally a Veishnava title. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar]. The Alwars were born in various places and lived in different times. The Veishnavas on their arrival in Southern india had to dispossess the Sheivas, and the contest frequently took the form of public disputation, recorded examples of which were at Villipoottore in the Pandyan kingdom, at Warriore in the Chola kingdom, and at Shreepermatore in Tondeimundalam. The Veishnavas also occupied themselves in translating portions of the Vedas into Tamul poetry, now known as the Tirmozhy, Dravida prabandham, or Naulauyira prabandham; and the Alwar were the chief of these authors. A kind of deification has been assigned to them by viewing them as incarnations, of Vishnoo's arms, ornaments, or attendants. See vol. I (76). The 12 were as follows.——Aundaul (गोदा - gódá, San. ஆண்டாள் - ándál, Tam.). San. means born of the earth; counterpart of Seetay who was born of the furrow. Tam. means she who ruled. The daughter of Periyalwar, as born out of his Toolsy garden in Shreevillipoottore. Otherwise Shoodicodoot nautchy. She was a poetess and composed two poems Tirpauvay and Tirmozhy consisting of 173 stanzas in praise of Vishnoo, which now form part of Naulauyira prabandham.——Bhootatt alwar (भूतयोगी - bhútayógí, San.; பூதத்தாழ்வார் - púthattázhvár, Tam.). From (bhúta, san. devotee). Born in Mauvellipore. Contemporary with Poygay alwar. Considered incarnation of the mace borne in one hand by Vishnoo. He composed the second Tirvantaudy of 100 stanzas of Naulauyira prabandham.——Coolashekhara alwar (कुलशेखर - kulashékhara, San.; குலசேகராழ்வார் - kulaségarázhvár, Tam.). From (kula, san. family + shékhara, san. crest-jewel). Otherwise Coolashekhara permaul. A Chera king born in Colly city. He personates cowstoobham or the chest pendent of Krishna. A Cshatriya skilled in Tamul and Sanscrit; composed Permaul tirmozhy of 105 stanzas in Tamul, now a portion of Naulauyira prabandham, and Moocoondamaulay in Sanscrit.——Mathooracavy alwar (மதுரகவியாழ்வார் - mathurakkaviyázhvár, Tam.). Means sweet poet. Bramin in Pandyan kingdom in Tiroocolore, near Nangoonairy. Supposed to be incarnation of Veinateyan, composed Cunninoon shirtaumboo of 11 stanzas.——Nummalwar (நம்மாழ்வார் - nammázhvár, Tam.). Means our alwar. Otherwise Caurimauran, Shadagopan and Vacoolaubharanan. Born in Tirnagary on the Tamrapurny. A Vellaulan considered an incarnation of Senamoodelly one of the Vellaula saints; composed Tirvrittam of 100 stanzas, Tirvausiriya vrittam of 7 stanzas, Periya tirvantaudy of 87 stanzas, and Tirvye mozhy of 1,102 stanzas.——Periyalwar (विष्णुचित्त - vishnuchitta, San.; பெரியாழ்வார் - periyázhvár, Tam.). From (periya, tam. great). San. means Vishnoo + mind. Otherwise Garoodalwar. A bramin. Incarnation of the eagle vehicle of Vishnoo. Born in Shreevillipoottore. He lived in the time of Vallabhadeva pandyan of Madura, who gave him the title of Puttarpiraun or lord among the learned. He found a female child in a bush and devoted her to temple service. She is called in Tamul Aundaul or Shoodicodoot nauchiyaur and in Teloogoo Amoocta maulyada. He composed Tirpallaundoo of 12 stanzas and Tirmozhy of 461.——Peyalwar (भ्रान्तयोगी - bhrántayógí, San.; பேயாழ்வார் - péyázhvár, Tam.). From (péy, tam. wild). San. means mad sage; from his action and gesticulation. Born at Mylapore. Incarnation of Nandacam or Krishna's sword. Contemporary with Bhootatt alwar and Poygay alwar; composed the third Tirvantaudy of 100 stanzas.——Poygay alwar (कासारयोगी - kásárayógí, San.; பொய்கையாழ்வார் - poygaiyázhvár, Tam.). From (poygai, tam. pool). San. means pond sage. Incarnation of Paunchajanyam, the chunk of Vishnoo. Born at Conjeeveram. He began the Tirmozhy. Contemporary with Bhootatt alwar and Peyalwar, composed the first Tirvantaudy of 100 stanzas.——Tirmangay alwar (திருமங்கையாழ்வார் - tirumangaiyázhvár, Tam.). From (tiru, tam. sacred + mangai, tam. woman, meaning lakshmí); from his marriage with Coomoodavully, the lily handed woman, supposed to be a divine impersonation. Vishnoo's bow incarnate. Attached to the temple at Shreerungam. A Veydan or hunter, born in Tirvauly tirnágary near Shiyally. He obtained the title of Naurcavy permaul from the skill in composing the four kinds of poems Ausoo cavy or impromptu verse, Madhoora cavy or sublime verse in sweet style, Chitra cavy or varied verse, and Vistaura cavy or extended poem or epics like Bhauratam and Ramayanam. He constructed the temple at Shreerungam and caused the masons at last in lieu of receiving wages to be drowned in the Cauvery, since called Colladam or place of slaughter. Composed Periya tirmozhy of 1,814 stanzas, Tircooroom taundagam of 20 stanzas, Tirnedoom taundagam of 30 stanzas, and Tirvalookkootirkye, Periya tirmadal and Shiriya tirmadal of 227 stanzas.——Tirmazhisay alwar (भक्तिसारमुनि - bhaktisáramuni, San.; திருமழிசையாழ்வார் - tirumazhisaiyázhvár, Tam.). From (tirumazhisai, tam. place so called). San. means faith + excellence + sage. Born at Tirmazhisay, otherwise Maheesauram. Incarnation of Soodarshanam or the discus weapon. Composed Tiroochanda vrittam of 120 stanzas and Naunmookhan tirvantaudy of 96 stanzas.——Tirpaunalwar (திருப்பாணாழ்வார் - tiruppánázhvár, Tam.). From (tiru, tam. holy + pán, tam. song). Otherwise Paun permaul or music sage. Born in Warriore on the Cauvery. Incarnation of Shreevatsam or the curling mark of good fortune on Vishnoo's breast. A pariah. ALWYE (ആലുവായ് - áluváy, Mal.). From (áru, mal. river + váya, mal. mouth).—"a" Village, Sanitarium; Travancore state, Cottayam division, Aulangaud tal.; lat. 10° 07; long. 76° 24′; from Aulangaud E. 4 miles; from Trivandrum N.N.W. 117 miles; from the sea E. 11 miles. On the Travancore-Cochin frontier. A sanitarium on the Periyaur, resorted to from Malabar. Annual fair. Considerable trade. Baskets, basket toys, and umbrellas of palmyra leaves manufactured.—"b" River; Travancore and Cochin states; Greek ψευδόστομος ποταμός. Named by the early Portuguese the Fiera d'Alva. A branch of the Periyaur, which it joins at Alwye town. Cochin derives drinking water from this.

AMA (अमा - amá, San.). With.——Amavausyay (अमावास्या - amávásyá, San.). From (above + vas, san. to dwell). Conjunction of sun and moon. Complement between end of fourteenth lunar tithy and exact conjunction of sun and moon in any month. Compare Arcaindoo sangamam which is instant of true conjunction. An infant born during period of Amavausyay holds life by uncertain tenure. The day so named is sometimes a day prior to actual new moon. It is however always the last day of the Krishna pacsham. A fast day for Bramins and orthodox Hindoos; lunar festival [pundigay, 3e]. There is a Tamul proverb—நித்தியம் கிடைக்குமா அமாவாசைச் சோறு?—"May new moon fare be expected daily?"; the household eat only once during day, but the food is superior and prepared with cooking utensils kept for sacred purposes. If a Bramin is present he offers oblations of sesamum grain and water to manes of dead, naming each in order as far back as the third generation [shrauddham]. The ancient Romans had the same ceremony at the Ides. Distinguish from Divasam or Tithy which is an anniversary on any date commemorative of parent, grand parent or great-grand parent. Compare the Mahaulya [pundigay, 6d] amavausyay and Mahaulya pacsham [pundigay, 6d], which come only once a year. The new moon days are specially kept by Tamuls in Audy or July, Auny or June and Tye [mausam] or January [jyotisham].

AMANJY (அமிஞ்சி - amiñji, Tam.). Tam. from Hind. Compelled labor [amjy].

AMAR (अमर - amara, San.). From (a, san. not + mri, san. to die). Immortal.——Amar sing (امرسنگ - amarsing, Hind.). From (above + simha, san. lion). The immortal lion. Proper name [peyar].

AMARAM (அமரம் - amaram, Tam.). From (amar, tam. war). The command of a thousand foot. A grant of revenue by a ruler on condition of military service.

AMAT (امت - amat, Hind.). From Arabic. Feminine of Abd, and similarly used [ism].——Amat ool careem (امت الكريم - amatulkarim, Hind.). Slave of the generous or of God.

AMAUN (امان - amán, Hind.). From (amana, ar. to be safe). Security. Part of lacab; as Amaun oon nissa, the peace of ladies.——Amaunat (امانت - amánat, Hind.). From (amn, ar. safety). Anything given in trust. Corruptly anaumat. Part of lacab; as Amaunat ally, given in trust to Ally. Amaunatgaud is a hawker.——Amauny (امانی - amáni, Hind.). From (amn, ar. safety). Anything held in trust, or under official management. The following is a Hindostany proverb:—امانی آبادانی اجارہ اجاڑ - "Government collection is prosperity, "farming is depopulation." Amauny reddy is a reddy having no mirassy right, appointed during temporary absence of mirassy holder. See vol. I, 112.

AMBAH (अम्बा - ambá, San.). From (amb, san. to go). Mother. Title of goddesses. Parvaty specially. Suffix in female proper names of the superior castes as Avayaumbah, Madhooraumbah. The Tamul Ammah is the title to more ordinary persons [ammah]. Distinguish Amman.——Ambashuncaran (அம்பாசங்கரன் - ambásangaran, Tam.). From (shankara, san. shiva, the pleasure maker). Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Avayaumbah (அவயாம்பா - avayámbá, Tam.). From (abhaya, san. fearless). Epithet of Doorga. Female name among Sheivites. Familiarly Avayam.

AMBALAM (അമ്പലം - ambalam, Mal.; அம்பலம் - ambalam, Tam.). From (ampu, mal. friendship + ála, mal. house). Drav. form of San. Sabhay. A public place of meeting in a village. Temple on W. coast. Suffix in place names; as Ayacauram-balam, meaning toll-gatherer + public place. Suffix in proper names among non-bramins, as Ponnambalam [peyar]. There is a Tamul proverb:—தலையன் பேச்சு அம்பலமேறாது— "The words of a fisherman will not reach the assembly." Derisive of justice.——Ambalacauran (அம்பலக்காரன் - ambalakkáran, Tam.). AMBASAMOODRAM (அம்பாசமுத்திரம் - ambásamuttiram, Tam. ambásamudram*). From (ambá, san. párvatí, the mother + samudra, san. sea).——(1) Talook, Tinnevelly district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 225. Area 481 square miles. Population 183,616. Language Tamul. W. of district. Bounded S.E. by Nangoonairy talook, E. by Tinnevelly talook, N. by Tencausy and Shuncaraneinarcoil talooks, and W. by the ghauts. The ghaut range is accessible by mountain paths from Cadayam, Alwarcoorchy, Paupanausam and Shingamputty. The southern portion is rocky and soil sandy, producing poor dry crops, shaumay and gram, and occasional palmyra topes. North of the Tamrapurny, except near the ghaut range, the high dry lands have the same character, the soil being derived partly from decayed gneiss, but largely from overlying quartz, and being of a red sandy character frequently impregnated with soda. At the foot of the ghauts and for five or six miles eastward red clays and loams of better quality are found. This portion is better wooded than the more eastern and southern portions. High quartz ridge forms the water-shed between the Tamrapurny and Chittaur. The whole of the Tamrapurny valley and portions of those of its affluents get the benefit of the south-west monsoon and obtain a first or caur crop; while the north-east monsoon commencing in October, supplies these lands again for a second crop. The villages of the river valley supply other parts of the talook with rice. Money-lending is pursued. Weaving has declined before the supply of piece-goods from Europe. Puttamaday mats, made of fine rushes found on the river banks and in tank beds, are in demand. Valuable timbers are derived from the forests. The talook contains the principal sources of the Tamrapurny, which rises on either side of Agastya mullay. From the north of this mountain flows the Serviaur which joins the Tamrapurny about four or five miles before it quits the mountain range at Paupanausam. Other tributaries of the Tamrapurny are to the north the Gatananuddy and the Ramanuddy draining considerable mountain areas and to the south the Manimoottaur and the Putchayaur. Shingamputty zemindarry in the south-west corner is well watered from the Manimoottaur. The Putchayaur fills a few tanks during the north-east monsoon. The irrigation system is very ancient. There are numerous anicuts across the Tamrapurny and its affluents. The Cunnadiyan is the finest anicut on the river. Zemindarries:—Oorcaud and Shingamputty. Places of archæological interest:—Alwarcoorchy, Ambasamoodram, Amboor, Auladiyore, Bramhadesam, Culladacoorchy, Paupanausam, Ravanasamoodram, Shermadevy, Shivasheilam, Tentribhoovanam, Tirpoodaymaroothore, Veeravanallore, Veirauvicoolam. San. from (am, san. quickly + vri, san. to surround). Tam. from (mín, tam. fish + ambar, hind. the perfume). Ambergris, meaning grey amber. Ambragrisea of chemists. A solid opaque, generally ash-colored, and brittle, fatty, inflammable substance, variegated like marble, very light, and has when heated a fragrant and singular odour. Is a concretion of the indigestible portions of the cuttle-fish, which form the food of the sperm whale. The nucleus of the mass is generally the horny beaks of these creatures, and the substance itself is found in the intestines of the sperm whale, or on the shores of the seas frequented by this species [hoot]. No other whale is known to be subject to these bezoars. Trading vessels find it floating on the Indian ocean, or adhering to rocks, chiefly among the Moluccas and other islands to the eastward, but also in the Maldives. Esteemed as perfumes, especially by the Mahomedans. Their physicians consider it also as an aphrodisiac. Substituted for British phosphorus. Used as a perfume, a drop or two of the essence mixed with lavender water.

AMMAH (அம்மா - ammá, Tam.). Dravidian corruption of (ambá, san.). Mother, mistress of the house. Title of respect to females. Affix to female proper names as Annammah, Rungammah [peyar]. This corresponds to Bye among the Mahrattas and Madhwas. In Tooloo the word strangely means father [appan]. Distinguish the Dravidian Amman.

AMMAN (ಅಮ್ಮ - amma, Can.; అమ్మ - amma, Tel.; അമ്മ - amma, Mal.; அம்மன் - amman, Tam.). Female of Ayen. The female deity among the Dravidians, always ruling demoniac influences or personages. For every village there is at any rate one temple dedicated to a goddess of this sort. For an analysis of the functions of these deities, see vol. I (78) and (81). The title has generally a prefix, as:—Ammannamman, Ancaulamman, Chinnamman, Cunnyamman, Mariyamman, Mootyaulamman, Mullamman, Naugauttamman, Osooramman, Padeivettamman, Periyamman, Polairamman, Ponniyamman, Shellamman, Taundoniyamman, Tooloocaunamman, Yellamman [q.v.]. The Mariyamman of the Tamuls is specially a deity of the small-pox, causing or protecting from that disease. There is a Tamul proverb:—வைசூரி வந்தவர்கள் அம்மா என்று கூப்பிடவேண்டும்—"Those who are attacked with small-pox "must call it the goddess." The representation of an Amman in the temples is generally a black stone or a piece of wood, and seldom an image. A poojarry, who is not a Bramin, is appointed for the daily worship. He anoints the symbol of the deity daily, and puts ashes on her head. For offering he breaks a cocoanut in front of the idol. This is the commonest offering. The villagers make frequent vows to the goddess, promising sacrifices if she fulfils desires, and occasionally they collect money by subscription and celebrate a feast. When any member of a family is seized by sickness, the poojarry is consulted, who announces to the worshipper the offering that must be presented. If cholera or other large epidemic breaks out, the village deity will rise into importance and the sacrificial rite will be more frequently performed. Sacrifice is specially made to the village goddess at sowing time and harvest; also for rain or fair weather. The Amman is brought out from time to time and carried around the village or town [matam].——Amman coil (அம்மன்கோயில் - ammangóyil, Tam.). From (above + kóyil, tam. temple). Temple of the village goddess.——Ammannamma (అమ్మన్నమ్మ - ammannamma, Tel.). Same as Amman.——Ammany (அம்மணி - ammani, Tam.). Familiar form of Amman. Name and title of address among Hindoo females. There is a Tamul proverb:—பொன்மணி அற்றவளை அம்மணி என்பானேன்? "Why should a woman, who has "no gold or ornament be called Ammany?" Pun on Ammany, which also means she who is bare [peyar].——Ammapett (அம்மாப்பேட்டை - ammáppéttai, Tam.). From (ammá, tam. village goddess + péttai, tam. suburb). Village; Salem dist., Salem tal.; pop. 7,003; lat. 11° 40′; long. 78° 14′; from Salem E.S.E. 1½ miles. Suburb of Salem.——Ammatchy (അമ്മച്ചി - ammaççi, Mal.). Wife of a rajah on the west coast. Not a member of the royal household, and in nowise associated with the court. Cannot be seen in public with the rajah. Her issue occupy the same position as herself. The word is more commonly Cuttilamma in North malabar [maroomakkatoyem].——Ammaul (அம்மாள் - ammál, Tam.). Plural of Amman. Honorific title to females answering to Iyer among male Smartas [peyar]. Very often applied to goddesses.——Ammavaur (అమ్మవారు - ammavárn, Tel.). The same.——Ammay (அம்மை - ammai, Tam.). The same, especially as small-pox [veidyan].——Ammayaur coondal (அம்மையார்கூந்தல் - ammaiyárgúndal, Tam.). Tam. from (ammai, tam. matron + kúndal, tam. woman's hair); from intertwining habit. Title otherwise Virginian silk. Botanically Periploca sp., asclepiadeæ [vricsham, 88]. Plant is medicinally diuretic; gives fibre.——Ammy (అమ్మి - ammi, Tel.). A girl. Term of address to women [abby].——Ammye (అమ్మాయి - ammáyi, Tel.). Familiar form of Ammy. Term of address to young children of both sexes. Hindoo female proper name [peyar].

Maternal uncle.——Ammaun putcharisy (चित्र - chitra, San.; کهیری - khírí, Hind.; ಅಚ್ಚೆಸೊಪ್ಪು - aççesoppu, Can.; నానబాల - nánabála, Tel.; දදකිරිය - dadakíriya, Singh.; அம்மான்பச்சரிசி - ammánbaççarisi, Tam.). Title from tamul. San. means variegated in color. Hind. from (kshírí, san. milk plant). Can. from (aççe, can. tattoo + soppu, can. leaf); from children marking their hands with milk of leaf stalks while playing. Tel. from (nánu, tel. to soak + pálu, tel. milk); from seeds tasting like raw rice. Singh. from (dada, singh. wild + kiriya, singh. milk plant). Tam. from (ammán, tam. maternal uncle + paççai, tam. green + arisi, tam. rice); uncle is jocose meaning false, and the seeds are something like raw rice. Botanically Euphorbia [milk hedge] indica, lam., euphorbiaceæ [vricsham, 118]. Alias Euphorbia decumbens, hypercifolia. Lightish colored bark; sweetish to the taste; the leaves smell like tea when carefully dried. Juice medicinally astringent and slightly narcotic, used in dysentery; bark purifies the blood; leaves and seeds, given in worm cases and bowel-affections of children. Leaves used as famine food. There are several allied species. Large ammaun putcharisy, otherwise pill-bearing spurge, is euphorbia pilulifera, l., alias hirta, a common weed. Red ammaun putcharisy is euphorbia rosea, retz. Small ammaun putcharisy, otherwise thyme-leaved spurge, is euphorbia thymifolia, burm., alias macrophylla; this is the commonest sort; branches pressing flat on the earth, colored, hairy; leaves opposite, obliquely ovate, serrate; flower axillary, crowded on short peduncles, small, greenish; calyx and corolla each of four semi-lateral parts.

AMMAYANAICKANORE (அம்மயநாயக்கனூர் - ammayanáyakkanúr, Tam. ammayanáyakanúr*). From (ammayanáyakkan, tam. proper name + úr, tam. village). Zemindarry, Village, Railway station; Madura dist., Dindigul tal.; pop. 3,820; square miles 97; lat. of village 10° 10′; long. 77° 57′; height 786 feet; from Dindigul S.S.W. 14 miles; from Madura N.W. 23 miles. Zemindarry was one of the five polliems which Hyder failed to resume, but it was afterwards sequestered by Tippoo sultan. On the British occupation, it was restored to its original status as a tributary polliem. Peshcush Rs. 13,668. On the route from Dindigul to Madura. Station for the Pulneys on the Negapatam line. Battle fought here in 1741 decided the fate of Dindigul, which thus fell into the hands of Chundah sahib.

AMOMUM (حماما - hamáma, Ar.). From (hamma, ar. to heat); from properties. The wild cardamom [q.v.] genus.

AMOOKRA (அமுக்குரா - amukkurá, Tam.). From (amungu, tam. to sink + kurá, tam. webera corymbosa, willd.); from size of plant. Same as Asgand [q.v.].

AMRAUTAM (आम्रात - ámráta, San.). From (ámra, san. mangifera indica, linn.). Hog-plum. Botanically the spondias genus, anacardiaceæ [vricsham, 45]. Deciduous glabrous trees, natives of tropical regions; leaves usually crowded at the tips of branches, alternate, odd-pinnate; flowers small; drupe fleshy; stone hard, thick. The species best known to the natives are:—dulcis [otaheite apple], mangifera [wild mango].

AMRAVATTY (அமராவதி - ámarávathi, Tam. amarávati*). From (ámra, san. mango tree, mangifera indica, linn. + vat, san. suffix of possession).—"a" Mythologically capital of Indran. The name has been applied by the Bramins to more than one town in Southern india [matam].—"b" Village, Place of pilgrimage; Kistna dist., Suttenapully tal.; pop. 2,252; acres 2,693; lat. 16° 34′; long. 80° 24′; from Crossoor E.N.E. 14 miles; from Masulipatam W.N.W. 58 miles. On south bank of Kistna. One of chief centres of ancient Vengy kingdom. The celebrated Booddhist stoopam, first discovered by Rajah Vencataudry naidoo's servants in A.D. 1796, stands south of village. Booddhist carvings were hidden under a large mound of earth called Deepauladinney, or mound of lanterns. The various subsequent excavations have laid bare a circular processional path, stone-flagged, with an inner and outer railing of carved marble. At the points of the compass were formerly four small chapels or perhaps entrances with pillars. In the centre must have been a dagoba, but of that there is now no trace. The pillars and slabs and cornices of the railings are covered with sculpture of an astonishing degree of excellence. The sculptures depict scenes in the life of Booddha and various Booddhist emblems and symbols. Inscriptions in the Goopta or Pali character are frequent. The central dagoba was commenced first with an enclosing rail. Subsequently the great outer rail was begun, the place having acquired celebrity. The sculptures of the inner rail were taken in hand, after which decay set in, and nothing further was done. These are the inferences from internal evidence. The central discs of the pillars alone have contained from 6,000 to 7,000 figures. If are added to these the continuous frieze above, and the sculptures above and below the discs on the pillars, there probably were not less than from 120 to 140 figures for each intercolumniation, say 12,000 to 14,000 in all. The inner rail probably contains even a greater number of figures than this, and they are so small as to resemble ivory carving. These figures and the other ornaments show the elaboration and finish of the Sawmy jewellery. Except the great frieze at Nakhon vat in Cambodia, there is not in any other part of the world a mass of sculpture equal in extent to what this must have been when complete. The subject of sculptures are very various:—animals, bulls, elephants, &c., well depicted; feasts, concerts of instruments; scenes from the life of Booddha, &c. This tope is identified with the Averashilah sangharaumam of Hwen thsang, and with the temple of the Diamond sand mentioned in the Tooth relic traditions. Close by the tope is a temple and a mosque for the construction of which many of the marbles from the tope were used. To the west is a mound called Coochy dibba, which probably contains remains. A number of rude stone burying-places, circles, dolmens, &c., are scattered about the neighbourhood especially near the hills, a few miles south-east of the village. In the village on the river bank is the handsome temple of Amareshwaran, built towards the close of last century by Rajah vencataudry naidoo. There was a much older temple here, which was repaired by Anoo vaima reddy of Condaveed in A.D. 1361. Near the temple are the remains of Vencataudry naidoo's palace. Half a mile to the west is the old fort of Dharanicottah on the river. This dates many centuries back, though the age is uncertain. The ancestors of the Reddies of Condaveed, who commenced to rule in A.D. 1328, lived here. On the rocks in the bed of the river opposite the Amareshwarasawmy temple are many rough sculptures and inscriptions. Leaden Andhra coins have been found here. For the country round Amravatty, see Cronnaud [charitram].—"c" River; Coimbatore and Trichinopoly districts. Has source in confluence of several jungle streams that run from the N.E. spur of Anamullay and Travancore hills bordering Oodamalpett talook. Flows into Anjanaud valley, whence it debouches into Coimbatore district near villages of Cullaupooram and Chuckragherry, and after flowing E.N.E. for about 140 miles through Oodamalpett, Dharaupooram and Caroor talooks, falls into the Cauvery in lat. 10° 58′ and long. 78° 14′, at Tirmookkoodal at the eastern extremity of Caroor talook on the Trichinopoly boundary. Crossed by seventeen anicuts. Being fed by the S.W. monsoon it flows with some regularity from June to end of August. It fails generally in September, and again increases in the N.E. monsoon till November. It then gradually falls until March, when it is practically dry save for spring channels. Very fully utilized for irrigation throughout its course, which is marked by an almost continuous though very narrow belt of wet land, except in the heart of the Dharaupooram talook. Navigation is possible only for the smallest description of boats. Chief places on its banks are Comauralingam, Dharaupooram and Caroor. Crossed by girder bridge of twenty-one arches at Caroor.

AMROOD (अमृतफल - amritap'hala, San.; شجر کمثرا - shajarikummasrá, Ar.; درخت امرود - darakhtiamrúd, Pers.; ناشپاتی - náshpátí, Hind. and Dec.). Title from persian. San. from (amrita, san. the undying, nectar + p'hala, san. fruit). Ar. from (shajar, ar. tree + kummasrá, ar. pear). Pers. from (darakht, ar. tree + amrúd, pers. pear). Hind. from (násh, pers. lamentation + pát, pers. leaves). Title otherwise Pear. Botanically Pyrus communis, linn., rosaceæ [vricsham, 49]. Small, thorny tree; thrives well on the neilgherries. Perry is fermented juice of pears. For malus or apple see Seb.

AMSH (अंश - amsh, San.). To divide.——Amsham (अंश - amsha, San.). A fraction. Part or portion, essence, principle. The soul is said to be an Amsham of the deity. Degree of latitude [acsham] or longitude [deshauntaram]. Third or fifth of scale treated as a dominant [sangeetam, swaram].——Amshapatram (അംശപത്രം - amshapatram, Mal.). From (patra, san. letter). Same as Pagoothy olay [q.v.].——Amshom (അംശം - amsham, Mal.). Another form of Amsham. Modern division of a talook in Malabar. Similar to the English parish. The headman is Adhicaury; the curnam is Menon. As the district has never been surveyed in detail, the areas of amshoms are not distinctly known. There is no such thing therein as a village, but a series of scattered homesteads and farms, where the owner of the land and his servants reside separate and apart, in single separate huts, or in scattered collections of huts. Subordinate to the amshom is the deshom or hamlet. For history of the amshom, see vol. I, 117 and II, 103. Amshom was formerly hobly, containing so many taras. See vol. I, 112.

AMUCK (امك - amak, Jav.). Malay word from Java. Onslaught whether of many in battle, or of an individual.

AN (ان - an, Ar.). Al [q.v.] before n in Arabic single terms, as Annabee, meaning the prophet.

ANAMASAMOODRAM (అనమసముద్రము - anamasamudramu, Tel.). From (annamma, tel. proper name + samudra, san. ocean). Village; Nellore dist., Atmacore tal.; pop. 1,291; acres 6,307; lat. 14° 42′; long. 79° 43′; from Atmacore N.N.E. 6¼ miles; from Nellore N.W. 26 miles. Large tank. Fine and ancient mosque, with endowment of ten villages and scene of annual gathering of nine days to celebrate Oors of founder, Cauja rahmat ool lah. The trustee of mosque holds title of Peer zauda. Deserted temple north of village contains ten stone statues. The dyeing of white thread into red is carried on to a great extent.

ANAMOODY (ആനമുടി - ánamuti, Mal.; ஆனைமுடி - ánaimudi, Tam.). From (ánai, tam. elephant + mudi, tam. peak). Mountain, Plateau; Travancore state, Cottayam division, and Coimbatore dist., Pollachy tal. Highest point 8,837 feet, being the highest point in peninsular India. Situated in upper ranges of Anamullays averaging 7,000 feet above level of sea and with climate similar to Ootacamund. The plateau is uninhabited, except for occasional visits from ibex-hunters or the wild hill tribe of Poolayar. They sell honey to the people of the plains, which they obtain by swinging themselves by long chains of rattan rings over precipices. Between Anamoody and the next plateau lies an extensive grass plain watered by several streams.

ANAMULLAY (ஆனைமலை - ánaimalai,* Tam.). From (ánai, tam. elephant + malai, tam. mountain). Sanscrit name (gajashaila), meaning same.—"a" Village; Coimbatore dist., Pollachy tal.; pop. 6,343; acres 3,980; lat. 10° 35′; long. 76° 58′; from Coimbatore S. 29 miles; from Pollachy S.W. 7½ miles. On the Auliyaur, 8 miles from foot of hills. Timber centre for Anamullay hills. A good cart road connects it with Pollachy. Ruined Shiva temple destroyed by Tippoo sultan. Worship is kept up. Mahomedan musjid. Market for forest produce weekly. Chuckragherry droog fort on the summit of a small hill called Jeinacull droog.—"b" Range of mountains; Coimbatore dist., Pollachy tal. For description, see vol. II, 51.—"c" Hill; Madura dist., Madura tal. A remarkable rock, two miles in length and a quarter of a mile in breadth, supposed to represent the elephant sent to destroy the city of Madura by a Chola king. It is a solid block of gneiss; strata of felspar, mica, and quartz running horizontally through its mass, crossed by veins of a felspathic rock which pass through the entire vein. Porch and temple have been hewn out of the side.

ANANAS (अननास - ananássa, San.; अननस - ananasa, Mahr.; अवनस - avanasa, Conc.; عين الناس - ainunnás, Ar. and Pers.; اناناس - anannás, Hind.; انانس - anánas, Dec.; ಪರಂಗಿಹಲಸು - parangihalasu, Can.; ಪರಂಗಿಪೆಲಕಾಯಿ - parengipelakayi, Too.; అనాసచెట్టు - anásachettu, Tel.; കൈതച്ചക്ക - kaitaççakka, Mal.; അന്നാക്കാ - annakká, Singh.; அன்னாசி - annási, Tam.). Title from Brazilian, through Arabic. Ar. from (ain, ar. eye + nás, ar. man), which is a corruption. Dec. is nearest the original. Can. from (parangi, can. foreign + halasu, can. jack, artocarpus integrifolia, willd.). Too. from (parangi, too. foreign + pelakayi, too. jack fruit). Tel. and Tam. are corruptions from analogy of Star anise [q.v.] or Illicium anisatum, linn. Mal. from (kaita, mal. screw-pine, pandanus odoratissimus, linn. + chakka, mal. jack fruit). Singh. from Tam. by perversion. Mal. also (kappaççakka), meaning ship + jack fruit. Tam. also (parangittázhai), meaning foreign + screw-pine; also (annattázhai), meaning pine-apple + screw-pine. Pine-apple shrub, so called because fruit resembles pine-cones; Brazilian nanas; Portuguese ananas; Manananzi of Zanzibar, m being a prefix; French Manasse. In Macassar called pandang, from its resemblance to Pandanus odoratissimus, linn., the screw-pine. Conversely the pandanus has been called wild ananas. Botanically Ananas sativus, schult., bromeliaceæ [vricsham]. Alias Ananassa sativa; Bromelia ananas. Perennial, 2-3 feet; flowers small, bluish; flowering in April-May; naturalised. Native of hot regions of Mexico and Panama. The Portuguese first introduced the seeds from the Moluccas into Bengal in Acbar's time. The plants are remarkable for their power of existing in the air without contact with the earth. Grows well in Southern india, though chiefly cultivated by Europeans. In Malabar coast, near Mahé, remarkably abundant. Fruit consists of a number of a pulpy ovaries cohering in a firm compact head, and terminated by a tuft of small leaves termed the crown. Large, greenish when young, and orange color when ripe. Fresh juice of the leaves powerful anthelmintic, that of the fruit antiscorbutic. Natives regard the fresh juice of the fruit as poisonous if hypodermically injected. The flavor of the fruit is heightened by cultivation, being somewhat acrid in its wild state. The natives say it is poisonous, perhaps on account of the eyes; consequently destroy it or give it away. A pleasant wine may be made with it. The plant itself forms hedges, and will grow with little care and in almost any soil. The fibre yielded by the leaves is nearly white, very soft, silky and pliant, and at the same time strong, durable, and susceptible of fine sub-division. It is as long in the staple as flax, and can be worked by the same machinery. It is proof against immersion in water. It forms most delicate fabrics as well as fishing lines, ropes, &c. The Ceylon pine-apple has the finest flavor. There is a striatifolia or stripe-leaved variety.

ANANDRAM (അനന്തരം - anantaram, Mal.). From (an, san. not + antáram, san. interval). Succeeding.——Anandraven (അനന്തരവൻ - anantaravan, Mal.). From (above + an, mal. personal suffix). Successor, heir to the Carnaven [q. v.]. All members of a tarwaud other than the Carnaven. Younger brothers, children and grandchildren in Makkatoyem; younger brothers and nephews in Maroomakkatoyem [maryauday].

Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. The Gooty district moonsif exercises civil jurisdiction. Area 789 square miles. Population 97,315. Language Teloogoo. Centre of district. Bounded N. Gooty talook, E. Tadpatry tal. and Cadiry tal. of Cuddapah, S. Dharmavaram tal. and W. Royadroog tal. of Bellary. Highest point Chiyyaid droog, 1,200 feet above the level of the plain. The Pennair forms for some distance the northern boundary and separates it from the talook of Gooty. General appearance of the talook greatly undulating. The soil for the most part red and gravelly. In the north small tracts of black soil are found. Cholum and raggy are imported from Hindoopore and Madaksira and also jaggery and cocoanuts to a limited extent. Paddy and gram are sent to Kurnool and the Nizam's country and the western markets. Channels for irrigation are cut from the Pennair and Chitrauvaty. They are frequently silted up and have to be cleared again. At Bookkacherla there is an important irrigation project. The most important tanks in the talook are those at Agrahauram, Anantapore, Bramhanayaulair, Madigoobba, Marvapully, Raptaud and Singanamala. The Anantapore tank has for one of its feeders the Pundlair river, which crosses the trunk road at Raptaud. Camping grounds are at Anantapore, Garladinney, Maroor. Trig. stations are Devarcondah and Obooldevarcondah. The principal places, &c., in the talook are the following.——Anantapore (అనంతపురము - anantapuramu, Tel.). See below.——Atmaccre (ఆత్మకూరు - átmakúru, Tel.). From (yátamu, tel. water-lift + úru, tel. village). Village; pop. 1,882; lat. 14° 38′; long. 77° 24′; from Anantapore W. 16 miles. There are ruins of a large fort on the hill, and foundations of temples and of streets and houses are to be seen. The town is small, Built at the base of the Gumpamala hills. The only road to it passes over the apron of the calingula and under the bund of the tank; so that when the calingula is discharging, the village cannot be approached from the trunk road. The tank, which is one of the finest in the Anantapore district, was built by Shreerungarauz of Vijianugger.——Tadmurry (తాడిమర్రి - tádimarri, Tel.). From (tádi, tel. palmyra tree, borassus flabelliformis, linn. + marri, tel. banyan tree, ficus bengalensis, linn.). Village; pop. 1,748; lat. 14° 34′; long. 77° 54′; from Anantapore E.S.E. 19 miles. Among the hills on the east of the talook. There are traces of a strong fort built by a petty poligar named Sakey condanna naidoo, who possessed about ninety villages. He was deposed by Hyder when the latter overran the province. At one time Tadmurry was a large town and the cusbah of a talook, but in 1820 the villages were divided between the talooks of Anantapore, Tadpatry and Penoocondah. There was a Moonsif's court here till quite recently. The village presents a ruined appearance. The better class of merchants have long ago deserted it, but weaving is carried on on a small scale.——(3) Collector's head-quarters, Tahsildar's station, Divisional head-quarters, Municipality, and Talook board; Anantapore dist., Anantapore tal.; pop. 6,994; lat. 14° 41′; long. 77° 39′; from Bellary S.E. 56 miles; from Gooty S. 30 miles; from Madras N.W. 216 miles; from Penoocondah N. 40 miles. Built in A.D. 1364 by Chikkappa wodeyar, Diwaun to the Rajah of Vijianugger. Chikkappa raised an embankment against the river Pundlair near Devarcondah. At each end of the bund was a calingula, and close to each calingula he founded a village. The western was called after his wife Anantasaugaram, and the eastern after his master Bookkaroya samoodram. Some time after his death the tank bund breached, and tradition says that to prevent similar disasters in future, Mosalamma, daughter-in-law of Basireddy of Bookkaroya samoodram, was offered as a sacrifice and built up in the breach. In 1569 Anantapore and the surrounding districts were bestowed on Handey banoomappa naidoo. This chief had assisted Rama rajah of Vijianugger to suppress an insurrection headed by a Golla named Salicatimma, and had even defeated the Sultan of Golcondah who was marching southwards to assist Timma. Hanoomappa naidoo settled at Bookkaroya samoodram in 1569 and died there in 1582. This poligar family held Anantapore for two centuries. In 1757 the town was besieged by the Mahrattas, who were bought off for a sum of Rs. 50,000. In 1775 Hyder ally, after taking Bellary and Gooty, demanded tribute from Anantapore. The tribute fixed was Rs. 45,000, and for sometime this was punctually paid. At length the tribute fell into arrears, and Hyder arrested the poligar and attached his property. From this time the family fell into obscurity. The two eldest sons were drafted into Hyder's army in which they lost their lives, and the third Shiddhappa naidoo was sent to Seringapatam. Crushed by these troubles the old poligar died in 1788. Soon after this Tippoo, who required all the available troops for active service and could spare none for distant garrisons, sent orders that all the males of the family were to be put to death. This order was at once carried out, and they were hanged on hooks just outside the town. The third son who had been at Seringapatam escaped and took refuge with the Rajah of Calastry. In 1799 he returned to Anantapore, but soon after submitted to the Nizam, who granted him the village of Sidrampore as personal property. On his death in 1801 the direct line became extinct, but some of the family were receiving pensions as lately as 1860. When the Kurnool and Bellary districts were ceded in 1800, Colonel Munro chose Anantapore for his residence, and for many years this was the head-quarters of the Ceded districts. In 1822 Mr. Campbell removed his office to Bellary on the ground that this was a more central place in the newly-constituted zillah of Bellary. In the following year however Mr. Robertson was directed to return to Anantapore. In 1830 the place became the head-quarters of the sub-division, and till 1869 a succession of Sub-collectors administered the five talooks of Anantapore, Dharmavaram, Penoocondah, Hindoopore and Madaksira. In 1869 a redistribution of divisions was made, and the Sub-collector was removed to Gooty. In 1882 the town became the head-quarters of the present Anantapore district [charitram].

ANANTASAUGARAM (అనంతసాగరము - anantaságaramu, Tel.). From (ananta, san. boundless + ságara, san. ocean). Village; Nellore dist., Atmacore tal.; pop. 3,220; acres 9,031; lat. 14° 34′; long. 79° 27′; from Atmacore W. 15 miles; from Nellore W.N.W. 39 miles. Two miles from north bank of Pennair. Considerable grain trade. Large tank fed by Kedamanair coming from Veligonda hills. Irrigates twelve villages and holds two years' supply. The bund between two rocky hills is revetted on both sides and at the top with large blocks of hornstone. On the bund 2 miles from the village stand a granite pillar 7 feet high, and an inscribed stone, commemorating the repair of the tank in A.D. 1521, in the reign of Krishna deva royel of Vijianugger, by Conda narsayya, who also made the tank at Calavoy, 4 miles away on the opposite side of the river.

A special form of the Amman, somewhat Hindooized [matam] to represent Cauly or Bhadra cauly, Shiva's daughter-in-law. As a rule she is represented only by a stone or block of wood, but if specially depicted, her image has four arms and hands. Two of these she raises, holding in the right a weapon of wood and leather, encircled by a snake and in the left a noose, called Pausham, with which she draws the souls of dying people to herself. In one of the other two hands she holds the skull of Bramha, the fourth hand being empty. On her head she wears a crown. Behind her ears she has two flowers; and in them large earrings. Her hair is erect, and near her are two lamps. In the inner apartment of her pagodas stands her own representation or image, if any. In the outer one the following images may be found:—"a" Her husband Veerabhadran, the son of Shiva, having erect black hair, with a crown on his head, lion's teeth in the mouth, the mark of Shiva on his forehead, two white flowers behind his ears, and streams of fire issuing from his whole body. He has fourteen arms and hands, of which four are empty, and in the remaining ten he holds, respectively, a sword, a trident, a shield, a sort of drum, a bell, a flower, two arrows, and a large spear. He wears a long string of skulls, and has sometimes only four, sometimes sixteen, or more heads. According to the Pooraunams he should have 1,000 heads and 2,000 arms.—"b" Periya tumbiraun or the great lord, an image similar to that of Shiva, and meant to represent his son Veerabhadran as lord of the sacrifice of Dacshan.—"c" Iroolan, a savage-hero.—"d" Ranaveeran, a demon hero, &c.—"e" Pauvauday veeran, a demon hero.—"f" Ooyirtoondilcauran, servants of Ancaulamman, whose business is to bring those who die by their own hands to her.—"g" Teecoothitt ammaul, a deified woman who leapt into the fire and made signs after her death.—"h" Cauttairy, a demoness, of whom the Tamulians are specially afraid. All these images, which are usually made of wood, are worshipped with offerings. The figures of clay within and without the enclosure of the pagodas are not worshipped. The representation or image of Ancaulamman herself, which stands in the inner apartment of the pagoda, is worshipped every Friday, or oftener. Besides these ordinary offerings, she obtains on occasion also a thank offering from devotees. Like the other goddesses, she enjoys a yearly movable festival, lasting seven or nine days, on which her image of metal is carried about every morning and evening; and the last and principal day is celebrated like the last day of Mariyamman's festival.——Ancamma (అంకమ్మ - ankamma, Tel.). Contr. from Ancaulamman.——Aye ancaulammay (ஆயியங்காளம்மை - áyiyangálammai, Tam.). From (áyi, tam. mother). Same as Ancaulamman.

ANDHRAM (आन्ध्र - ándhra, San.; ఆంధ్రము - ándhramu, Tel.). From (andhra, san. hunter). Sanscrit name for Teloogoo. The Teloogoo people were always divided into inland Andhras and maritime Calingas. The Andhras were better known than the Calingas to the early Aryans [q.v.]; hence the name. In pooranic times a dynasty of Andhra kings reigned in Northern india, probably Dravidian or some kindred race. The Andaræ are represented by Pliny, after Megasthenes, as a powerful people, and the Andre Indi have a place in the Peutinger Tables amongst the few Indian nations of which the author of those tables had heard. They were however placed by error north of the Ganges. Hwen thsang makes An-to-lo one of the southern kingdoms, and this has been held to mean Andhra. He gives the capital of the Andhra people as Ping-ki-lo, which may be Warangal. The connection between the Andhra dynasty and Southern india is stated in vol. I (132), foot-note. Andhram is one of the fifty-six countries of Tamul geography [bhaushay, charitram].——Andhra deepacam (आन्ध्रदीपक - ándhradípaka, San.). From (dípaka, san. lamp). Modern dictionary of Teloogoo, explained in Teloogoo, by Maumidy vencayya, merchant of Masulipatam in 1816. Only words used in poetry. Alphabetical in European method.——Andhra dravida bhaushay (आन्ध्रद्राविडभाषा - ándhradrávidabhásha, San.). Means Teloogoo-Tamul language. Comaurila bhatt's name for Dravidian languages, northern and southern.

ANDIPUTTY (ஆண்டிப்பட்டி - ándippatti, Tam.). From (ándi, tam. one of the caste + patti, tam. village). Village, Range of hills; Madura dist., Periyacoolam tal.; pop. 6,747; acres 8,975; lat. 10° 00′; long. 77° 40′; from Madura W.N.W. 34 miles; from Periyacoolam S.S.E. 9¼ miles. The range, 55 miles in length, runs from the Travancore chain and is known during the last 15 miles as the Naugamullay. Abounds in bison, deer, pig, cheetah, and at certain seasons elephants. The village is at the north-eastern spur of the range.

A small village and is the residence of Andra zemindar.

ANDROTT (അന്ത്രോത്ത് - antrótt, Mal.). Island; Malabar dist.; pop. 2,999; square miles about 1¾; lat. 10° 48′; long. 73° 57′; from Calicut W. 139 miles. One of the Laccadives. Largest of the northern group of so called Cannanore islands attached to Malabar district. Lies east and west; has hardly any lagoon. Greatest length from south-east to the north-west is about 3½ miles; greatest breadth, about centre of island, is 1¼ miles. Coast line is scarcely at all indented, so that the island forms a regular oval figure. Surface is generally a level plain, elevated but a few feet above the sea, here and there varied by mounds formed mostly of heaped-up material excavated in forming tottam or arable land. Highest mound is probably not 40 feet above sea and average elevation not more than 7 or 8 feet. The island is divided into four sub-divisions or cherries:—Chemacherry, Keelcherry, Mecherry and Yedacherry. The first is on southern shore and separated from Yedacherry by the tottam or garden. Formerly these cherries were political and revenue sub-divisions, but now all matters are decided by the Ameen with the assistance of Carnaver, regardless of the cherry to which the latter belong. The Coral shoal upon which the island is situated is of considerable extent, but the coral crops up to surface only in immediate neighbourhood of land, reef being hardly anywhere above sixty yards from the beach; on the east the beach and reef are coincident. The people fall under three main classes:—Carnaver, sub-divided into Carnaver proper and Tanaca piranda coodiyauns; Maulim or pilots and sailors, sub-divided into Maulim proper and Oorcaur; Melacherry or tree-climbers. The first class of Carnaver is composed of the rich boat owners and Punchayetdars. The male members are distinguished by the title of Koya, a religious dignity. The island Carnaver, Ameen, and Cauzy, all belong to this class. The Tanaca piranda coodiyauns are less wealthy and cultivators. The second class or the Maulims are, as the name implies, sailors. They are generally Puttah coodiyauns, that is to say partly independent and partly dependent on the higher classes. The third class, Melacherries, are servants and toddy-drawers. These are generally Adima coodiyauns or serfs of the Carnavers, but they are at liberty to change their employers. The islanders in their customs and habits closely resemble the Moplahs of North malabar. All the people of the island profess Mahomedanism. Pundauram or crown lands comprise about one-fourth of the area and are scattered throughout the holdings of islanders, having been acquired by escheat or confiscation. The chief Pundauram possessions are East and West Valiya pundaurams. Chief produce is cocoanuts. Raggy, varagoo and millet, yams, sweet potatoes, bread-fruit trees, plantains, limes, areca palms, and betel vines are also grown to a limited extent. The only manufactures carried on are the manufacture of coir-yarn and of jaggery. Shark fins are cured for exportation in small quantities. The principal exports are coir-yarn, cocoanuts, jaggery and pindica a kind of sweetmeat, a little vinegar, lime pickle, and shark fins. Imports are rice, salt, areca nuts, betel, curry-stuffs, cooking utensils, both earthern and metal, implements of husbandry, clothes and occasionally cattle and ornaments. Teak, mango-wood and bamboos are also imported and used in repairing the wodams and small boats. As Andrott is the nearest island to the coast, many wodams from other islands call there for water, &c. The usual coast markets visited by islanders are Calicut, where they sell their goods, and Mangalore, where they usually purchase their supplies. Occasionally they call at Tellicherry and Cannanore.

ANDY (அந்தி - andi, Tam.). Means to meet. Evening, being the junction of day with night. Andivurnan, from (varna, san. color) is he who is red like the evening, Shiva.

ANIL (चमरपुच्छ - chamarapuchha, San.; گلہری - gilehrí, Hind.; ಉಡತೆ - udate, Can.; ఉడుత - uduta, Tel.; അണ്ണാൻ - annán, Mal.; அணில் - anil, Tam.). San. from (chamara, san. chowry + puchha, san. tail). Can. and Tel. from (udugu, can. to grow lean). Terms co-extensive with the European genus Sciurus, sciuridæ [chamara pootcham], rodentia, mammalia [sastanam, 16], of naturalists [jantoo]. The species best known to the natives are malabaricus [malabar squirrel], palmarum, [anil pillay]. Other S. indian species are :—elphinstonei, layardi, macrourus, sublineatus, tristriatus. Pteromys is called Flying anil.——(1) Anil pillay (वृक्षशायिका - vrikshasháyiká, San.; گلہری - gilehrí, Hind.; ಚಿಟ್ಟಲಿಲು - chittalilu, Can.; ఉడుత - uduta, Tel.; അണ്ണാക്കൊട്ടൻ - annákkottan, Mal.; அணிற்பிள்ளை - anirbillai, Tam.). San. from (vriksha, san. tree + shâyiká, san. sleeper). Can. from (chitti, can. small + alilu, can. squirrel). Tam. from (anil, tam. squirrel + pillai, tam. child, affix for small animals). Title otherwise Palm squirrel, Striped squirrel. Sciurus palmarum, sciuridæ, rodentia, mammalia [sastanam, 16], of naturalists. Alias pencillatus. Above dusky greenish gray with three yellowish white stripes along the whole length of the back, and two fainter lines on each side; beneath whitish; tail with the hairs variegated with red and black; ears rounded. Though termed palm squirrel only occasionally seen on palm trees. A legend states that when Hanooman was crossing the Saitoo, it was bridged over by all the animals. But a small gap remained which was filled by this squirrel. When Hanooman passed over, he placed his hand on the squirrel's back, and the marks of his five fingers have remained ever since. It is not unlike the chipmunk of America, Tamias striatus; but those are true ground squirrels having cheek-pouches and living in burrows.—"a" Allied is the Jungle striped squirrel, Sciurus tristriatus. Very similar to last, but generally darker, the face, forehead, back and haunches, more or less tinged with rusty-red, or reddish brown; the stripes small, narrower than in the common one, and not extending the whole length of the back; tail beneath distinctly rusty; sides darker than in palmarum. It differs in its voice, which is much less shrill.—"b" Another is the Travancore striped squirrel, Sciurus layardi. Much darker than the last, being of a dark dingy olive color with a tinge of ashy; middle of back, black with a short yellowish streak in the middle and a faint and shorter streak on each side; tail tipped black, rusty in the middle; lower parts somewhat ferruginous. Size of the last or a trifle larger.—"c" Lastly Neilgherry striped squirrel, Sciurus sublineatus. Of a dark grizzled olive color, tinged with tawny above and with three pale lines alternating with four dark ones on the back and croup, the outer dark lines narrower and somewhat less dark than the others; beneath lighter, more mixed with tawny; tail grizzled dusky olive and ferruginous. Fur remarkably dense, close and soft.—"d" Indian species of Sciurus akin to the above and not here found are :—Berdmorei or berdmore's ground-squirrel, Macclellandi or macclelland's ground-squirrel, Quinquestriatus or stripe-bellied squirrel, Tupaiodes or long-nosed squirrel.—"e" From these small squirrels are to be distinguished the large forest and strictly arboreal species [malabar squirrel].——(2) Paravay anil (اڑن گلہری - urangilehrí, Hind.; ಹಾರುವಬೆಕ್ಕು - háruvabekku, Can.; దుముకుడుత - dumukuduta, Tel.; പറയണ്ണിൽ - parayanil, Mal.; பறவையணில் - paravaiyanil, Tam.). Hind. from (uran, hind. flying + gilehrí, hind. squirrel). Can. from (háru, can. to leap + bekku, can. cat). Tel. from (dumuku, tel. to leap + uduta, tel. squirrel). Tam. from (paravai, tam. bird + anil, tam. squirrel). Title otherwise Flying squirrel, Oral. Pteromys petaurista, sciuridæ, rodentia, mammalia [sastanam, 16], of naturalists. Upper parts dusky-maroon black grizzled with white, the membrane and limbs above somewhat brighter and more rufous; the feet, the muzzle, and round the eyes, and terminal half of the tail, dark brown or black, the last sometimes with a little white towards the tip; under parts dingy brownish gray or nearly white. The male is distinguished by an irregular patch of rufous on the sides of the neck, which in the female is a sort of pale fawn. The female has six mammæ, two pectoral, and four ventral. Feet as in Sciurus palmarum or Striped squirrel. The skin of the flanks extended between the fore and hind feet, forming when expanded a wide parachute; tail rounded, hairy all round, as long as the body or longer. Found wherever there are extensive lofty forests. It lives chiefly on fruits of various kinds, also on bark, shoots, &c.; occasionally on beetles and the larvæ of insects. During the day it sleeps much, either sitting with its back bent into a circle, and its head thrust down to its belly, or lying on its back with the legs and parachute extended, a position it is fond of in sultry weather. During the night time it is incessantly moving. When wishing to pass from one tree to another at some distance, it does not descend to the ground, but leaping from the topmost branches sails through the air by means of the parachute, and reaches the lower part or trunk of the adjacent tree. These flights can be extended to ten yards or upwards, always in a diagonal and lowering direction. This genus is distinguished by its large round tail. The flying apparatus in the Flying squirrel is analogous to that of the Galæopithecus among Lemurs which however is not known in Southern india, and to that of the common flying fox among bats. Indian species of Pteromys not here found are :—Albiventer or white-bellied flying squirrel, Alboniger or black and white flying squirrel, Alborufus or red and white flying squirrel, Caniceps or grey-headed flying squirrel, Cineraceus or ashy flying squirrel, Fimbriatus or grey flying squirrel, Fuscocapillus or Small travancore flying squirrel, Magnificus or red-bellied flying squirrel, Melanopterus or black-flanked flying squirrel, Oral or brown flying squirrel, Pearsonii or hairy-footed flying squirrel, Spadiceus or red flying squirrel, Yunnanensis or yunnan flying squirrel. Belonging to a separate genus is the Small travancore flying squirrel, Sciuropterus fuscocapillus. This is distinguished by its small flat tail. In this the upper parts are a rufescent fulvous or dark-brownish isabelline hue, the hairs being fuscous with a fulvous tip; head darker and fuscous; lower parts rufous white, as are the cheeks and under lip; margin of the membrane rufo-fulvous; tail concolorous or nearly so with back above, with a whitish tip, and the lower surface blackish brown. Ears small, almost nude, Tail bushy, the hair above one inch long at base, hardly distichous; moustaches long and black; fur long, porrect, very fine.

ANIL (النيل - annîl, Ar.). Means the blue. Portuguese for indigo [indigo, neely]. Origin of term Aniline dye.

Ar. from (nabát, ar. plant + bádiyán, ar. pimpinella anisum, linn. + khatái, ar. cathay), means chinese anise. Pers. from (darakht, pers. tree, &c.). Hind. from (anásphal, hind. star anise + per, hind. tree). Dec. from (jhár, hind. tree). Tel. from (maráti, tel. the country + mogga, tel. bud), indicating the capsule. Tam. from hindostany. Ar. also (ráziyánajikhatái), meaning chinese pimpinella anisum, linn. Hind. also (sonf), meaning equally fennel, anise. Tel. also (anásapuvvu), meaning anise + flower. Title otherwise Cathay anise, Chinese anise, Chinese fennel, Siberian cardamom, Yellow-flowered aniseed plant. Botanically Illicium anisatum, linn., magnoliaceæ [vricsham, 3]. Evergreen, smooth-leaved shrub, 20-25 feet; native of yanam and s.w. provinces of china. The capsules, fructus anisi stellati, or semen badiana of chemists, under name of chinese fennel now carried by inland trade from china to yarkund and thence to india; once brought into europe overland by way of russia and then called cardamomum siberiense; resemble stars, with six or eight points, pale-brown color, size of a rupee, and nearly a quarter of an inch thick; common in most bazaars and form part of mahratta buds [q.v.]; whole plant, especially fruit, has aromatic flavor of fennel or anise, sweetish and rather pungent; capsules abound in an essential oil; rather brown, lighter than water, with more difficulty congealed than true aniseed oil, but in other respects of the same properties. Powdered capsules are carminatives; officinal in pharm.; oil distilled from fruit is substitute for british oleum anisi. Fruit used in the fabrication of liqueurs; also as a condiment. No other species here.

ANJ (അഞ്ചു - añchu, Mal.). Five.——Anjanaud (അഞ്ചനാട് - añchanátu, Mal.). From (añchu, mal. five + nátu, mal. country). Tract of country; Travancore state, Cottayam division; square miles 231. Comprises a valley and hill range. Hills form a part of Pulneys and are divided into two ranges, higher having average elevation of 7,500 feet. Coffee, tea and cinchona plantations.——Anjarcundy (അഞ്ചരക്കണ്ടി - añcharakkanti, Mal.). From (añchara, mal. five-and-a-half + kanti, mal. piece of land). Mal. also (randattara), meaning two villages.—"a" River; Malabar dist., Chiracal tal. Rises in heavy forest land on western face of Wynaud ghaut slopes, and after a course of 40 miles divides into two branches forming island of Dharmapatam at its junction with sea. Navigable for boats at all seasons to Vengaud. The command of the traffic was formerly considered so important that Dharmapatam island, acquired by the company in 1734-35, was heavily fortified and garrisoned, and it was even proposed to give up the Tellicherry factory altogether and to build a new one on Dharmapatam island.—"b" Amshom; Malabar dist., Chiracal tal.; lat. 11° 52′; long. 75° 33′; from Calicut N.N.W. 46 miles; from Cannanore E. 10 miles; from the sea E. 11 miles. About 8 miles north of Tellicherry. It has no paid adhicaury or other village officers and is held by the family of Mr. Murdoch Brown on a lease of 99 years granted by the East india company on the 30th April 1817. It was formerly a small talook in North malabar lying between Cannanore and Dharmapatam island. In 1741, mortgaged by the Atchanmars or chiefs to the company for 60,000 silver fanams, equal to 12,000 rupees; debt increased to 80,000 fanams in 1749; ceded to the Chiefs of Tellicherry by Ravivurma, Regent of the Chiracal raj, 23rd March 1765; reduced by the Rajah of Chiracal and Cadatnaud under the requisition of Hyder ally, 1779; reoccupied by the Chief of Tellicherry, 1782; seized again by the Rajah of Chiracal, 1786; ceded to the company with the rest of Malabar under treaty with Tippoo, 18th March 1792. In 1797 the Company opened out at this place, then known as Randatarra, a plantation of about 1,000 acres for the cultivation of special products, such as coffee, pepper, cinnamon, nutmeg, cassia, cotton, sugar-cane, and sandal-wood plants, and appointed Mr. Murdoch Brown, who had originated the scheme, to be the overseer and manager. In 1803 the plantation was almost wholly destroyed by the Pychy rebels. In 1817 a lease for 99 years granted to Mr. Brown. The estate consists of five taras or deshoms of Anjarcundy, Camayatt, Maumba, Mooringairy, Paulairy, together with a strip of land on the opposite side of the Anjarcundy river in Cottayam talook, bounded by the dyke of ten feet in height constructed in 1800 for the defence of the plantation and containing about 40 acres of land.——*Anjengo (അഞ്ചുതെങ്ങ് - añchutennu, Mal.). From (añchu, mal. five + tennu, mal. cocoanut tree).—"a" Sub-magistracy, pay Rs. 70. Malabar district, Cochin talook.—"b" Town; Travancore state, Trivandrum division, Cherankeel tal.; pop. 2,678; lat. 8° 40′; long. 76° 48′; from Alleppey S.S.E. 63 miles; from Attingal W.S.W. 4½ miles; from Bombay S.S.E. 750 miles; from Cannanore S.S.E. 240 miles; from Cape comorin N.W. 67 miles; from Calicut S.S.E. 185 miles; from Cochin S.S.E. 94 miles; from Caracoolam W.N.W. 16 miles; from Cottayam S.S.E. 65 miles; from Madras S.W. 390 miles; from Nagarcoil N.W. 56 miles; from Paravore S.S.E. 107 miles; from Quilon S.E. 19 miles; from Trivandrum N.W. 18 miles; from the sea E. ½ mile. A small seaport and fishing village on a narrow strip of land running north-west to south-east, about half way between Trivandrum and Quilon. It is in the possession of the British. Bounded north and south by Travancore state, east by Anjengo backwater, west by the Arabian sea. Surrounded on its land side by Cherankeel talook. Divided into two deshoms Cottadilly farm and Vandikagam or Anjengo proper, including Poottara. Cottadilly is farmed to the Travancore government. The Subordinate magistrate at Anjengo is immediately subordinate to the Deputy collector of Cochin. In civil matters, Tungacherry is subject to Anjengo. The town formerly consisted of two rows of houses, traces of which still exist. Anchorage off Anjengo under 10 fathoms is foul rocky ground, outside of that depth the bottom is sand and shells. Ships cannot anchor under 10 or 11 fathoms; the prevalence of considerable surf on the coast, particularly southward, renders it unsafe for ships' boats to land and communication with the shore is carried on by means of country boats. In the monsoon landing is impracticable. There is uninterrupted inland water communication from Anjengo to Tiroor railway station, a distance of nearly 200 miles. Population consists of an indifferent breed between the lowest classes of Natives and Portuguese. The first political and commercial relations between Travancore and the East India company arose in 1673 when the Company established a factory at Anjengo. In 1684, the Company obtained permission from the Ranee of Attingal to occupy the site for purposes of trade; and in 1695 a factory with fortifications was erected. For a while Anjengo ranked as an important port. The Factor was Second in Council in Bombay; and under him were placed the ports of Colachel, Yeddowa and Vilinjam. Cottadilly was ceded to the English on 10th January 1731 as satisfaction for the murder of a Chief of Anjengo and his followers. During the wars of the Carnatic, Anjengo was useful as a depôt for military stores and as the point from which the first news of outward-bound ships reached Madras. In 1792, the town was reported to be in hopeless decline. In 1809, during the disturbances in Travancore, the roadstead was completely blockaded, and in the following year the post of Commercial resident was abolished and the station made subordinate to the Political resident at Trivandrum. It has now a forsaken appearance. The ruins of a fort and flagstaff are still to be seen on the coast. A British factory and some old monuments further bespeak its former affluence and present declension. The most ancient monument is dedicated to the memory of the wife of J. Braburn, Esq., Commodore of Anjengo. On a glass panel is inscribed the name of John Tollor, first British resident, 1777. The old tombs of former English officials and their families are interesting. The historian, Robert Orme, was born at Anjengo in 1728. He was the son of a physician attached to the Anjengo factory. Eliza Draper the object of Sterne's rhapsodies was the wife of a chief of Anjengo and lived at the station. There are two Roman catholic churches. The population mostly fish. One-third of Friday's haul goes to the church. Lemon-grass oil and coir yarn are manufactured at Anjengo. The coir yarn turned out in Anjengo is superior to that made elsewhere on the coast. Exports are coir, pepper, and bamboos.—"c" Lake; Travancore state; Trivandrum division, Cherankeel tal. Receives the Attingal or Vaumanapooram river and is formed chiefly by its waters, connected with the sea by a narrow bar. Its extreme length is 12 miles, extreme breadth ½ of a mile. Its area is 8 square miles.——Anjikeimal (അഞ്ചിക്കൈമാൾ - añchikkaimal, Mal.). From (añchu, mal. five + kaimal, mal. chief, title). Village; Cochin state, Canyanore tal. Suburb of Ernacolum. So called in memory of five chiefs who formerly shared the surrounding country. Large regularly built market. Considerable trade, chiefly in hands of Jews and Concanies.

ANJALY (अञ्जलि - añjali, San.). From (añj, san. to prepare). Double handful. Measure of capacity. 12 mooshties = 1 anjaly; 4 anjalies = 1 prastam [alavay, 3f]. Approximate actual value, 1 anjaly = 28 cubic inches. Same as Coodavam. Compare Mal. nauzhy, Tam. oyak.

ANJEER (उदुम्बर - udumbara, San.; شجر انجیر - shajarianjír, Ar. and Pers.; انجیر کا جھاڑ - anjírkájhár, Hind. and Dec.; انجیر - anjir, Malay; ಶೀಮೆಅತ್ತಿ - shímeatti, Can.; సీమఅత్తి - símaatti, Tel.; ശീമയത്തി - shímayatti, Mal.; රට අත්තික්කා - rataattikká, Singh.; சீமையத்தி - shímaiyatti, Tam.). Title from malay. San. from (ud, san. prefix of superiority + ambara, san. sky); extending to heavens, from its tallness. Ar. from (shajar, ar. tree + anjír, ar. fig). Hind. from (anjír, ar. fig + jhár, hind. tree). Can., &c., from (shíme, can. foreign + atti, can. fig tree). Singh. from (rata, singh. foreign + atti, singh. fig tree, ficus glomerata, miq.). Tam. also (ténatti), meaning honey + fig tree. Hebrew teenah. Greek ἐρινεὸς or later σύκη. The European fig tree. Botanically Ficus [atty] carica, linn., moraceæ [vricsham, 121]. A deciduous tree, 15 to 20 feet in height, with large rough leaves, forming a handsome mass of foliage. Imported and moderately successful. By incisions bark yields an acrid and caustic milk, containing a considerable quantity of India rubber. Uses of fruit are familiar.

ANJEL (അഞ്ചൽ - añchal, Mal.). A relay; so letter post, which is carried by relays [anchey].

ANJELY (ആഞ്ഞിലി - áññali, Mal.). Same as wild jack. Cf. Antiaris saccidora (arayáññali), half jack; Oroxylum indicum (payyáññali), soft jack.

ANJOOM (انجم - anjum, Hind.). Stars.——Anjooman (انجمن - anjuman, Hind.). Galaxy of stars. Association.

ANKAM (അങ്കം - ankam, Mal.). Challenge. In Malabar, a duel, formerly frequent among the Nayar race. These combats arose from private feuds. A preparation and training for twelve years preceded the actual fight in order to qualify the combatants in the use of their weapons. They were not necessarily the principals in the quarrel, generally their champions. These undertook to defend the cause they had taken up till they were killed. Source of revenue to the local rajah, each combatant paying for the privilege of fighting [maryauday].

ANKAPULLY (అనకాపల్లె - anakápalle,* Tel.). From (anaka, san. small + palle, tel. village).——(1) Division; Vizagapatam district; area 310 square miles; population 135,147; language Teloogoo. ANNA (آنہ - ánah, Hind.; ಆಣೆ - ane, Can.; అణా - aná, Tel.; അണ - ana, Mal.; அணா - aná, Tam.). One-sixteenth; either of a rupee or of a measure of capacity or length. A half anna share is $\frac{1}{32}$; a quarter anna share is $\frac{1}{64}$. Sixteen annas denotes the whole. Four annas' interest denotes 300 per cent. per annum; for this is 25 per cent. per month, by which time interest is always here reckoned. No coin of this dimension is current. But there are copper pieces representing the half and quarter anna, and the pie, which is the twelfth part; and there are silver pieces of the value of two, four, and eight annas [naunyam, 2e]. As superficial measure it is sometimes subdivided into 16 chittahs as in North arcot, or four quarters or $\frac{1}{64}$th parts as in South arcot [alavay, 2].

ANNAM (अन्न - anna, San.). From (ad, san. to eat). Food.——Anna bhaidy (कासीस - kásísa, San.; هیرا کشیش - hírákashish, Hind.; அன்னபேதி - annabéthi, Tam.). Drav. all same. San. from (káshi, san. benares + ísha, san. lord); shiva, the lord of benares. Hind. from (hará, hind. green + kasís, hind. sulphus ferri). Tam. from (anna, san. food + bhédí, san. solvent). Sulphate of Iron. Otherwise Green copperas. The solution is called Green vitriol [toottam]. Ferri sulphas, ferri vitriolatum, sal martis, of chemists. When pure it is transparent, of a fine bright, though not very deep, grass green color, and of a nauseous astringent taste, accompanied with a kind of sweetness; wholly soluble in water; made by subjecting iron wire to the action of dilute sulphuric acid, and evaporating the solution to crystallisation. As a native drug, powerful chalybeate tonic, astringent, emmenagogue, antiperiodic and anthelmintic; in large doses poisonous. Locally applied, astringent and stimulant. Very ancient medicine [ospitry, veidyan]. Used also in dyeing, tanning, painting, &c.——Anna daunam (अन्नदान - annadána, San.). From (above + dána, san. gift). Charity of rice-giving.——Annadaunaputty (அன்னதானப்பட்டி - annathánappatti, Tam. annadánapati*). From (annathánan, tam. name of the founder + patti, tam. village). Zemindarry, Village; Salem dist., Salem tal.; pop. 187; acres 5,662; lat. of village 11° 39′ long. 78° 11′; from Salem W.S.W. 2 miles.

Principal village in Mittah of same name included within Salem municipality. Peshcush Rs. 3,790.——Annam bhatt (अन्नम्भट्ट - annambhatta, San.). From (above + bhatta, san. lord). A Madhya cavy. Logician born in Garikipaud, near Chintapully, about A.D. 1500. He studied at Condaveed. Wrote Tarca sangraham or compendium of the old system of logic of the Nyauyam school.——Annapoornay (अन्नपूर्णा - annapúrná, San.). From (above + púrna, san. filled). Otherwise Anna devatay, Annay. δημήτηρ of Greeks; Ceres of Romans; Isis or orient deity of Egyptians. Probably connected with Anna perenna of the Romans. A beneficent form of the Hindoo Parvaty. Not a Tamulian deity. She is depicted as of a deep yellow color, standing or sitting on the lotus or water lily. She has two arms, and in one hand holds a spoon, in the other a dish. In her dress she is decorated like the other modern images of Parvaty. Annapoornay is a household goddess. Her festivals take place in the early part of the increase of the moon in the month Cheitram [mausam] or about april and those of the Roman goddess took place on the Ides of march. In the hymn addressed to her by the rishy Agastyan, she is personified as pitoo or material food. She is really the harvest deified [matam].

ANNAN (ಅಣ್ಣ - anna, Can.; అన్న - anna, Tel.; அண்ணன் - annan, Tam.). In Malayalam is archaic. From (annal, tam. greatness). Elder brother. Suffix of respect added to proper names, as Cooppannan, Ramannan. Common prefix in comp. of 2nd or pers. names [peyar]; see below. Too. from (amrita, san. nectar + káyi, too. fruit + mara, too. tree). Tel. means seeta's fruit tree. Mal. from (átta, mal. mexican name of anona + chakka, mal. artocarpus integrifolia, willd.); from appearance of fruit. Tam. from (sítá, san. the goddess); san. here also means furrow and the fruit is furrowed on rind. Hind. also (átá). Malay also (srikaya), meaning lutchmy + fruit. Can. also (amritamara), meaning nectar + tree. Mal. also (átta). Title otherwise Atah, Custard-apple, Custard jack, Nectar fruit, Pimple fruit, Seeta's fruit, Sugar apple, Sweet sop. Botanically Anona squamosa, linn., anonaceæ [vricsham, 4]. Shrub or small tree, 15–20 feet; leaves oblong, or oblong-lanceolate, glabrous, pellucid dotted, with heavy smell; calyx three-sepalled; petals six in a double row; exterior ones narrow lanceolate, three-cornered near the apex; inner ones scarcely any; peduncles axillary; flowers whitish green; flowering in march-april; domesticated everywhere. Fruit about size of an orange, full of black seeds, each of which is covered with a yellow edible pulp of delicate flavor. Originally from s. america. Ripe fruit medicinally a maturant when bruised and mixed with salt, applied to tumours; root drastic purgative. Fruit more delicate flavor than bullock's-heart; perfectly free from acid. Seeds contain acrid principle fatal to insects; dried unripe fruit, powdered and mixed with gram flour, used to destroy vermin in hair. Wood soft, close-grained.——Netted anona (लवली - lavalí, San.; रामफली - rámap'halí, Mahr.; गोयिंचेअंदन - góyinchéandana, Conc.; لونا - launá, Hind.; رام پهل كا جهاڑ -rámphalkajhár, Dec.; نونا - nona, Malay; ರಾಮಫಲ - rámap'hala, Can.; రామాఫలముచెట్టు - rámáp'halamuchettu, Tel.; രാമസീത്താമരം - rámaççittámaram, Mal.; ආත්තා - áttá, Singh.; இராமசீத்தா - irámasittá, Tam.). Title from appearance of fruit. San. from (lá, san. to cut); from sour fruit. Mahr. from (ráma, san. the hero + p'hala, san. fruit). Hind. from (laun, hind. salt). ANOO (अनु - anu, San.). Prefix, meaning after or with.——Anoobhavam (अनुभव - anubhava, San.; അനുഭവം - anubhavam, Mal.). From (bhú, san. to be). Enjoyment. Grant of hereditary land in Malabar, either rent free or at a pepper-corn rent, in reward of service. Also a present of betel or a cocoanut from the proprietor at the time of executing a deed of transfer of a garden or plantation to the person to whom the transfer is made as symbolical of the character of the land made over. See vol. I, 112.——Anoobhavaumritam (अनुभवामृत - anubhavámrita, San.). From (bhú, san. to be + amrita, san. nectar). A Veiraugya treatise. Exists only in Dravidian languages. It contains a treatise on the Oopanishad, a sort of exposition of pantheism; shows that the existence of a material world cannot be proved, and that all is Mauyam; and recommends retirement from domestic life and meditation with a view to the soul's purification and final beatitude.——Anoobhogam (अनुभोग - anubhóga, San.). From (bhuj, san. to eat). Same as Anoobhavam.——Anooloma (अनुलोम - anulóma, San.). From (lóman, san. hair). Means born in natural order. By Sanscrit theorists applied to those born of a higher-caste male and lower-caste female; as for instance a barber, who is supposed to be the offspring of a Bramin man and a Veisya woman. Opposed to Pratiloma [q.v.]. The six Anooloma castes are as follows. Three born of Bramins, by Cshatriya women and known as Moordhauvasicta, by Veisya women and known as Ambashta, by Shoodra women and known as Nishauda or Paurashava. Two born of Cshatriyas, by Veisya women and known as Mauhishya, by Shoodra women and known as Oogra. One born of Veisyas, by Shoodra women and known as Carana [jauty].——Anoomaunam (अनुमान - anumána, San.). From (má, san. to measure). Inference; one of the four processes, according to Nyauya philosophy, by which the mind arrives at true knowledge. The other three are pratyacsham or sense perception, oopamaunam or comparison, and shabdam or verbal testimony.——Anooswauram (अनुस्वार - anusvára, San.). From (svar, san. sound). The nasal sound marked by a dot above the line. Much use is made in the Dravidian languages, especially in Tamul and Teloogoo, of the nasals ṅ, ñ, ṇ, n, and m for the purpose of euphonising the harder consonants of each varga. This is called nunnation. All the nasals are regarded by native grammarians as modifications of the sound of m, the nature of each modification being determind by the manner in which m is affected by succeeding consonants. In Sanscrit the nasal consonants constitute the final characters of each of the five vargams. In Teloogoo and Canarese one and the same character, which is called anooswauram, is used to represent the whole of the nasal modification [bhaushay].

Title otherwise Abiny, Balewort, Carnation flowered poppy, Cough capsule, Garden poppy, Joan silver-pin, Khaskas, Maw seed, Peony poppy, White poppy. Botanically Papaver [aphainam] somniferum, linn., papaveraceæ [vricsham, 8]. Alias Papaver album, indehiscens, nigrum, officinale, opiiferum.—"a" Herbaceous, annual, 2-3 feet; sepals two, deciduous; petals four; stem smooth, glaucous; leaves amplexicaul, repand, cut and toothed, teeth somewhat obtuse; capsules obovate or glabrous; peduncles drooping; seeds numerous, small, white; flower generally white, but to be found mixture of rose, lilac, or violet and white; naturalized by cultivation in india.— "b" All parts of the poppy abound in a narcotic milky juice, which is partially extracted, together with a quantity of mucilage, by decoction; seeds are not considered narcotic in europe, here in a slight degree; the mature capsules are called poppy-heads, devoid of odour, but of slightly bitter taste; milky inspissated juice of the plant is opium, derived by scratching immature capsules and not from foliage.—"c" Two kinds of opium are found in general commerce, the Turkey and East indian. The former is solid, compact, and transparent, somewhat brittle, of a dark-brown color. The latter has much less consistence, being sometimes not thicker than tar and always ductile; in color it is more dark, nauseous, but less bitter; it is cheaper, and not so strong as the turkey; it is often adulterated with oil of sesamum, cow-dung, the aqueous extract of the capsules, gum-arabic, tragacanth, aloes, and other articles. Good opium is not perfectly soluble in water, very inflammable and burns with a clear flame; its value consists in the quantity of the alkaloid morphine which it contains; this morphine is obtained in crystals from opium treated with alcohol and ammonia; the best opium contains from 8 to 9 per cent. of morphine. The seeds yield by expression a bland and very valuable oil, of a pale golden color, equal to that of the olive; by exposure to heat of sun in shallow vessels, it is rendered perfectly colorless.—"d" The use of the drug opium was transmitted by the arabs to the nations of the east, and in the first instance to the persians; there are no ancient chinese or sanscrit names for opium; the introduction of opium into india was connected with the spread of islamism, and may have been favored by the mahomedan prohibition of wine; barbosa, who visited calicut in 1511, mentions it among the more valuable drugs, imported from aden or cambay; the opium trade is one of the monopolies of government; great quantities are annually shipped to china; foreign opium is only admitted at a heavy duty.—"e" For cultivation the poppy plant requires a rich soil, plenty of manuring, and frequent irrigation; dew has the effect of facilitating the flow of juice, and, though increasing it in quantity, renders it of a darker color and more liquid than otherwise; a dry state of the atmosphere, accompanied by strong winds, is a favorable condition for elaborating the juice in the capsules; the practice in collecting it consists in making incisions into the capsules when the dew has evaporated, collecting the juice in pots, &c., and working it into masses or cakes. Opium is not made in southern india, except in very small quantities in mysore; chiefly imported from malwah.—"f" The pounded herb, dry capsule, seed, oil, and concrete juice of the immature capsule or opium are all medicinal. The heads or capsules possess anodyne properties; chiefly employed, boiled in water, as fomentations to inflamed or ulcerated surfaces; the syrup prepared from them with inspissated decoction used as an anodyne for children and to allay cough, &c. Veidyans prescribe seeds in diarrhœa. Oil from seeds also used as a demulcent medicine. The opium is in medicine primarily stimulant; secondarily narcotic, anodyne, and antispasmodic; and in overdoses a powerful poison; as an external application opium valuable in various rheumatic, neuralgic, &c., affections. The plant gives to pharm. the nearly ripe capsules, papaveris capsulæ, sedative and anodyne; preparations, decoctum papaveris, extractum papaveris, syrupus papaveris; also opium in numerous forms, hydrochlorate of morphia, one of the contained alkaloids; narcotine a contained neutral crystallizable body. The veidyans use opium freely in medicine; they give it to procure sleep, shorten cold fit of an intermittent fever in lockjaw, and to afford ease in certain stages of dysentery; they give it also externally, mixed with arrack, in conjunction with benzoin, bdellium, aloes, and ginger in rheumatic affections. The stimulant effects of opium are most apparent from small doses, which increase the energy of the mind and the frequency of the pulse; these effects are succeeded by languor and lassitude; in excessive doses it proves a violent and fatal poison; by habit, the effects of opium on the body are remarkably diminished; acetic acid is a perfect counter-poison for opium.—"g" The seed, the maw seed given to cage birds, has a sweet taste, used parched by the lower class of natives as a food, also much used by sweetmeat-makers. An intoxicating liquor is formed by macerating or infusing the poppy heads with water and sweetening with molasses; this is drunk by fakeers and others at festivals. Oil used for lamps and is prized by artists; also used as salad oil for cooking purposes; after the oil is extracted, the cake is sold as a food to the poorer classes. An account of the commercial treatment of opium will be found at vol. I, 456.—"h" Varieties very numerous. The special quality called doodhy opium or milk opium coming from bengal is very soft, is dark in color, and contains a large quantity of milky juice; $1\frac{1}{2}$ grains of this are equal to 1 of Malwah.

ARAM (அறம் - aram, Tam.). From (aru, tam. to decide); prescribed duty. Virtue. Mankind according to Tamulian authors were created for the purpose of enjoying one or other of four objects; Aram or virtue, Porool or wealth, Inbam or pleasure, and Veed or eternal happiness in another world. Aram itself has eight constituent parts:—viz., absence of scepticism; absence of covetousness; absence of disgust; absence of perplexity; absence of censoriousness; aiding the impoverished; elucidating the nature of charity; abundant love. Aram is elsewhere said to be of two kinds, viz., Illaram or domestic life, and Tooravaram or ascetic life; in the former, thirty-two acts of charity being prescribed. Arattay cauppone, from (káppón, tam. he who guards), is Ayenaur.——Arantaungy (அறந்தாங்கி - arandángi, Tam. arantángi*). Bounded north by Wallajahpett talook, from which separated by Palaur; east by Conjeeveram talook, Chingleput district; south by Wandiwash talook and Arnee jagheer; west by Vellore talook. Almost entirely undiversified plain. On west Vellore hills run into it for three or four miles, and in extreme east near Maumandore tank a few insignificant hills are found. All these elevations are bare and rocky without any jungle growth. Soil poor, being red and black clay mixed with large proportion of sand or gravel, and as there are no local jungles, the land does not get much manure. Beyond limestone, there are hardly any minerals, even building stone being scarce. Agriculture, weaving, and tanning are the only important industries. The last is with Lubbays, chiefly in Visauram. Tanned hides thence exported to Madras. Weavers are in forty villages, in which they have 1,700 looms. Chief weaving villages are Trivettore, Hasanampett, and Vencataroyenpett, producing ordinary country cloths. Large rivers are Palaur and Cheyaur. Latter only skirts talook. Palaur anicut feeds tanks of eighty villages, but that across Cheyaur does not benefit this talook. A few small streams rising in Vellore hills eventually fall into Cheyaur. Largest tank is Maumandore. On right bank of Palaur, 5 miles from Arcot railway station. European station is Ranipett in Wallajahpett talook on left bank of Palaur, 3 miles from railway station, formerly a cantonment. Formerly known as old Arcot to distinguish it from Ranipett, which was then generally called Arcot. Athonday raised temples at Conjeeveram and five other places, and introduced cultivation. These were the six forests, meaning six fanes in the forest. The following is the legend connected with the later foundation of Arcot town. Nulla bomma naidoo and Timma naidoo, on a hunting excursion from Penoocondah, coming to the spot saw a hare chase a tiger and seize it by the throat. They considered this marvel to be auspicious and cut down the forest and built a stone-fort. Arcot is first mentioned in authentic history in the beginning of eighteenth century when it was chosen as seat of Mahomedan government of Carnatic instead of Jinjee. Davood khan improved the fort and laid out the town in eighteen streets with names after distinguished commanders. Some of these streets still exist. In 1712, in order to facilitate operations against Mysore, Saudat oollah khan, commander of the Delhi forces, transferred his headquarters to Arcot. In 1740 the Mahratta army of Hojy bhonslay overran the district. Dost ally was killed in battle and Arcot became the centre of operations. Sufder ally, who succeeded Dost ally, was murdered in 1742. His successor, Mahomed sayeed shared the same fate in 1744. During the next seven years Arcot changed hands as many times; but after its capture and defence by Clive in 1751, an English garrison occupied the fort. In 1758 it surrendered to the French under Lally. Two efforts made in 1759 to regain possession failed. In 1760 Colonel Coote bombarded and captured the fort. For the next twenty years it remained in hands of Nawaub mahomed ally, the ally of the British. In 1780 it surrendered to Hyder ally who held it till 1783. Tippoo sultan succeeded to Hyder's conquests, and after destroying the fortifications abandoned it. Included in the cession of the Carnatic to the English in 1801. The Nawaubs of Carnatic actually resided here until the time of Mahomed ally, who removed to Madras and was followed by the wealthy Mahomedan families attending his court. Its large trade continued thereafter for some years, and much gold lace and chintz were manufactured and sold until Wallajahpett began to draw away its commerce. For many years now it has been a second-rate town, but its importance at one time may be judged of by the fact that it had 360 makauns or charitable institutions where fakeers were fed at the expense of the Nawaub and his nobles. The old fort of historical renown is now portion of the town, covered with houses and gardens. The thick masonry wall with which it was faced called the Shaharpanah or Defender of the city, had five gates, the chief of which was the Delhi gate, leading out upon the bed of the Palaur. This still stands. Tradition asserts that the chamber over the gate was a favorite resort of Clive. The tomb of Nawaub saudat oollah khan, between the palace and the fort, is a domed structure, about 50 feet in height, and built of green stone. The Jumma musjid was built by Zoolfacar khan and added to by both Saudat oollah khan and Anwar ood deen. A fakeer Tippoo owlia's tomb is regarded with veneration. Hyder selected this fakeer as his patron saint, and named his son after him. Beyond the exportation of rice to the west coast, there is no trade, and except manufacture of bangles, no special industry.

ARDHAM (अर्ध - ardha, San.). Half.——Ardha bindoo (अर्धबिन्दु - ardhabindu, San.). From (bindoo, san. dot). Semicircle in Teloogoo archaic writing. This was sounded as the last consonant in the French word façon, son. Occasionally the whole circle is used with the same purpose; this still remains [anooswauram].——Ardha naury (अर्धनारी - ardhanárí, San.). From (nári, san. female). A form of Shiva and Parvaty which on the right-hand half is Shiva and on the left-hand half is Parvaty. Symbol to indicate union of the active deity with passive matter; whence creation. This form belongs more to Northern

Title from (atakka, mal. betel-nut). San. from (pú, san. purify); clears mouth. Ar. from (shajr, ar. tree + faufal, ar. betel-nut). Pers. from (darakht, pers. tree + púpal, pers. betel-nut). Hind. from (supárí, hind. betel-nut + jhár, hind. tree). Can. from (atakka, mal. closed fruit). Tel. from (púga, san. areca palm + chettu, tel. tree). Oor. from (guaváka, san. filth-remover, areca palm). Mal. from (kramuka, san. areca palm). Tam. from sanscrit. San. also (guváka), meaning filth-remover; (kramuka), meaning attracting tree. Mahr. also (póp'hala), from arabic. Pers. also (shajarigirdchob), meaning round wood tree. Tel. also (vakkachettu), meaning betel-nut + tree; (kólapóka), meaning straight + areca palm. Mal. also (atakka), meaning closed fruit; (kavunnu); (kamuku). Tam. also (kamugu); (pákkuppanai), meaning areca nut + palmyra tree, borassus flabelliformis, linn. Title otherwise Betel-nut palm because its nut eaten with betel [q.v.] leaf, Betel palm, Cabbage tree, Catechu palm, Drunken date, Goovauk, Medicinal cabbage tree, Pauk tree, Penang palm, Soopaury. The nut is the Avellana indica of old writers; common name for the preparation of this in commerce being Kalipauk. Botanically Areca catechu linn., palmaceæ [vricsham, 149]. Generic name from (atakka, mal. nut). Alias Areca faufel. Faufel, compare arabic.—"a" Palm, 40–80 feet; spathe double; spadix much branched; male flowers numerous, above the female, sessile; calyx one-lobed, three-cornered, three-partite; petals three, oblong, smooth; stamens two-partite, inserted round the base of the style; female flowers one to three at the base of each ramification, sessile; calyx five-lobed, flowers small, white, fragrant, flowering in april, may. Is of remarkably erect growth with a slender, cylindrical, annulate stem, the inner part of which is generally hollow, and a tuft of feathering leaves at the extreme top; the nuts hang in bunches just below the leaves; native of cochin-china and malay islands and here cultivated; the most graceful of palms. The nuts vary greatly in size, and their quality depends solely on the amount of astringent matter they contain, a point which is judged by cutting them; if the medullary portion which intersects the astringent part be small, the nut is considered of good quality; but when the medullary portion is in large quantity, the nut is considered more mature, and not possessing so much astringency is esteemed less valuable. The ordinary nuts have a thin brown rind and in size are intermediate between walnuts and hazel-nuts; their general substance is of a faint oily grey color, thickly marked with curly streaks, of dark brown or black; they occur in the market sliced and in whole nuts, also boiled and raw, or split and dried hastily over a fire, or dried slowly in that manner. The nuts yield two astringent kinds of cutch [q.v.], respectively called in Tamul cuttacaumboo for chewing with betel-leaf and causcutty for medicine. Areca nut when in bulk as cargo, generates an excessive heat.—"b" Unlike the cocoanut palm the areca palm will thrive at high regions and at a distance from the sea. The best here grows in Travancore, Malabar, and the Nuggur division of Mysore. In the Portuguese and Dutch period great quantities of areca nuts were exported. The palm is cultivated in sandy clay; best on sides of hills and margin of rivers and with moist climate; seed first sown in nursery in coombham or february and meenam [mausam] or march on w. coast; paddy husk is spread to prevent white ants; after transplanting, plants are daily watered for three or four years, soil being stirred very frequently; bears ten or twelve years after; nuts are gathered by climbing the trees; the cooly after gathering sways the tree till it touches the next and shifts to that without descending. The nuts are collected while the fruit is tender, and the husk or outer pod being removed, the kernel, a round fleshy mass remains, which is boiled in water; in the first boiling of the nut, when properly done, the water becomes red, thick, and starch-like, and this on removal of the kernel is evaporated into a substance like gambier or cutch; the boiled kernels being then removed, sliced, and dried, the red catechu-like substance is rubbed on them, and when dried again in the sun they become of a shining black color, and are ready for use; both nut in the pod and sliced nuts are exported; sometimes whole nuts are similarly treated.—"c" Dried nut is medicinally a nervine tonic and emmenagogue; the cutch is powerful astringent and slight antiperiodic useful in gargle; both these in pharm. non-official; the dry expanded petioles serve as ready-made splints for fractures.—"d" The nut is one of the constituents of the famous masticatory, the betel-nut of the east; paun or the leaf of the piper betel, and shell-lime, are mixed with slices of the nut and chewed together; the lime gives a deep orange or red color to the coloring matter of the nut, and thus dyes the lips and tongue; this preparation strengthens the gums, sweetens the breath and improves digestion; the nut for this purpose is used in a young and tender state, or is prepared by boiling in water, sometimes combined with aromatics as camphor or cardamom; the effect of betel, when chewed, is due to the mutual reaction of the areca nut, betel leaf, lime, and saliva; the compound betel is much used for ceremonial purposes when any person of consideration visits another.—"e" A handsome bead is made by polishing the nut; a decoction of nut with cedrela toona, roxb., gives a red dye; the charcoal afforded by burning the nut in a close vessel is sold as a tooth-powder; the nut is also made into necklaces, rulers, tops of walking-sticks, and other small objects. With the tough, fibrous vegetable covering, or spatha, stretching over the blossom of the tree, the natives make vessels for holding water, arrack, &c.; it is also made into buckets, caps, dishes, and small umbrellas; the inside part readily separates from the other; it looks like fine, white china paper, and can be written on with ink.—"f" Wood used for furniture, trenails, bows, spear handles, and for scaffolding poles; very elastic; also used as the ridge-tree in building native houses; hard and peculiarly streaked, and so used in turnery for small ornamental work; can be split into laths.—"g" On the mountains of travancore and malabar grows the wild areca, seaforthia dicksonii, mars.; of this the poorer classes eat the nuts as a substitute for the common betel-nut, but no other part of the tree is employed for any useful purpose. There is a species areca alba from bourbon.—"h" There is a Tamul proverb:—செத்தவன் கையிலே வெற்றிலே பாக்குக் கொடுத்த சம்பந்தம்—"Like putting "betel and areca nut into the hand of the dead;" the giving of betel and nut being one of the marriage ceremonies. There is another:—ஊண்பாக்கு ஒழிய வீண்பாக்கு ஆகாது—"Betel is not good except after food." There is another:—வாழை வடக்கு ஈனும் வான் கமுகு தெற்கு ஈனும்—"Plantain trees put forth their bunches to the north, and "areca nut trees to the south." And another:—கை காய்த் தாற் கமுகு காய்க்கும்—"If the hand grow hard with water-"ing it, the areca palm will bear fruit;" because it needs careful watering. The Tamul poets compare this palm to an "arrow "shot from heaven."

ARFA (عرفه - arafah, Hind.). From (arfát, ar. the hill); hill near Mecca. Hence ninth day of Buckreed, as hill then visited by pilgrims. Tenth of Buckreed is the festival. Eve of Shab e baraut also.

ARGELLIA (നാളികേരം - nálikéram, Mal.). An old erroneous transliteration for the cocoanut.

ARHAR (ارهر - arhar, Hind.). From (ádhakí, san. dholl). Same as Dholl.

ARHAT (अर्हत् - arhat, San.). From (arh, san. to deserve). Worthy. The name given by Jeinas to supreme being. His popular name is Jinan. Like deities of ordinary pantheon, has 1,008 sacred names [matam].

ARIANCOOPPAM (அரியங்குப்பம் - ariyanguppam, Tam.). From (ariyan, tam. sage, epithet of shiva or vishnu + kuppam, tam. hamlet). South arcot dist., lat. 11° 53′; long. 79° 51′; from Cuddalore N.N.E. 13 miles; from Pondicherry S.S.W. 3 miles; from Tindivanam S.S.E. 26 miles; from the sea W. 1½ mile. In French territory. The fort and stream formed an important part of the outer defences of Pondicherry in the operations of 1746–60, between which dates they changed hands more than once. Captured by Admiral Boscawen in 1748.

ARIMOW (ارمو - arimau, Malay). Tiger. Compare:—Felis bengalensis (árimauákar), scandent plant tiger, because long and slender; Felis pardus (arimautálap), perfume box tiger, because spotted.

ARIYALORE (அரியலூர் - ariyalúr,* Tam.). From (ariyal, tam. toddy + úr, tam. village). Zemindarry, Town, Divisional head-quarters, District moonsif's station, General deputy collector's division; Trichinopoly dist., Oodayarpolliem tal.; pop. 6,730; lat. of town 11° 08′; long. 79° 8′; from Madras S.S.W. 156 miles; from Moosiry E.N.E. 44 miles; from Oodayarpolliem W.S.W. 15 miles; from Shreerungam N.E. 32 miles; from Trichinopoly N.E. 34 miles. History is exactly the same as for Oodayarpolliem. In 1871 twenty-seven villages were sold in satisfaction of debts incurred by the zemindar, and in 1873 the remaining thirty villages were sold. The estate is now held by a number of petty proprietors, who have no sunnud. The town is healthy. Connected by metalled roads with Perambalore and Keelpaloovore. Residence of the zemindar. His palace is almost in ruins. Two old Shiva and Vishnoo temples. Cattle and general market on Sunday.

ARJ (عرض - arz, Hind.). From Arabic; means breadth. Measurement of heap of grain round the bottom.

ARJOONAN (अर्जुन - arjuna, San.). From (arj, san. to be white). The friend of Krishnan and the principal Pandava hero in the war for the succession to the throne of Hastinapooram, detailed in the Mahabhaurat [q.v.]. To him Krishnan made the revelations contained in the episode called the Bhagavat geeta [q.v.]. According to a southern legend, Arjoonan took a pilgrimage from Telingana to Madura and Tinnevelly, and thence back to Dwarca. His penance, described in the poem Kirautarjooneeyam, is the subject of a large rock sculpture at Mauvellipore. He did penance in order to obtain the bow called Paushoopataustram, with which he afterwards overcame Dooryodhanan. See vol. I (72). The name Arjoonam is given to the tree White murdah [matam].

ARMEGAM (ஆறுமுகம் - árumugam, Tam.). From (árumugam, tam. proper name). Title otherwise Monapollem. Village, Port, Lighthouse; Nellore dist., Goodoor tal.; acres 238; lat. 13° 54′; long. 80° 15′; from Goodoor S.E. 29 miles; from Madras N. 55 miles; from Nellore S.S.E. 41 miles; from Poody N.N.W. 3 miles; from Toopily S.E. 10 miles. Named after a canoongo Armoogam moodelliar, by whose assistance the first English settlement on the Coromandel coast, consisting of a factory defended by twelve pieces of cannon, was established at this place in 1628. Light mainland, village of Monapollem. Lat. 13° 53′; long. 80° 15′. White; revolving. A flash every 20 seconds. 14 miles range. Visible from all directions seaward. Masonry column, white. Warns vessels off the Armegam shoal, 6 miles off shore. The shoal is about 10 miles long, the shallowest patch is 1¾ fathoms, and lies from 3½ miles to 5½ miles E. by N. of the lighthouse. The still water inside the shoal is called Blackwood's harbour [blackwood's harbour, doogarauzpatam].

ARMINY (ارمنی - armaní, Hind.). From (arman, ar. armenia). Armenian. Total for Presidency about 200. Cf. Carum carui (kamuniarmaní), armenian cumin, caraway; Prunus armeniaca (tuffáhiarmaní), armenian apple, mishmish.

ARMOOGAM (ஆறுமுகம் - árumugam, Tam.). From (áru, tam. six + mukha, san. face). Epithet of Soobramanyan. Hindoo 2nd or pers name [peyar]. Common among nonbramins. Name of a Canoongo near Poolicat, through whose influence the first English factory was formed on the Coromandel coast. See vol. II, 112 [armegam].

ARNAH (ارنا - arná, Hind.). From (aranya, san. forest). Same as Coromandel ailanto.

ARNAM (अरुण - aruna, San.). From (ri, san. to rise). Latin Aurora. Color of the sun-rise. Red [aroonan].——Arnagiry (அருணகிரி - arunagiri, Tam.). From (giri, san. hill). Trinomallee hill. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Arnauchellam (அருணாசலம் - arunásalam, Tam.). From (achala, san. mountain). Trinomallee hill. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].

ARNEE (ஆரணி - árani, Tam. árni*). From (áranam, tam. sacred writing). Title is feminine form and means cauly, the deity.——(1) Jagheer, North arcot. Area 180 square miles. Population 91,730. Language Tamul. Bounded north by Vellore talook; east by Arcot and Wandiwash talooks; south and west by Polore talook. Acquired early in seventeenth century by a Bramin Vadajee bhauscar punt, who accompanied Shahjee in his expedition into the Carnatic. With few interruptions held by his successors upon condition of paying an annual nuzzer of Rs. 10,000, and additional obligations of supporting members of the family, erecting no strong-hold in the country, retaining no military force, and imposing no unauthorised cesses. In 1761 the Nawaub dispossessed the jagheerdar. In 1762 the estate was restored. Again attached in 1771 and not given back till 1789, when Shreenivasa row was placed in possession by the Madras government. The present nuzzer amounts to a little more than Rs. 5,000, reductions on account of moturfa, &c., abandoned by the jagheerdar having been made in 1872. The estate is for the most part flat and open, without much jungle growth. There are three tracts of scrub, the largest in the south near the villages of Mooroogamungalam and Carappore; another on the north between Sirmeilore and Moollandram on the Arcot border; and the third on the west, by Castambaudy, where some 7,000 acres are covered with low trees fit for fuel. The few hills are of slight elevation. The highest are those near Sirmeilore, Poosimully cooppam, and Poottore. These are sparsely wooded and kept under strict conservancy. Besides these there are Devicapooram hill and Vunnaundroog. The soil is chiefly sandy mixed with red clay. There are scarcely any minerals. A little iron sand is found but not used. The principal manufacture is weaving. There are upwards of a thousand looms, distributed among fourteen villages, and producing some 200,000 women's cloths in a year, worth about Rs. 750,000. The best fabrics are woven in Arnee itself. Dyeing of piece-goods and mat-making are also carried on. Superior sort of pottery, glazed and unglazed, is also produced. The Cheyaur or Bauhoodah nuddy cuts off a small portion of the south-east of the jagheer, but the country is chiefly drained by the Seyaur or Camundala nuddy. There is also an extensive flood drain into which many of the tanks overflow and which never fails. The principal tanks are those of Caumacore, Paneiyore, Tirmullay samoodram, and Tutchore. Places of archæological interest:—Arnee, Calpoondy, Caumacore, Chaivore, Devicapooram, Laudambaudy, Maumandore, Moollandram, Moorcanandal, Poonalpaudy, Poondy, Poosimullaycooppam, Poottore, Shamboonarayananellore, Tutchore, Vadagacherry, Vedojeepooram. The leading places in the jagheer are the following.——Arnee (ஆரணி - árani, Tam.). See below.——Cheyaur (చెయ్యేరు - cheyyáru, Tel.). See sep. title.——Colattore (கொளத்தூர் - kolattúr, Tam.). From (kulam, tam. tank + úr, tam. village). Village; pop. 1,604; lat. 12° 44′; long. 79° 11′; from Arnee W.N.W. 10 miles; from Chittore S. 33 miles. Principal village of tributary Jagheer of that name.——Coonnamungalam (குன்னமங்கலம் - kunnamangalam, Tam. kunnamangalam*). From (kunram, tam. hill + mangala, san. prosperity). Village; pop. 2,500; lat. 12° 45′; long. 79° 12′; from Arnee W.N.W. 10 miles; from Chittore S. 32 miles. Large Mussalman mosque.——Coonnatore (குன்னத்தூர் - kunnattúr, Tam.). From (kunram, tam. hill + úr, tam. village). Village; pop. 1,555; lat. 12° 41′; long. 79° 16′; from Arnee W.N.W. 3½ miles; from Chittore S.S.E. 37 miles. On road from Arnee to Vellore. Cavalry station in last century. In neighbourhood is European cemetery.——Devicapooram (தேவிகாப்புரம் - tévigáppuram, Tam.). See sep. title.——Moollandram (முள்ளண்டிறம் - mullandaram, Tam.). From (mullai, tam. a jasmine, jasminum trichotomum, heyne + andaram, tam. temple). Village; pop. 2,307; lat. 12° 47′; long. 79° 18′; from Arnee N. 8½ miles; from Chittore S.S.E. 32 miles. Two old temples.——Poosimullay cooppam (பூசிமலைக்குப்பம் - púshimalaikkuppam, Tam.). From (púshi, tam. to worship + malai, tam. mountain + kuppam, tam. village). Village; pop. 1,152; lat. 12° 47′; long. 79° 17′; from Arnee N.N.W. 8 miles; from Chittore S.S.E. 31 miles. Bungalow of Jagheerdar at foot of hill.——Satyavijayanagaram (சத்தியவிஜயநகரம் - shattiyavijayanagaram, Tam.). See sep. title.——Vinnamungalam (விண்ணமங்கலம் - vinnamangalam, Tam.). From (vin, tam. sky + mangala, san. prosperity). Village; pop. 1,162; lat. 12° 35′; long. 79° 21′; from Arnee S.S.E. 6½ miles; from Chittore S.S.E. 46 miles. Country locks are made here.——(2) Submagistracy, North arcot district. Pay Rs. 70.——(3) Town, Divisional head-quarters, Deputy tahsildar's station; North arcot dist., Arnee jagheer; pop. 11,469; lat. 12° 40′; long. 79° 19′; height 499 feet; from Chittore S.S.E. 40 miles; from Madras W.S.W. 74 miles; from Ranipett S.S.W. 18 miles; from Tripatty S. 67 miles; from Vellore 20 miles S.S.E. On the right bank of the Seyaur. Formerly a strong fortress, now much decayed. Once a station for European troops. The old fort, built by Ganapaty royel, brother of Krishna deva royel. Its site, including the glacis, does not belong to the Jagheerdar. In 1751 Arnee was stormed by Clive, when pursuing Rajah sahib; and under its walls, in 1782, Sir Eyre Coote defeated the troops of Lally and Hyder ally, capturing the fort with all the military stores lodged in it by the enemy. Here also the British army concentrated for the campaign of 1790. Noted for its muslins made of a mixture of silk and cotton and much worn by wealthy Bramin women. The celebrated Arnee muslins however are not made here but in Chingleput district not far from Maderpauk. Fair every Friday.——(4) Village; Chingleput dist., Ponnairy tal.; pop. 3,989; acres 1,865; lat. 13° 20′; long. 80° 09′; from Ponnairy W. 7½ miles; from Sydapett N.N.W. 23 miles; from the sea W. 17 miles. Old Shiva temple with inscriptions.

ÁRNOOTTIMULLAY (அருணாட்டிமலை - arunáttimalai, Tam.). From (aran, tam. shiva + úttu, tam. spring + malai, tam. mountain); as being the source of Vasishtanuddy passing by Bailore temple. Sanscrit name (arunódayagiri), meaning Aroonan, the dawn deity + rising + hill. Hill; Salem dist., Salem tal.; lat. 11° 47′; long. 78° 24′; from Salem N.E. 15 miles. Inhabited by hill-men.

AROOGAN (அருகன் - arugan, Tam.). From (arh, san. to deserve). Tamul of Arhat.

AROONAN (अरुण - aruna, San.). From (ri, san. to rise). Latin Aurora. The dawn. Mythologically the charioteer of the sun [matam].

AROOPATT MOOVER (அறுபத்துமூவர் - arubattumúvar, Tam.). From (aru, tam. six + pattu, tam. ten + mú, tam. three). The sixty-three gods. Popularly sixty-three Nauyanaur or Nauyanmaur. They were born in various places and lived in different times. In literature they are known as Tirtondar or holy servants; also Gooroomoorties or incarnations of the gooroo or Shiva in Augama philosophy; also Shivanadiyaur or servants of Shiva. These were the sixty-three champions of Sheiva faith against the heretical Jains. Their lives are given in the Tirtondar pooraunam, popularly Periyapooraunam, by Shekkilaun; otherwise Bhacta vilausam or life of devotees. The foremost are four viz.:—Appan, Maunica vauchacan, Sambandhan and Soondran. The following is the complete list:—Amarneety, Appan, Appoothy, Atibhactan, Calarchingan, Caleiyan, Calicauman, Calicumban, Caliyan, Canamboollan, Caricaul ammay, Caudavar cone, Cauriyan, Chandeshwaran, Cherma ARRACK (आसव - ásava, San.; شراب - sharáb, Hind.; ಸಾರಾಯಿ - sáráya, Can.; సారాయి - sáráyi, Tel.; ചാരായം - cháráyam, Mal.; சாராயம் - sháráyam, Tam.). Title from (arak, ar. exudation). San. from (á, san. intensive prefix + su, san. to distil). Hind. from (sharb, ar. to drink). Drav. from (sára, san. essence). Mal. also (rákku), corr. from Arabic. Tam. also (arakku), corr. from Arabic. Old form, Rack. Cf. Turkish rauky or spirit from grape-skins. Cf. French slang word riquiqui for brandy. Literally essence, spirit. Anglo-indian term, not native, for distilled spirits. Arracum spiritus tenuior of chemists. The finest sort of arrack was formerly brought into Southern india from Batavia, where it was called kneip; this article was formerly a source of great revenue to the Dutch; it is distilled from malted rice. Another superior kind still comes from Colombo in Ceylon. This spirit is distilled from palm-juices, mostly cocoanut. Its average percentage of alcohol is 42. About 2·4 fluid ounces would contain one ounce of absolute alcohol by weight. What is called in Southern india, puttay arrack or pariah liquor or country liquor, and which is made in great abundance in every part of the country, is distilled from a fermented solution of jaggery, the coarse sugar obtained from the juice of the date, cocoanut, palmyra and other palms, or from the sugar-cane. In its preparation different barks such as Acacia leucophlæa, wild., Acacia ferruginea, dec., &c., are added to the hot sugar-solution, precipitating albuminous matters which would otherwise putrify and communicate a nauseous flavor; and also increasing by one-sixth the quantity of alcohol produced. Hence the name puttay. Sulphuric acid is sometimes used to assist fermentation. In an ordinary sample of this spirit, the percentage of alcohol by volume is found to be 45. 2·6 oz. contains one ounce weight of absolute alcohol. Rice-arrack is common in Ganjam and the north part of Vizagapatam. The rice is steamed and then spread to dry on mats; a root called Sondimund is then powdered and mixed with the steamed rice and the rice on cooling forms with the Sondimund a sort of cake or cakes which are placed in vats and water is pumped in and the mixture ferments for five or six days when it is 'wash' and ready for distillation. For native mode of distillation of arrack, see vol. I, 450. Arrack is sometimes made more exciting by the addition of opium, datura, or preparations from the hemp-plant. The presence of the first will be detected in the extract, previously if necessary bleached by resolution and filtration through animal charcoal, by adding a drop of ferric chloride, which will give a red color if opium is present. Extract containing datura will produce dilatation of the pupil if put into a cat's eye. Cannabis, the hemp-plant, may be detected by administering the extract to some small animal and comparing the effects with the symptoms of intoxication with bhang, ganjah, or other of those preparations. Arrack is used by Veidyans as an external application in burns, sprains, palsy, chronic rheumatism, &c. Also internally, when diluted, as a stimulant. The names of the varieties are as follows. The best is the cocoanut arrack, and the second best is the puttay.

——Bassia arrack (मधूकासव - madhúkásava, San.; موہےکی شراب - mohekísharáb, Hind.; ಇಪ್ಪೆಸಾರಾಯ - ippesáráya, Can.; ఇప్పసారాయి - ippasáráyi, Tel.; ഇരിപ്പച്ചാരായം - irippaççáráyam, Mal.; இலுப்பைச்சாராயம் - iluppaiççáráyam, Tam.). Distilled from fermented juice of flowers of Bassia longifolia, linn., sapotaceæ.——Batavia arrack (بٹائی شراب - bataísharáb, Hind.; బత్తాయిసారాయి - battáyisáráyi, Tel.; വത്തായിച്ചാരായം - vattáyiççáráyam, Mal.; வத்தாவிச்சாராயம் - vattáviççáráyam, Tam.). Distilled from malted rice. ARROO (అఱ్ఱు - arru, Tel.). Means neck. Strip of land. Suffix in place names, especially in Northern circars; as Pammarroo, meaning snake + narrow land.

ARSATA (ارسٹھ - arsath, Hind.; అడసట్ట - adasatta, Tel.). From (arsath, hind. sixty-eight); original being a monthly treasury account which contained sixty-eight columns. Valuation.

ARVENCAUD (அரவங்காடு - aravangádu, Tam.). From (aravam, tam. snake + kádu, tam. forest). Village, Valley; Neilgherry dist., Paranginaud division; lat. 11° 22′; long. 76° 48′; from Coonoor W.N.W. 2½ miles; from Ootacamund E.S.E. 5½ miles. Valley separated from Kaity valley by a spur, on which is built the rest-house on the Ootacamund and Coonoor road. The drainage flows into Coonoor river. The old road to Ootacamund runs up the hollow; the present one being formed by a cutting along the northern side of the valley, a spur of Dodabetta. Village has a chuttram.

ARY (அரி - ari, Tam.). Ear of paddy. Arimerah is a deduction made from grain in the rick, and so in ear and stalk; in contradistinction to the usual merah from stock of threshed grain.——Arittvaulcha (അരിട്ടുവാഴ്ച - aríttuvázhcha, Mal.). From (above + itu, mal. to put + vázhcha, mal. reign). Coronation ceremony of a Malabar chieftain, from putting rice on his head [maryauday].

ARYAN (आर्य - árya, San.). The original root means to plough; compare Latin arare, Greek ἀρόω, and English ear in the sense of till. In later Sanscrit, the root means noble; compare Greek ἄριστος, German ehre, and English erin. In Java it is still an honorary prefix. In Malabar means a sage. By European writers, Aryan as a language term is applied to the languages derived from the speech of the assumed primitive and homogeneous people whose earliest seats were somewhere in northern Europe or Asia, and who were the ancestors of the Indians, Persians, Celts, Greeks, Romans, Slavonians and Teutons. It is assumed that the ancestors of the Indic and Iranic nations went east and south, spreading over Cochin-China, Hindostan, Persia and Afghanistaun.——(1) The following is the list of the Aryan languages, the main heads being in small capital type, the sub-heads being in italic, and the languages usually classed as such being in ordinary type:—INDIC.—Sanscrit (extinct), Pracrit (extinct), Pali (extinct), Indian dialects, Gipsy dialects, &c.—IRANIC.—Zend (extinct), Cuneiform inscriptions (extinct), Parsee (extinct), Persian, &c.—CELTIC.—Cymric—Cornish (extinct), Welsh, Armorican.—Gadhelic—Gaelic, Erse, Manx, &c.—GRAECO-LATIN.—Greek type—Greek (extinct); sub-divided into Doric, Æolic, Attic and Ionic, Modern Greek, &c.—Romance languages—Latin (extinct), Portuguese, Spanish, Provençal and French, these being divided into Langue d'Oc and Langue d'Oil, Italian, Roumansch, Wallachian, &c.—SLAVONIC.—Lettic—Old Prussian (extinct), Lithuanian, Lettish.—Eastern slavonic—Ancient-Bulg. (extinct), Bulgarian, Russian.—Western slavonic—Polish, Bohemian.—TEUTONIC.—High german—Old and Middle high german (extinct), German.—Low german—Gothic (extinct), Anglo-Saxon (extinct), English, Old saxon (extinct), Old frisian (extinct), Old dutch (extinct), Platt-Deutsch, Frisian, Dutch.—Scandinavian—Old norse (extinct), Icelandic, Swedish, Danish, &c.——(2) The first main head or Indic is that which concerns this country. The Indo-Aryan language Sanscrit has been extinct for at least two thousand years, but it continues to be studied by the learned [sanscrit]. At the time when the Greek authors were producing their greatest works and when Rome had not as yet a literature, Sanscrit had already degenerated into various dialects. Among these were the Pracrit idioms, bearing somewhat the same relation to Sanscrit as Italian bears to Latin [hindostany, pracrit]; and ancient Pali, in which most of the sacred books of the Ceylonese booddhists were written, representing an intermediate stage between Sanscrit and Pracrit [pali]. The only authorities for Aryan history are the Ramayanam, the Mahabhaurat and Pooraunams. Each of these purports to be matter repeated by some person, stating what he heard from another. Thus the Bhagavat pooraunam is recited to king Parichit by Shoocan, as he had heard it narrated to assembled sages by Sootan. According to these authorities, the country of the Indian aryans was called Bramhahvartam or Aryavartam, and was bounded by the rivers Saraswaty and Drishadwaty. The northern and southern limits were the Himalayan and Vindhya mountains. This country corresponded with the modern provinces of Lahore, Delhi, Agra, Oude and Allahabad. The country was at first divided between two principal families of the sun and the moon [vamsham]. Compare Grecian kings descended from Jupiter; and the Incas of Peru, the progeny of the sun. In the solar race came Rama [ramayanam], in the lunar came the personages of the Mahabhaurat [mahabhaurat]. The most adventurous emigrations took place through the lunar family. The Aryan dynasties, if they ever really ruled at all in India, which is doubtful, must have ended about the time of the Mahabhaurat. The year from which dates the Kalyoog, B.C. 3102, may mark the first entrance of Aryans in any numbers into India. After the occurrences told in the Mahabhaurat the most important principality of India became that of Magadham, and continued so for many centuries; capital Rajagriham. Chundragooptan, called by the Greeks Sandracottus, was the friend and ally of Seleucus Nicator, Alexander the Great's successor in Persia. Pautalipootram or Palibothra or Coosoomapooram, his capital, was situated near the confluence of the Sone and the Ganges, not far from the site of the modern Patna. The descendants of Chundragooptan were called Mowryas. At the beginning of the Christian era the principal kingdom in India was that of Avanty or Oujein, under Vicramadityan. He rendered important service to India by arresting the conquests of the Shaucas, whence he is called the Shaucaury, or foe of the Shaucas. The Samvat era dates from Vicramadityan, fifty-seven years B.C. The next prince of note is Salivahanan, king of Pratishtaunam in the Deccan. The Saca era counts from him, beginning seventy-eight years after Christ. These states, Magadham, Pautalipootram, Avanty and Pratishtaunam, are always spoken of as Aryan, and they are therefore here mentioned; but it is improbable that the rulers were Aryan, and it is certain that the populations were not. The present state of the case as regards Aryan influence in S. india can be seen at vol. I (32) [jauty].——(3) Title of the Malabar hill god Ayyappan. Prefix in place names thence derived.——(4) A paddy in Malabar, named after the Mahratta country. Has varieties:—black from color of ear growing; small; sand from growing near sea at cochin; golden, from appearance of ear.——(5) Arya bhatta (आर्यभट्ट - áryabhatta, San.). From (bhatta, san. learned man). Ardubrius of the Chronichon Paschale and Arjabahr of the Arabs. An early astronomer and mathematician of Northern india, born near Patna. Works well known here, and his figures of solar reckoning adopted in preference to those of Soorya siddhauntam [q.v.]. He affirmed the diurnal revolution of the earth on its axis, accounting for it by a current of aërial fluid, extending to a height of 114 miles above the earth's surface; and he calculated the earth's circumference to be 25,080 miles. He believed the moon and primary planets to be dark and only illumined by the sun; and he possessed the true theory of lunar and solar eclipses. His idea of the roundness of the earth is thus expressed:—"The terrestrial globe, a compound of earth, "water, fire and air, entirely round, encompassed by a girdle, "stands in the air, in the centre of the stellar sphere; like as a "ball formed by blossoms of anthocephalus cadamba is on every "side beset with flowerets, so is the earth-globe, with all crea-"tures, terrestrial and aquatic." And of the daily revolution he says:—"As a person in a vessel while moving forward, sees "an immovable object moving backwards; in the same manner "do the stars, however immovable, seem to move daily." Elsewhere of the same he says:—"The sphere of the stars is "stationary; and the earth, making revolution, produces the "daily rising and setting of stars and planets." He is also the earliest author that is known to have treated of algebra. In his Siddhauntam he deduced from observations the values of the mean motions of the sun, moon and planets, and of their apsides and nodes, and calculated eclipses. His chief work is the Arya bhatteeya sootram, which includes two other works, the Dashah geety sootram and the Aryaushta sootram. A later astronomer of the same name is called Laghoo arya bhatta or Arya bhatta the lesser [jyotisham].——Aryacoott (ஆரியக்கூத்து - áriyakkúttu, Tam.). From (áriyan, tam. juggler + kúttu, tam. dance). Dancing with pole and ropes.——Aryam (आर्य - árya, San.). Form of Nagry alphabet used on West coast. Cf. ἀριακὴ, Ptolemy's name for the Mahratta country.——Aryanaud (ആരിയനാട് - áriyanátu, Mal.). From (áriyan, mal. sage, epithet of ayyappan the village deity + nátu, mal. country). Meaning the country of Shaustauv. Pass, Village; Travancore state, Trivandrum division, Nedoovengaud tal.; lat. 8° 36′; long. 77° 08′; from Nedoovengaud E. 6¼ miles; from Trivandrum N.E. 13 miles; from the sea E. 17 miles.——Aryancauv (ആരിയങ്കാവ് - áriyankávu, Mal.). From (áriyan, mal. sage, epithet of ayyappan, the village deity + kávu, mal. sacred enclosure), meaning the grove of Shaustauv. Mal. also (áriyankóvil), meaning Ayyappan, the god + temple. Village; Travancore state, Quilon division, Shencottah tal.; lat. 8° 59′; long. 77° 11′; from Shencottah W. 7½ miles; from Trivandrum N.N.E. 37 miles; from the sea E. 40 miles. On the main road from Quilon to Shencottah, in a circular valley about a mile from the head of the Aryancauv pass. Temple of Shaustauv, the forest deity. Chowky. Once a flourishing commercial town for the trade of Travancore with Tinnevelly. Now mostly in ruins. The pass to Tinnevelly district had been shut till recently, now re-opened.——Aryavartam (आर्यावर्त - áryávarta, San.). From (ávarta, san. thronged place). Dwelling-place of the Aryans. Also called Arya bhoomy. Menoo's name for the land extending from the eastern to the western sea and bounded on the north and south by the Himalaya and Vindhya mountains.

Asal jumma is the original revenue of a village, &c., without extra cesses; also the amount taken as the basis of a revenue settlement. Asal mokaddamah is an original suit in distinction to appeal suit. See vol. I, 112.

ASAY (அசை - asai, Tam.). Syllable.——Asaipirittal (அசைபிரித்தல் - asaibirittal, Tam.). Means syllable + division. Syllabation in grammar. The chief peculiarity of Dravidian, particularly Tamul, syllabation is its extreme simplicity and dislike of compound or concurrent consonants. No other combination of consonants is admitted than the duplication of mutes and the junction of the nasal and the mute. In Teloogoo, Canarese and Malayalam, the great majority of Dravidian words, and in Tamul all words without exception, including even Sanscrit derivates, are divided into syllables on the following plan. Double or treble consonants at the beginning of syllables, like 'str,' in 'strength,' are altogether inadmissible. At the beginning not only of the first syllables of every word, but also of every succeeding syllable, only one consonant is allowed. If in the middle of a word of several syllables, one syllable ends with a consonant and the succeeding one commences with another consonant, the concurrent consonants must be euphemically assimilated, or else a vowel must be inserted between them. At the conclusion of a word, double and treble consonants like 'gth' in 'strength' are as inadmissible as at the beginning; and every word must terminate in Teloogoo and Canarese in a vowel; in Tamul, either in a vowel or a semi-vowel, as 'l,' or 'r,' or in a single nasal, as 'n' or 'm.' This plan of syllabation is extremely unlike that of Sanscrit. Generally 'i' is the vowel which is used for the purpose of separating inadmissible consonants, as appears from the manner in which Sanscrit derivatives are Tamulised. Sometimes 'u' is employed instead of 'i.' Thus the Sanscrit preposition 'pra' is changed into 'pira' in the compound derivatives, which have been borrowed by the Tamul, whilst Krishna becomes (kiruttinan) ('tt,' instead of sh'), or even (kittinan). It may be observed that the Finnish, the Hungarian, and other languages of the same stock similarly allow of only one consonant at the beginning of a syllable. See vol. I (52); II, 205, 209.

ASGAND (अश्वगन्धा - ashvagandhá, San.; كاكنج هندى - káknajihindí, Ar.; كاكنة هندى - káknahihindí, Pers.; پنیرکا پیڑ - panírkáper, Hind.; ناٹ کی اسگند کا جھاڑ - nátkíasgandkájhár, Dec.; ಹಿರಿಮದ್ದಿನಗಿಡ - hirimaddinagida, Can.; పెన్నేరు - pennéru, Tel.; അമുക്കിരം - amukkiram, Mal.; அமுக்குரா - amukkurá, Tam.). See vol. I, 112.——Ashtacam (अष्टक - ashtaka, San.). Eighth. Specially eighth day of moon in certain months, when progenitors are worshipped [pundigay, 3e].——Ashtadic (अष्टदिक् - ashtadik, San.). From (dik, san. quarter). The usual eight cardinal points of the compass. For each of these there is an elephant [ashtadic gajam] and a divinity [ashtadic paulacan]. In astrology are added two others, viz., Vishoomboo, the ethereal regions, and Pautaulam, the abyss. The eight points are, especially in choosing spots for building houses, named after certain animals :—East, kite ; South-east, cat ; South, lion ; South-west, dog ; West, snake ; North-west, rat ; North, elephant ; North-east, hare. The animals of the opposite points are natural foes to each other, the one being pursuer and the other the pursued [jyotisham, matam].——Ashtadic gajam (अष्टदिग्गज - ashtadiggaja, San.). From (gaja, san. elephant). Eight pairs of elephants, male and female, in the eight cardinal points of the heavens who support the earth. East, Eirauvatam and Apramay ; South-east, Poondareecam and Capilay ; South, Vaumanam and Pingalay ; South-west, Coomoodam and Anoopamay ; West, Anjanam and Taumracurny ; North-west, Pooshpadantam and Soodanty ; North, Saurwabhoomam and Anjanay ; and North-east, Soopradeepam and Anjanauvaty. So eight poets in the court of Krishna deva royel of Vijianugger. They were Alasauny peddanna, Mookkoo timmana, Tenauly ramalingam, Pingaly sooranna, Bhattoomoorty, Ayyalrauz, Ramabhadran, and Cumsala veerabhadran [matam].——Ashtadic paulacan (अष्टदिक्पालक - ashtadikpálaka, San.). From (pálaka, san. protector). The deities who are regents of the eight points. Otherwise Dicpaty. According to the Tamulian geography borrowed from the Bramins, the earth consists of seven great insular continents and seven circumambient oceans, and beyond the seventh circumambient ocean, there is at each of the eight cardinal points a regent or protector of the earth. The images of these eight protectors of the earth are usually made of stone, or bricks and mortar ; sometimes also of metal, at least that of Agny bhagavan. At the beginning of every festival of several days' duration, the Ashtadicpaulacas are placed at their respective sites within the enclosure of the pagoda, with ceremonies and muntrams ; and when the festival is over, they are replaced in the temple with further ceremonies. They receive honor on other occasions also, and play an important part in the building of houses.—"a" Indran or Devendran, the king of the Devas, is regent of the east and protects the earth from giants and malignant spirits ; he is inferior to none in power except Shiva, Vishnoo, and Bramha. He presides over the seasons and crops, and is worshipped at sowing and reaping. Sign a thunderbolt.—"b" Agny, the regent of the south-east, is the god of fire. He is represented as riding on a grey goat, flames of fire streaming round him. He has two faces, four hands or seven, and three legs, signifying the trident which fire forms. On his two heads he wears a crown, surrounded by fire, and in his hands he holds sacrificial implements and materials. The offerings to Agny consisting of ghee, plantains, cakes, &c., are accompanied with an incantation, that is repeated one hundred and eight times and are made particularly at marriages. Sign is smoke.—"c" Yaman, the regent of the south, is the god of death and king of hell, where he sits in judgment on departed souls. After death souls appear before him, and, when they have been confronted with Chitragooptan the recorder, by whom all actions are registered, the virtuous are conveyed to Swargam whilst the wicked are driven to the different regions of Naracam. Yaman is represented as quite black, with a crown on his head, and surrounded by fire. In his mouth he has a lion's teeth, and in his four hands he holds respectively a club, ropes, a trident, and a wine-jug. From the latter he gives wine to the dying to mitigate the bitterness of death. He also rides on a black buffalo. Of his many names the following may be mentioned :—Antacan, the destroyer ; Chundan, the wrathful ; Coott, the separator of soul and body ; Dharman, the just ; Maraly, the confounder ; Nadoovan, the impartial ; Naman, like Yama ; Shaman, the just ; Shengol cadavool, the god with the right sceptre ; Tendisaykone, the king of the southern region. Sign is a lion.—"d" Nirrity, the regent of the south-west, is a giant of green color. He was elevated to the dignity by severe penance. On his head he wears a crown, and on his forehead Shiva's ashes ; of his four hands one is empty, and in the other three he holds a banner with the sign of a fish, a ring, and a wine-jug. His vehicle is a crocodile. His sign is a dog.—"e" Varoonan, the regent of the west, is the god of the waters, clouds, and rain. He is represented with a green body, with two hands, of which one is empty and the other holds a sword. His head is adorned with a crown, his whole body with various ornaments, and his shoulders with garlands. His vehicle is a stag. His sign is a bull.—"f" Vayoo, the regent of the north-west, is the god of the wind. He is represented as having a grey color and four arms and hands, in which he holds a sword, a shield, a bow, and an arrow. Like the other gods, he wears a crown and various ornaments, and his vehicle is a Bhootam. His sign, an ass.—"g" Coobairan, the regent of the north, is the god of riches and the keeper of gold, silver, precious stones, pearls, and all the treasures in the earth, which he gives to those for whom they are destined by Eeshwaran. He has a deformed body of white color, with a crown on his head, and a club in one of his hands. His whole body is adorned with various ornaments, and his vehicle is a self-moving chariot. Coobairan is synonymous with a croesus in Tamul. Coobairan has various names, of which the following may be mentioned :—Alagaiyauly, ruler of Alacay, his capital ; Dhanadan, he who gives riches ; Dhanapaty, lord of riches ; Haran tozhan, Haran's, i.e., Shiva's friend ; Kinnara piraun, lord of the Kinnarans ; Muntry, prime minister ; Pingalan, the lord of the treasure ; Poorooshа vauhanan, he whose vehicle is a man ; Pooshpaca vimaunamoollavan, possessor of the self-moving chariot ; Veishravanan, son of Vishravan. His sign is an elephant.—"h" Eeshaunan, the regent of the north-east, is a form of Eeshwaran. He is represented as having four arms and hands, of which one is empty, whilst he holds in the other three a small drum, a stag, and a sword. His head is adorned with a crown, and his whole body with the usual ornaments. Near him stands a bull, his vehicle. Being a form of Eeshwaran, he is regarded as the chief among the protectors of the earth, and he is believed to direct and control all. His sign is a crow [matam].——Ashta lutchmy (अष्टलक्ष्मी - ashtalakshmí, San.). Eight Lutchmies :—Dhanam or patroness of riches, Dhaunyam of grain, Dheiryam of courage, Showryam of heroism, Vidyay of science, Keerty of fame, Vijayam of victory, Rajyam of kingdom.——Ashtamoody (അഷ്ടമുടി - ashtamuti, Mal.). From (muti, mal. knot). Back-water ; Travancore dist., Quilon division ; Quilon tal. Adjacent to Quilon and connected with the sea by the Ivica bar. Fed by the Cullada river. The lake branches off into eight creeks, whence the name. Of sufficient depth for small vessels. Country crafts are constructed on the banks and launched into the sea through the opening in the bar. The banks rise abruptly and are of hard laterite soil. The area is 20 square miles with an average breadth of 2 miles. The extreme length is 10 miles and its extreme breadth 9 miles.——Ashtamy (अष्टमी - ashtamí, San.). Eighth day of any lunar fortnight. A lunar festival in some months [pundigay, 3e]. On this day in waning moon of fifth lunar month Shrauvanam [mausam] or august is celebrated the birth of Krishna under the name of Krishna janmaushtamy. This feast is known among the Smartas as Gocoolaushtamy and among the Veishnavas as Krishna jayanty or Shree jayanty. Also on West coast a luni-solar festival [pundigay, 5a]. This festival is celebrated in the bright fortnight in eighth solar month Vrishchicam [mausam], i.e., between November 15th and December 13th at Wycome in Travancore. On this day people afflicted with incurable disease come in crowds to see the god Shiva [maryauday].——Ashtaucsharam (अष्टाक्षर - ashtákshara, San.). From (akshara, san. character). A form of prayer. Omnamo narayanauya. The eight-lettered muntram prescribed to be uttered in daily prayer. Also used by exorcisers for the dispossession of demons. Four special muntrams are known, of which this is one. The other three are Punchaucsharam or the five-lettered muntram of Namashivauya, Shadaucsharam or the six-lettered muntram of Vishnaveynama, and Dwaudashaucsharam or the twelve-lettered muntram of Omnamo bhagavatey vausoodevauya. Beejaucsharam is the essential syllable with which the muntram of any deity opens. The sacred syllable om is sometimes called Yecaucsharam or one-lettered muntram [matam].——Ashtaungam (अष्टाङ्ग - ashtánga, San.). From (anga, san. member). Eight members of the body. A prostration in which worshippers touch the ground with the breast, forehead, hands, knees, insteps ; then kiss the earth ; half rise up and pass the left over the right forearm and vice versâ ; then finally after again saluting the earth stand erect. See vol. I (89) [maryauday].——Ashtauvadhauny (अष्टावधानी - ashtávadhání, San.). From (avadhána, san. attention). One who undertakes to do any eight things at once ; such as playing chess, composing stanzas with the omission of any given letter, reckoning correctly the grains of rice dropped on one's shoulders, &c.——Ashta varnam (अष्टवर्ण - ashtavarna, San.). From (varna, san. color). Eight distinguishing marks of the religion of Shiva.—"a" the Gooroo or spiritual teacher ;—"b" the lingam or emblem of Shiva ;—"c" the Jangama or Veerasheiva devotee ;—"d" the vibhooty or sacred ashes ;—"e" the rood-raucsham or sacred bead ;—"f" the tirmuntram or sacred charm ;—"g" the paudodacam or water which has washed the feet of a spiritual teacher ;—"h" the prasaudam or benediction of a spiritual teacher [matam].

ASHWAM (अश्व - ashva, San.). From (ash, san. to be able) ; strong and enduring animal. The genus Equus, equidæ, perissodactyla, ungulata, mammalia [sastanam, 21], of naturalists [jantoo]. The two species are asinus [gadhah], vulgaris [ghorah]. So plant first term. Ex., where transl. is of second term :—Glycosmis pentaphylla (ashvashákhóta), jack.; Ficus religiosa (ashvatt'ha), standing; Nerium odorum (ashvamáraka), killing; Shorea robusta (ashvakarna), ear; Withania somnifera (ashvagandhá), odour. See gloss. paragraphs.——Ashwa medham (अश्वमेध - ashvamédha, San.). From (médha, san. sacrifice). Horse sacrifice. Among the Aryans any one claiming to be a supreme ruler announced his intention of celebrating a horse sacrifice. A horse was selected and then turned loose to go where it pleased, only being followed by armed men. If another ruler contested the claim, he endeavoured to seize the horse. If the armed men came back unconquered and the horse with them, the claim was complete; the sacrifice was then conducted. He who offered a hundred such sacrifices was entitled to the throne of Indran [maryauday, matam].——Ashwapaty (अश्वपति - ashvapati, San.). From (pati, san. lord). Title borne by certain ancient rajahs.——Ashwa rogam (अश्वरोग - ashvaróga, San.). Horse-disease [bail, bursauty, chautahband, chuckrauval, dard-mondah, haddah, moongah, morghbyeza, motrah, paseenah, porah, shembah].——Ashwattam (अश्वत्थ - ashvatt'ha, San.). From (st'há, san. to stand); tree in which resides the celestial fiery horse. Holy peepul tree. Supposed to be frequented by the gods as it is believed to be a transformation of Brihaspaty, the preceptor of the gods. It is reckoned an act of merit to plant and water it and worship and perform Pradacshinams round it. On Somavaura amavausyay days or every Monday on which the new moon falls, females go round this tree and worship it. Dry twigs of this tree are used to feed the sacred fires in households.——Ashwiny (अश्विनी - ashviní, San.). A name of Chauyay or shade, who took the form of a mare, and was approached by Sooryan in the form of a horse. On their nostrils touching she was impregnated with sun-beams, and became the mother of the Ashwiny comaurar or twins of the Hindoo zodiac, the physicians of the celestials, the Latin Castor and Pollux. The first of the twenty-seven nacshatrams [q. v.]. Its beginning follows immediately after the principal star in the last Nacshatram or Raivaty, nearly opposite to the very conspicuous star which indicates the fourteenth asterism, viz., Chittray. As a constellation it comprises three stars. As overlain by the fixed soli-sidereal zodiac, it is the first 13° 20′ of Maisham [jyotisham].

ASKA (ఆసిక - asiká, Tel. aska*). From (ashóka, san. king of that name).—"a" Deputy tahsildarry, Ganjam district. Pay Rs. 100.—"b" Proprietary estate; Ganjam district, Zemindarry tracts; population 7,928. Together with Coorlah and Devabhoomy contains a total population of 16,704. Square miles 14. Total quit-rent, Rs. 15,465-2-4, composed as follows :—Rs. 4,849 for Aska, Rs. 5,427 for Coorlah and Rs. 5,188 for Devabhoomy. The Aska estate originally formed a part of the Aska zemindarry; the latter was dismembered during the Moghul government of the Northern circars, 1560 to 1753, upon the death of Ram rowt row, the last zemindar, and divided amongst the neighbouring zemindars of Goomsoor, Dhauracote and Atagadah.—"c" Village, District moonsif's court, Registration office, Telegraph office, Deputy tahsildar's station, Ganjam dist.; pop. 3,909; lat. 19° 36′; long. 84° 42′; from Balligooda S.E. 63 miles; from Berhampore N.N.W. 23 miles; from Chetterpore N.W. 28 miles; from Chicacole N.N.E. 104 miles; from Madras N.N.E. 525 miles; from Russellcondah S. 23 miles. Traditionally founded by Asoca who gave it his own name. On the road from Berhampore to Russellcondah, immediately above the confluence of the Rooshcoolya and the Mahanuddy, and in a fertile tract of country chiefly planted with sugarcane. During the Goomsoor disturbances in 1835-36, temporarily occupied by troops. Temple with inscription said to have been executed by Asoca's own orders. Chief seat of the sugar trade in the district. Sugar works employ about 1,000 hands under English supervision. The Rooshcoolya is crossed here by a masonry bridge of nineteen span-arches.

ASMAUN (آسمان - ásmán, Hind.). From (ás, pers. millstone + mán, pers. suffix of similarity). Sky. There are seven among the Mahomedans :—First or Adam's residence composed of pure virgin silver; second or Enoch's and John the Baptist's, of gold; third or Joseph's, of pearls; fourth or Jesus', of pure white gold; fifth or Aaron's, of pure silver; sixth or Moses', of ruby and garnet; seventh, or Abraham's, of crystal [bheest].

ASOCA (अशोक - ashóka, San.). Means without sorrow. A ruler of the Mowrya dynasty of Magadham in N. india and grandson of its founder, Chundragooptan. He made Boodhism in place of Braminism the religion of the state. The king who set up the celebrated edict inscriptions is therein called Priyadarshy the beautiful, and Devanaumpriyan the beloved of the gods. Boodhist writings identify Priyadarshy with Asoca. The inscriptions above-named are of three distinct classes. Rock inscriptions, pillar inscriptions, and cave inscriptions. The five rock inscriptions hitherto known present five different texts of the same series of edicts which were published by Asoca in the tenth and twelfth years of his reign, or in 253 and 251 B.C. These five inscribed rocks have been found at far distant places, of which four are on the extreme eastern and western borders of India. Thus :—"a" At Shahbauzgurh, 40 miles to the east-north-east of Peshawar, and 25 miles to the north-west of Attock on the Indus.—"b" Near Khalsy on the west bank of the Jumna, just where it leaves the higher range of mountains to pass between the Doons, or valleys of Kyaurda and Dehra.—"c" At Girnar, near Joonaghur in Cuttywar, 40 miles to the north of Somnaut.—"d" At Dhowlee in Cuttack, 20 miles to the south of the town of Cuttack and the same distance to the north of the famous temple of Juggernaut.—"e" At Jowgada in the Ganjam district. This the only one in Madras presidency [jowgada]. There are no pillar or cave inscriptions in this presidency [charitram].

ASOO (असु - asu, San.). From (as, san. to be); life. A respiration.——Asooran (असुर - asura, San.). Demons and giants, who, like the Titans of the Greeks made war against the gods. See vol. I (73) to (78). Deityan is an older form than Asooran. Some say that a deluge intervening destroyed the deityans. In the oldest part of the Rig vedam the word Asooran is used for the supreme spirit, and is the same as the Ahoora of the Zoroastrians; but in the latter parts of the Rig vedam it signifies, as in the Pooranic mythology, a demon, and this change in its meaning probably grew out of the religious quarrel of Indian aryans with the Persians. Compare the change in meaning in the Greek δαίμων. According to the Vishnoo pooraunam, the origin of the Asoorans was as follows. Bramha being desirous of creating the four orders of beings, termed gods, demons, progenitors, and men, collected his mind into itself. Whilst thus concentrated, the quality of darkness pervaded his body; and then the demons called Asoorans were born, issuing from his thigh. The later beings of this class are Raucshasans. Asooradhroovam is the S. pole [matam].

ASRAH (آسرا - ásrá, Hind.). From Persian. Shelter, support. Asrahbhoomy is land having the support of water, land under irrigation.

ASSAMAD (الصمد - assamad, Hind.). From (samada, ar. to go to); from recourse being had to him in exigencies. The eternal [allah]. Mahomedan alam.

ASSES' EARS (ಕೊಣಜದಕಲ್ಲು - konajadakallu, Can.). From (konaja, can. name of a village + kallu, can. rock). Rocks; South canara dist., Mangalore tal.; lat. 13° 05′; long. 75° 05′; from Mangalore N.E. 21 miles; from Moodbidry N.E. 3 miles. Two perpendicular rocks on a small eminence. Form a well-known landmark.

ASTAM (अस्त - asta, San.). Means end or setting. Western ghauts. Astagiry, the same.

ASTAUNAH (آستانه - ástánah, Hind.). From (ást'hána, san. place). Threshold; fakeers' residence. Astaunam in malayalam is audience-hall.

ASTRAM (अस्त्र - astra, San.). From (as, san. to throw). A missile weapon, as opposed to Shastram or arms.

ASWAD (اسود - aswad, Ar.). Black. Cf. Helleborus niger (kharbakiaswad), black hellebore; Justicia gendarussa (aslakiaswad), black vitex negundo. See gloss. paragraphs.

AT (الت - at, Ar.). Al [q.v.] before t in Arabic single terms, as at tauhir, meaning the pure.

ATAGADAH (ఆటగడ - át'hagadá, Tel. átagadá*). From (áta, oor. eight + godo, oor. fort). Proprietary estate; Ganjam district, Zemindarry tracts; square miles 294; lat. of village 19° 36′; long. 84° 52′. The estate is perhaps the finest in the district. Contains 203 villages divided into three sub-divisions :—Colady mittah with sixty-eight villages; Bondacundy mittah with ninety-three villages; Bhidore mittah with 102 villages. Peshcush Rs. 59,927. Bounded :—north by Banpoor and Nyagar in Cuttack; south by the Rooshcoolya and Berhampore talook; east by Cullicote; west by Goomsoor. Country is mostly rich and fertile, being watered by three small rivers. In the centre it is mountainous, and south-east of Coracholly in Goomsoor are the Pundripada maliahs, an elevated tract covered with dense forest and abounding in game. The Bissoye of this tract was formerly a feudal dependent of the ancient Zemindars of Atagadah. The founder of the family was one Jagga doss, a hermit. The estate was sold by auction for arrears of tribute on the 15th July 1854. It was at first declared to have been bought by Government, but on appeal the Cullicote rajah was declared purchaser. The old sunnud was then cancelled. The transfer to the Cullicote rajah, in spite of his being a nephew of the last zemindar, caused dissatisfaction, and disturbances took place owing to oppressive management. In 1873 the feeling of discontent culminated in the zemindar's manager being waylaid and stabbed whilst on his way to Berhampore [cullicote].

ATAH (عطا - atá, Hind.). From (atú, ar. to give). Gift. Component part of lacabs [ism]. Atah ool lah, the gift of God. Compare Pers. buksh, in Khoodabuksh.

ATAR (अथर् - at'har, San.). Fire.——Atarvan (अथर्व - at'harva, San.). Aryan priest, who has to do with fire and somam [veda]. The ancient sage of this name is represented as a Prajaupaty, Bramha's eldest son, as the first learner and earliest teacher of Bramha vidyay, and as the author of the Atarva veda. The Atarva veda, though so called, is not strictly a Veda like the Rig, Saumam and Yajoos, but a collection of formulas to avert consequences of mistakes in sacrifices [matam].

ATAUVANY (ಅಠವಣಿ - at'havani, Can.). Same as Attavanay. Register, cash book. Atauvany buntrote is a revenue peon.

ATCHAH (तिन्दुक - tinduka, San.; آبنوس - ábnús, Hind.; ಶೇಗುಮರ - shégumara, Can.; చేవమాను - chévamánu, Tel.; വിട്ടി - vítti, Mal.; அச்சா - áççá, Tam.). Any ebony tree. To be distinguished from Blackwood [q. v.]. Bauhinia racemosa, lam., Diospyros ebenum, koenig., and Diospyros melanoxylon, roxb., are well known Indian ebonies. They are all slow-growing trees, with dark-colored leaves. By age the interior of the wood becomes hard and black.

ATCHAN (അച്ചൻ - aççan, Mal.). From (ajja, prákrita of árya, san. noble). A father; used also as a title of respect [polliettatchan]; and in Malabar applied especially to the males of the royal family who have no office nor official rank in the state. Atchanmar is the honorific.——Atchancoil (അച്ചൻകോവിൽ - aççankóvil, Mal.). From (aççan, mal. lord, epithet of ayyappan, the village deity + kóvil, mal. temple).—" a " Village, Pass; Travancore district, Quilon division, Chenganore tal.; lat. 9° 5'; long. 77° 10'; from Chenganore E.S.E. 40 miles; from Trivandrum N.N.E. 43 miles; from the sea E. 41 miles. Village lies in an exceedingly wild part of the hills. Shrine sacred to Shauttan. Chowky. The pass, called on the British side Shencottah, connects Tinnevelly and Madura districts with Travancore; but, being more difficult for traffic than the Aryancauv road, is less used.—" b " River; Travancore district, Quilon division, Chenganore and Mauvelicara tals.; also known as Coolacudda river. Rises at the foot of the pass of the same name. Quitting the wild tract that borders its early course, the bed, generally sandy, interrupted however at intervals by rocks as it flows westwards, gradually widens to near three hundred yards, and the elevation of the banks diminishes and are bordered by cultivation. After a course of 70 miles north-west, it unites with the Pambah. Chief places on the river, Pundalam and Mauvelicara. It is navigable for 40 miles from its junction with the Pambah, boats ascending to Gonay for the greater part of the year.

ATCHOO (ہتّا - hattá, Hind.; అత్తు - attsu, Tel.; அச்சு - aççu, Tam.). Tel. also (pana). A weaver's reed. A comb-like frame in a loom, through which the warp threads are passed, and by which the weft threads are pressed or battened together [nesavoo].

ATEES (अतिविषा - ativishá, San. and Mahr.; وج ترکی - vajjiturkí, Pers.; اتیس - atís, Hind.; وج ترکی - vajjiturkí, Dec.; అతివస - ativasa, Tel.; അതിവിടയം - ativitayam, Mal.; අතිවිඩයන් - atividayan, Singh.; அதிவிடையம் - athividaiyam, Tam.). Title from hindostany. San. from (ati, san. prefix meaning very + visha, san. poison); probably aryan name for a poisonous species misapplied to this non-poisonous indian species. Pers. from (vaj, pers. sweet-flag + turkí, pers. turkish). Hind. from sanscrit. Dec. from persian. Tel. from sanscrit by corruption, and is to some extent confounded with bachnaug or aconitum ferox, wall. Mal., Singh. and Tam. from sanscrit. Hind. also (atvíká), corr. from sanscrit. Cf. Aconitum ferox, wall. [bachnaug]; and see Jadwaur for non-poisonous aconites generally. Botanically Aconitum [bish] heterophyllum, wall., ranunculaceæ [vricsham, 1]. A plant of 1-3 feet high with a raceme of large flowers of a dull-yellow veined with purple, or altogether blue. Grows in the himalayas. The root, as met with in bazaars, occurs in small tubers, tapering towards a point, from one to one-and-a-half inches, or more in length, and from three-eighths to a quarter of an inch in thickness; grey externally, slightly wrinkled longitudinally, and marked here and there with rootlet scars, easily friable; internally white, farinaceous, inodorous, and of a pure bitter taste, devoid of acidity or astringency. The root is exceedingly bitter, mild antiperiodic, aphrodisiac and tonic, checking diarrhœa; may be administered internally with safety owing to comparative absence of poisonous properties; especially useful in convalescence after fever; is often adulterated with that of asparagopsis sarmentosa, kunth. [shatamooly]. Cf. also Methonica superba, lam. [wild bachnaug]. Used for British cinchona bark and phosphorus. Gives to pharm. aconiti heterophylli radix; tonic and antiperiodic; officinal. Alkaloid principle, atisine. Hydrochlorate of atisine is a white salt in very minute grains and has an intensely bitter taste.

ATHAR (اطہر - athar, Hind.). From (tahara, ar. to be clean). Pure. Mahomedan alam; as Athar hoossain, double alam [ism].

ATHONDAY (ஆதொண்டை - áthondai, Tam.). Means a creeper, Capparis horrida, linn. [thorny caper]. Name of illegitimate son of the Chola ruler Rajendra coolotoongan. Also called Tondaman chuckravurty. Conquered the Pallavas. Established the Tondeimundalam province. See vol. I (141).

ATI (आति - ati, San.). Intensive prefix. Common in many compounds. Ativeera rama pandiyan was a pandyan ruler of very ancient date, said to have been an author; the principal work attributed to him is the tamul neishadam; his real name was vallabha devan [charitram].——Atimathooram (यष्टिमधुका - yashtimadhuká, San.; ज्येष्टमध - jyésht'hamadha, Mahr.; سوس - sús, Ar.; مہک - mahak, Pers.; ملٹھی - mulatthí, Hind.; میٹھی لکڑی - míthílakrí, Dec.; اورت منس - uritmanis, Malay; ಅತಿಮಧುರ - atimadhura, Can.; అతిమధురము - atimadhuramu, Tel.; ഇരട്ടിമധുരം - irattimadhuram, Mal.; අතිමදුරම් - atimaduram, Singh.; அதிமதுரம் - athimathuram, Tam.). Title from sweet roots. San. from (yashti, san. stick + madhu, san. sweet); from long sweet roots. Mahr. from sanscrit. Dec. from (mithí, hind. sweet + lakrí, hind. stick). Can. from (ati, san. prefix excessive + madhura, san. sweet). Tel. like canarese. Mal. from sanscrit. Singh. from tamul. Tam. like canarese. San. also (madhuyashtiká), meaning sweet stick; (madhuká), meaning sweet; (klítaka), meaning destroying impotency. Hind. also (jethimadh), from sanscrit. Singh. also (valmí), meaning honey creeper. Greek γλυκύῤῥιζη. Latin radix dulcis. Liquiritia, whence liquorice, is a corruption of glycyrrhiza. Title otherwise Honey creeper, Liquorice plant, Sweet root. Botanically Glycirrhiza glabra, linn., leguminosæ [vricsham, 48]. Alias Glycyrrhiza triphylla; Liquoritia officinalis. Malabar coast; but product most met with in bazaars is imported from Persia. Roots very long, about an inch thick, flexible fibrous, of a brown color; see description under abrus precatorius, linn., those roots being often substituted for these. By decoction and evaporation the roots yield the dry extract, called liquorice. Gives to pharm. glycyrrhizæ radix; officinal; has a power of covering the flavor of nauseous medicines; in high repute amongst veidyans chiefly in infusion, for coughs, consumptions, gonorrhœa, &c.; also considered mild laxative. Root gives a dye. No other species here.

ATMACORE (آتکور - átkúr, Hind.; ఆత్మకూరు - átmakúru, Tel. atmakúr *). From (yátamu, tel. water lift + úru, tel. village).——(1) Talook, Nellore district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. Area 640 square miles. W. centre inland talook of district. Bounded:—North by Oodayagherry, west by E. ghauts, south by Raupore, east and north-east by Nellore and Cauvaly respectively. A portion of the talook formerly belonged to one Abbaus ally khan, Jagheerdar of Oodayagherry. For misconduct he was made a state prisoner and his lands were confiscated. The Veligondas occupy W. part of talook. The rest is generally flat, but there are isolated hills. Pennair divides talook into two unequal portions. The northern part is drained by Boggair which joins Pennair near Atmacore. Other streams are the Kedamanair and Beerapair. On the banks of the Pennair soil is clayey and fertile; elsewhere poor, especially in the north-east, where there is also great scarcity of water. Indigo largely grown on river banks and thread dyed in some villages. Numerous irrigation channels from Pennair. Water is also taken by lift from Boggair and other streams. There are several fine tanks, those of Anamasamoodram, Anantasaugaram, Atmacore, Calavoy and Mahimalore being specially noteworthy. Camping grounds:— Beylachirvella, Mahomedapooram, Shreecolan. Places of archæological interest:—Anamasamoodram, Anantasaugaram, Atmacore, Calavoy, Chejerla, Chirmana, Colagotla, Coollore, Cotiteertam, Gollapully, Mahimalore, Mungampulley, Nauvore, Nedoorpulley, Pautapaud, Pelloor, Permana, Poongode, Prabhagiriputnam, Shreecolan, Somashila, Vaushily, Veerlagoodipaud. Principal trig. stations:—Caraconda, Krishnamma, Raujally. The leading places, &c., in the talook are the following.——Anamasamoodram (అనమసముద్రము - anamasamudramu, Tel.). ATTAR (عطر - itr, Hind.; அத்தர் - attar, Tam.). From (itr, ar. perfume). Means essence. Title otherwise Otter, Otto. Attars are very strong oils, containing the essential oils of the plants and substances used in their preparation; a few drops are sufficient to produce an intensely strong perfume. These on ceremonial occasions, are offered to the guests on a piece of cotton, twisted at the end of a stick four or five inches long [paunsoopaury]. The best known attar is the essential oil extracted from the petals of roses. This is obtained by skimming off the essential oil from rose water which has been exposed to the air all night in large open vessels. It is said to take 200,000 roses to produce an ounce of attar of roses. Attar of roses is nearly colorless, solid below 80°, and liquefies at 84°. A compound of two oils, one liquid, the other solid and inodorous. Oleum rosæ of chemists. Adulteration effected by the addition of the volatile oil of the grass, Andropogon schœnanthus, linn., lemon or geranium oil. The following are two key-lists of the volatile and perfumed oils of s. india; further information must be traced in the glossary paragraphs through the small-type cross references at end of this volume: see also vricsham, 7, for the method of expressing the products, &c., of the plants in the dravidian languages:—"a" Acorus calamus, sweet flag; Andropogon iwarancusa, ibharancoosha; Andropogon martini, roussa grass; Andropogon muricatus, cuscus; Andropogon schœnanthus, lemon grass; Aquilaria agallocha, eagle wood; Artemisia vulgaris, indian absinth; Carum copticum, ajwaun; Cinnamomum camphora, camphor cinnamon; Cinnamomum tamala, cassia cinnamon; Cinnamomum zeylanicum, ceylon cinnamon; Citrus aurantium, orange; Citrus aurantium, var. bergamia, bergamot orange; Citrus medica, var. limonum, lemon; Citrus medica, var. medica proper, citron; Cuminum cyminum, cummin; Elettaria cardamomum, cardamom; Eugenia caryophyllata, clove; Excæcaria agallocha, blinding tree; Jasminum auriculatum, needle jasmine; Jasminum grandiflorum, common jasmine; Jasminum humile, yellow jasmine; Jasminum pubescens, musk jasmine; Jasminum sambac, arabian jasmine; Lawsonia alba, henna plant; Melaleuca leucadendron, var. minor, cajeput; Mesua ferrea, nauga champak; Michelia champaca, champak; Mimusops elengi, ilanjy; Myristica fragrans, common nutmeg; Myristica malabarica, malabar nutmeg; Nardostachys jatamansi, indian spikenard; Nicotiana tabacum, tobacco; Nigella sativa, sweet fennel; Pandanus odoratissimus, screw-pine; Pergularia minor, primrose creeper; Phœnix dactylifera, arabian date; Pimpinella anisum, anise seed; Piper cubeba, cubeb pepper; Piper nigrum, black pepper; Pogostemon patchouli, var. suavis, patchouli; Psidium guyava, var. pyriferum, white guava; Rosa centifolia, cabbage rose; Rosa damascena, damask rose; Santalum album, sandal; Saussurea lappa, costum; Styrax benzoin, benzoin.—"b" Absinth, artemisia; Ajwaun, carum; Aniseed, pimpinella; Benzoin, styrax; Blinding tree, excæcaria; Cajeput, melaleuca; Cardamom, elettaria; Champak, mesua, michelia; Cinnamon, cinnamomum; Citron, citrus; Clove, eugenia; Costum, saussurea; Cummin, cuminum; Cuscus, andropogon; Date, phœnix; Eagle wood, aquilaria; Fennel, nigella; Guava, psidium; Henna, lawsonia; Ibharancoosha, andropogon; Ilanjy, mimusops; Lemon, citrus; Lemon grass, andropogon; Nutmeg, myristica; Orange, citrus; Pepper, piper; Primrose creeper, pergularia; Rose, rosa; Roussa grass, andropogon; Sandal, santalum; Screw-pine, pandanus; Spikenard, nardostachys; Sweet flag, acorus; Tobacco, nicotiana.

ATTAY (जलौक - jalauka, San.; جونك - jonk, Hind.; ಜಿಗಣೆ - jigani, Can.; జలగ - jalaga, Tel.; അട്ട - atta, Mal.; அட்டை - attai, Tam.). Title from Tam. from (adu, tam. to adhere). San. from (jala, san. water + óka, san. dwelling). Can. from (jígí, can. adhesive). Tel. from sanscrit. Terms apply to family hirudinidæ, leeches of various genera. The officinal or green leech Sanguisuga medicinalis is of blackish green color, with six reddish brown, longitudinal streaks. The English, or speckled leech Sanguisuga medicinalis has six stripes spotted with black, the belly is greenish yellow, and spotted. The peculiar Madras leech is a bdella. Found in stagnant ponds and ditches, especially during the monsoon. It is larger than the European leech, and very voracious. Use by veidyans and hakeems same as with Europeans; they wash the part always with soap and water previously. The large Horse-leech, is also common in stagnant pools, depressed body and dusky-colored back, belly yellowish green. The Ceylon leech, met with in the south, is a dangerous animal to foot travellers at certain seasons; seldom more than an inch long, broad behind, taper towards the forepart; color brown, or light-brown; substance nearly transparent; very active, powers of contraction and expansion are great; point so sharp that it makes its way through smallest openings, and attacks feet, legs and thighs. Twelve species of leech are enumerated in shastrams, six of which poisonous. The six that are fit for use are:—Capilah, or tawny leech; Pingalah, pale red tinge; Chunk mookhy, yellow and has a long sharp head; Mooshikah, dun; Poondareeca mookhy, brown color and with mouth like flower of nelumbo; and Shabarikah, which resembles leaf of lotus in color.——Attapaudy (അട്ടപ്പാടി - attapáti, Mal.). From (atta, mal. leech + páti, mal. village). Valley; Malabar district, Valavanaud talook. Site of the source of the Bhawauny.

ATTINGAL (ആറ്റുങ്ങൽ - áttunnal, Mal.). From (áru, mal. river + kal, mal. locative termination). Sanscrit name (stri-bhága), meaning woman + portion; portion of the Travancore ranees. Village, Head-quarters of Tahsildar and Moonsif, Port; Travancore state, Trivandrum division, Cherankeel tal.; pop. 9,277; lat. 8° 42′; long. 76° 52′; from Anjengo N.E. 4¼ miles; from Alleppey S.S.E. 62 miles; from Cottayam S.S.E. 64 miles; from Madras S.W. 380 miles; from Nagarcoil N.W. 55 miles; from Paravore S.S.E. 106 miles; from Quilon S.E. 20 miles; from Trivandrum W.N.W. 18 miles; from the sea E. 5 miles. Ancient village on the Attingal or Vaumanapooram river, and on the main northern trunk road from Trivandrum. Constitutes, with seventeen surrounding villages, the hereditary domain of the Ranee or eldest princess of Travancore, who formerly possessed the sovereignty of the country, and with whom in the earliest periods of the English factory at Anjengo contracts were made. The country consisting of two adhicaurams or sub-divisions of the Cherankeel talook is still the private property of the Ranee. Through the Ranees, according to the custom of the Nayars, is still the line of succession to the throne. This district is administered by the princesses through their Cauryacauran or Manager. They reside here for a short time at least once a year, for change of air, river bathing and boating, and worship at their tutelar shrine. There is an ancient palace and pagoda here to which the Maharajah pays a state visit once a year in January for worshipping the family deity.

ATTIPAIR (അട്ടിപ്പേറു - attippéru, Mal.). From (atti, mal. to come in contact + péru, mal. birth). Contraction for Neer-attipair [q.v.].——Alagya attippair (അഴകിയഅട്ടിപ്പേറു - azhakiyaattippéru, Mal.). From (azhakiya, mal. fair + attippéru, mal. title deeds of freehold property). Otherwise Peroomartam. A tenure approximating closely to Otty [q.v.], the mortgagee being in possession and enjoying the whole produce. There is a peculiarity however, that the sum advanced, which is always the full marketable value of the land for the time being, is not mentioned in the deed; and the landlord, in redeeming his property, does not repay the amount originally advanced, but the actual value of it in the market at the time of redemption. In other respects the same rules that apply to Otty mortgages are applicable to these also. Deeds of this kind are in use only at Palghaut and Temmalapooram. See vol. II, 104.——Attippettola (അട്ടിപ്പെട്ടോല - attippéttóla, Mal.). From (óla, mal. palm leaf). Title deeds of free-hold property.

ATTY (அத்தி - atti, Tam.). From (attu, tam. to attach); from the gum. Fig.—"a" Botanically the Ficus genus, moraceæ [vricsham, 121]. Trees or shrubs; natives of warm countries; have alternate rarely opposite entire or lobed leaves; the flowers are usually incomplete and unlike those of most fruit trees make no outward appearance, but are concealed within the fig on its internal surface. There is a Tamul proverb:— அத்தி பூத்ததுபோல் இருக்கிறது அவன்வந்தது; "his "coming is like the flowering of the fig-tree;" something that never happens. The fruit is turbinate, fleshy, soft and hollow within; consists of globose or angular achenes, with a dry thin rarely pulpy pericarp; under favorable circumstances a fruit or two is formed along the shoots at the base of almost every leaf. Several fig-trees throw out aërial roots from branches which grow into the ground and again throw out branches. The trees are large and of rapid growth. The timber is of little value, being light, open, and soft. Some yield useful caoutchouc; several yield fibres for cordage, for half stuff, for paper-making. The species best known to the natives are:—arnottiana [wild peepul], asperrima [bramha's banyan], bengalensis [banyan], benjamina [small tsiela], carica [anjeer], citrifolia [wild banyan], cunia [large bramha's banyan], excelsa [tall-fig], glomerata [cluster fig], heterophylla [red fig], infectoria [stone banyan], laccifera [nooga], oppositifolia [devil fig], racemosa [country fig], religiosa [peepul], repens [creeper fig], retusa [chinese banyan], scandens [stone fig], tomentosa [hill banyan], tsiela [tsiela], tuberculata [hill tsiela], vagans [hill peepul]. Other s. indian species indigenous or naturalized are:—acutiloba, angustifolia, guttata, macrocarpa, rumphii, wightiana. The so called figs proper are shown below.—"b" Also applied to some species of other genera. Cf. Gomphia angustifolia (chóratti), red atty; Nephelium longana (púvatti), flowering atty. See gloss. paragraphs.——Cluster fig (यज्ञोडुम्बर - yañódumbara, San.; उंबर - umbara, Mahr.; درخت تين الاحمق - darakhtitínulahmak, Ar.; درخت ثمر پشه - darakhtisamarpashshah, Pers.; گولیر کا جھاڑ - gulerkájhár, Dec.; ಅತ್ತಿ - atti, Can.; ಅತ್ತಿಮರ - artimara, Too.; మేడి - médi, Tel.; ଡିମିରି - dimeri, Oor.; അത്തിയാൽ - attiyál, Mal.; අත්තික්කා - attikká, Singh.; அத்தி - atti, Tam.). Sheep and goat species, part of sub-family caprinæ, family bovidæ, order ruminantia, class mammalia [sastanam, 23], of naturalists [jantoo]. Cf. for plant terms:—Adhatoda vasica (ádusóge), what goats touch; Aristolochia bracteata (ádumuttadagida), what goats do not touch. Cf. for animal terms:—Cervulus muntjac (káttádu), forest goat; Tetraceros quadricornis (malaiyádu), mountain goat.——Cooroombaud (کربا - kurbá, Hind.; குறும்பாடு - kurumbádu, Tam.). Tam. from (kurumbu, tam. village in a desert tract). A short woolly sheep with crumpled horns [shemmariyaud].——Pulleiyaud (பள்ளையாடு - pallaiyádu, Tam.). Tam. from (pallai, tam. short and thick). An undersized goat; very prolific [vellaud].——Shemmariyaud (मेष - mésha, San.; لال بکرا - lálbakrá, Hind.; గొర్రె - gorre, Tel.; ചെമ്മരിയാട് - chemmariyátu, Mal.; செம்மறியாடு - shemmariyádu, Tam.). Hind. from (lál, hind. red + bakrá, hind. sheep). Tam. from (shem, tam. red + mari, tam. young one of sheep + ádu, tam. ovis). The ordinary sheep, browner than the goat, and hence so called; has some wool. The Shemmariyaud corresponds with Ovis aries, sub-family caprinæ, family bovidæ, order ruminantia, class mammalia [sastanam, 23], of naturalists [jantoo]. Horns in both sexes large, angular, heavily wrinkled, turned downwards almost into a circle, with their flat points directed forwards and outwards. No muffle; no beard; chaffron convex; large but immobile eye, pits in some, wanting in others; small feet-pits in all feet; inguinal glands distinct; two mammæ. The peculiar conformation of the mouth of the sheep, the lips being protected by hair, and the upper lip presenting a cleft, enables it to take bite much closer to the ground than cattle in general; and for this reason sheep can thrive on scanty pasture. Nellore district is famed for its large breed, the tallest in india; a good specimen stands across the withers thirty to thirty-six inches in height, and, when fattened, will weigh from 80 to 100 lb.; it has the usual form of twisted horns of moderate size, with a slight roman contour of the face; the prevailing color is white or a light brownish white with black points; the body is well covered with short fur or hair, with a light frill of hair frequently lining the throat and foreneck in the males; some have two long rounded pendulous lobules, from two to three inches in length, hanging side by side from the throat, which the natives term in tamul bells; the hair about the posterior part of the thighs, from the tail to hock, is longer and thicker than in most other parts; the tail is short; the ewes are hornless. The Madras sheep proper resembles a greyhound with tucked-up belly, having some coarseness of form; the feet light; limbs bony; sides flat; and tails short; it seldom exceeds twenty-two to twenty-eight inches in height; the horns are confined to the rams only, which, when the animal is well-grown, are generally of fair size, having the usual twist; these sheep have slight roman noses, and large ears in some instances and small pointed ones in others; they are covered with short, coarse hair, the prevailing color being red or brown, of which there are various shades, and many have the "bells" above mentioned depending from the throat; the ewes are an inch or two lower than the rams; they make fair nurses and milk well; a variety of this sheep is sometimes met with, in which the rams are hornless, the throat and foreneck lined with a thick shaggy coat of hair, extending like a frill from the throat to the breast, and often reaching to the knees. This Madras breed proper is found in the Chingleput, parts of the Kistna, Godavery, Ganjam, North arcot, South arcot, Salem, Trichinopoly, Tanjore, Madura and Tinnevelly districts. Neither the Madras, nor the Nellore breed furnishes wool or hair fit for textile purposes. Coimbatore district is famed for a breed of wool producing sheep; it is, on the whole, a small breed, the rams seldom exceeding twenty-six, and the ewes twenty-two inches in height; the rams carry large twisted horns, whilst the ewes are hornless the prevailing color is white with a black head; their carcases have a fair covering of wool, the staple being from four to five inches in length; the fleece of the best sheep seldom exceeds 3 lb. in weight; it is more frequently 1 or 2 lb.; these animals, though small, fatten well; their weight ranges from 50 to 60 lb., and very rarely 80 lb., live weight; this breed is generally imported into the malabar district from coimbatore. A woolly breed of sheep exist throughout Mysore and these are imported into South canara. The Mysore sheep are of three varieties, the Coorumba, Golla, and Yeediga; taking their names from the caste of people who keep them. Sheep are let in to land for manure; there is a Teloogoo proverb:—గొర్రెకాలు బంగారు— "It suffices if sheep merely walk over the land." There is a large mutton-eating population in Southern india, exclusive of Europeans. Agastya veidya einnoor speaks unfavorably of the mutton of the Cooroombaud as promoting too much bile. Kid, it says, is the lightest and safest of all kinds of animal food for the sick. Veidyans employ mutton suet in preparation of ointments; also administer it internally, with fruit of Azima tetracantha, lamk., nutmeg and cubebs, in hemoptysis, and in certain stages of phthisis pulmonalis. Sheep's tendon is used as a substitute for catgut for some purposes. Sheep's foot oil is used by tanners, shoe-makers, &c. Rams are sometimes kept for sport. The Tamul cooral has the following:—ஊக்க முடையா னொடுக்கம் பொருதகர், தாக்கற்குப் பேருந் தகைத்து—"The self-restraint of the energetic is like the "drawing back of a fighting ram in order to butt." Indian species of Ovis not here found are:—Blanfordii or blanford's wild sheep, Brookei or brooke's wild sheep, Cycloceros or punjaub wild sheep, Hodgsoni or argali or ovis ammon of thibet, Karelini or karelin's wild sheep, Nahura or burhel or blue wild sheep, Polii or marco polo's sheep, Vignei or vigne's wild sheep.——Vellaud (छाग - chhága, San.; چھیلا - chhelá, Hind.; ಆಡು - ádu, Can.; మేక - méka, Tel.; വെള്ളാട് - vellátu, Mal.; வெள்ளாடு - velládu, Tam.). Tam. from (vel, tam. white + ádu, tam. ovis). The ordinary goat, a long legged animal, much commoner than the sheep. The Vellaud corresponds generally with Hircus ægagrus, alias Capra hircus, sub-family carprinæ, family bovidæ, order ruminantia, class mammalia [sastanam, 23], of naturalists. Domesticated from the Ibex. Characterized by having the horns sub-angular, recurved, compressed, seated on the crest of the forehead, and by their union, covering the top of the head. The males are generally bearded and emit a strong odour. There are several varieties, the chief of which are the long and short legged race. A large export trade in goat skins is now being established with America, and the demand is likely to increase. Goat's hair has been used for textile fabrics. The natives attach medicinal virtues to goat's milk which is abundant. The Mahomedans specially keep them for milking purposes. Flesh tough and tasteless, though much eaten by natives; veidyans consider it has virtues in incontinence of urine. Indian species of Capra not here found are:—Ægagrus or wild goat of asia minor, Megaceros or markhor, Sibirica or himalayan ibex.

AUDA (ఆడ - áda, Tel.). Female. Common for joining genera. Ex., where transl. is of second term:—Anisomeles ovata (ádabíra), luffa acutangula; Cadaba indica (ádamorinika), mærua arenaria, var. glabra. See gloss. paragraphs.——Audapaupa (ఆడపాప - ádapápa, Tel.). From (above + pápa, tel. child). A community of Devadausies or pagoda dancers, maintained by the Shiva temple at Calastry [jauty].

AUDAK (आढक - ádhaka, San.; ಅಡಕ - ádaka, Can.). Mysore grain measure equal to 7 lbs. avoirdupois, or as a measure of capacity containing about 750 cubic inches. A minor mercaul [q.v.]. Distinguish from the small measures Oyak and Olluck [alavay, 3f].

AUDAM (ஆடம் - ádam, Tam.). Liquid measure, especially for oil; Tanjore and Trichinopoly. 20 seers = 1 audam; 6 audams = 1 pothy [alavay, 4a]. Approximate actual value, 1 audam = 1312½ cubic inches. Compare Paunay.

AUDAY (ஆடை - ádai, Tam.). Dress.——Auday otty (ஆடையொட்டி - ádaiyotti, Tam.). From (ádai, tam. dress + ottu, tam. to stick); from action of bristles. Title otherwise Round-leaved pupalia. Botanically Pupalia orbiculata, wight., amarantaceæ [vricsham, 106]. Alias Achyranthes orbiculata; Cyathula orbiculata. Sand-binder. An extensively spreading procumbent plant, the branches being often several feet long, round, pubescent, of a light brownish-green color; leaves when full grown coriaceous and nearly glabrous; spikes terminal, long, at first compact, but becoming interrupted as the plant increases in length; fascicles of flowers capitate, densely tomentose, bristles when full-grown not simple, but compound, or as it were pinnate, pale brown, attaching themselves to the clothes of passengers, cling to them with tenacity. Another species is atropurpurea. Cf. Indian burr.

AUDHOONICA (आधुनिक - ádhunika, San.). From (adhuná, san. now). Modern classics, as opposed to ancient [cavy].

AUDITYAN (आदित्य - áditya, San.). From (aditi, san. the mother of gods). Son of Adity. The sun. Auditya vauram Sunday. The twelve suns or the presiding deity of the sun for each month, beginning with Chittray [mausam] or April are :—Dhautry, Chuckran, Aryaman, Mitran, Varoonan, Amshooman, Hiranyan, Bhagavan, Diveshwaran, Pooshan, Savitry and Twashtry. They belong to a period before the time of the vedas, when the worship of the elements particularly of the sun, was first observed. Vishnoo is called chief of the Audityans. Auditya vurman was a common royal name among Cholas, Cadambas, Western chalookyas, Travancore line, &c. [matam].

AUDRY (अद्रि - adri, San.). From (a, san. not + drí, san. to split); not liable to be split. Vowel lengthened by composition. Hill. Suffix in place names; as Totaudry, meaning praise + hill. Neelaudry is old name of Neilgherries.

AUDY (आदि - ádi, San.). First, ancient. Epithet of any of the Hindoo triad as well as of other deities. Common second name among non-bramins. Common also as prefix in second names, as :—Audayya from (ayya, tel. master); Audikeshava from (késhava, san. vishnu, the long-haired); Audinarrain from (náráyana, san. vishnu, the mover on the water); Audisheshoo from (shésha, san. serpent king); Audiyammah from (amma, tel. mother), female name; Audiyappa from (appa, tel. father) [peyar].——Audy rajah (आदिराजा - ádirájá, San.; ആഴിരാജാവു - ázhirájávu, Mal.). Title and San. from (ádi, san. first + rájá, san. king). Mal. from (ázhi, mal. the deep + rájá, san. king); the sea king; this is the real meaning. Corruptly also Ally rajah. Honorific title of the chief male representative of the Cannanore Moplah family. Cannanore, originally included in the kingdom of the Colattiry or Chiracal rajahs, had become by the middle of sixteenth century chief seat of Moplahs and a Mahomedan state of some importance, almost independent of the Nayar king. Under the representative of this title the Portuguese were allowed to occupy a small fort in Cannanore where they had a church and college of Jesuits. A century later the Cannanore rajah's dominions reached 10 miles southward of Cannanore to the Tellicherry river, near which was his harbour of Dharmapatam. An Audy rajah in 1753 supported the English cause against the French. A treaty of offensive and defensive alliance between an Audy rajah and Thomas Hodges, Chief of Tellicherry, on behalf of the English East india company, was concluded in 1759. In 1766 an Audy rajah instigated Hyder ally to his successful invasion of Malabar, and was entrusted with the management of all the conquered states from Chiracal to Cochin, except Cochin, Coringote and Randatarra. On the capture of Cannanore by the British in 1784 the Beeby or female and real head of the house became tributary to the East india company. Cannanore was taken again in 1791, and has since remained in British hands. In the Cannanore family, as usual in Malabar, the succession goes in the female line. The last male ruler before the present was succeeded by his niece, whose husband died during the siege of Cannanore in 1790. She was succeeded by her daughter and grand-daughter. The latter died in October 1861, and the Madras government at first recognized her distant female relative to the exclusion of her son. But on further investigation of the case, Audy rajah's right to the succession was recognized [charitram].——Audy sheshan (आदिशेष - ádishésha, San.). From (above + shésha, san. remainder); as he is said to have existed prior to creation and to continue to exist after its destruction. Eternal matter, on which Vishnoo reposes during the night of Bramha, when the destructive power only is in operation. Represented as an immense snake forming by its many coils a bed on which Vishnoo sleeps; and with its many heads erect, forked tongues projecting, forming a canopy over Vishnoo's head. Audy sheshan supports the eight elephants which support in turn the world. There is a popular tale of a dispute between him and Vayoo, regent of wind. The latter, in a trial of strength, blew against the thousand peaks of Mount meroo, and Audy sheshan covered each peak by one of his thousand heads. In the legend of Tripatty a special version of this tale is made. Vayoo made a feint, and ceased blowing. Audy sheshan lifted up one head to see where was Vayoo, when the latter suddenly returned and blew off the exposed peak, which was carried through the air and fell at Tripatty, a hill that now partakes of the sanctity of Mount meroo. Audy sheshan being mortified at the above, performed penance at Varauhagherry, and on the god appearing asked for conquest over Vayoo. In answer the god said, "Have "power to eat the wind." Hence by virtue of this permission snakes can live for a long time on air alone [matam].

AUDY (ஆடி - ádi, Tam.). Corruption of ashaudham, fourth lunar month. Fourth solar month [mausam].——Audy amavausyay (ஆடியமாவாசியை - ádiyamávásiyai, Tam.). Means fourth solar month + new moon day. Luni-solar festival [pundigay, 5a]. The new moon occurring in the fourth solar month Audy [mausam], i.e., between July 15th and August 14th. Observed only by Tamuls.——Audy pathinett (ஆடிப்பதினெட்டு - ádippathinettu, Tam.). Means fourth solar month + eighteen, number of day of month. Solar festival [pundigay, 2c]. Festival of Cauvery floods on eighteenth of fourth solar month Audy [mausam] about 2nd August among Tamuls. Popularly known as Pathinettaum perook, or flood of the eighteenth. Sometimes Audy perook, or July floods.——Audy pooram (ஆடிப்பூரம் - ádippúram, Tam.). Means, fourth solar month + Poorva phalgoony, the eleventh lunar asterism. Luni-solar festival [pundigay, 5b]. On the day in the fourth solar month Audy [mausam], i.e., between July 15th and August 14th, when the moon is in the constellation, Pooram. Celebrated in pagodas of Shiva, in honor of Parvaty.——Audy pundigay (ஆடிப்பண்டிகை - ádippandigai, Tam.). Means fourth solar month + festival. Solar festival [pundigay, 2d]. Otherwise Dacshinauyana poonya caulam, or the auspicious time when the sun is supposed to enter on its southern course. On July 15th the first day of fourth solar month Audy [mausam]. A day of recreation on which Hindoos feast on boiled cocoanuts. Tarpanam also takes place [maryauday].

AUGAMAM (आगम - ágama, San.). From (ágam, san. to know). Otherwise (divyágama), meaning divine augamam. In law, a voucher. Twenty-eight sacred books, inculcating mystical worship of Shiva and Shacty, which with Sheiveites supersede most Pooraunams and Oopapooraunams. They recognize instead of the usual trinity, five great deities; Bramha, Vishnoo, Roodran, Maheshwaran, and Sadaushivan. These are called the five Curtas. The Augamams are rare and little known. They are explained in Shivarchana chundricay, a treatise on Shiva worship by sage Vishweshwaran. All augamams are divided into four sections, namely, Nyaunapaudam or knowledge section, Yogapaudam or meditation section, Charyapaudam or section relating to practice of austerities, and Kriyapaudam or ceremonial section. Distinguish from Nigamam or vedic text. The Dacshinacharry shauctas follow the Nigamams, the Vaumacharry shauctas follow the Augamams. Besides Sheiva augamams, there are two Veishnava augamams, Pauncharautram and Veikhaunasam. The following is the list of Sheiva augamams.——Ajitam (अजित - ajita, San.). From (a, san. negative prefix + ji, san. to conquer); invincible; epithet of shiva, the supreme.——Amshooman (अंशुमान् - amshumán, San.). From (amshu, san. ray + mat, san. affix showing possession); the radiant.——Analam (अनल - anala, San.). Means fire.——Bhedam (भेद - bhéda, San.). From (bhid, san. to divide); difference.——Bimbam (बिम्ब - bimba, San.). Means reflected form, otherwise (mukhabimba), meaning face + reflection.——Caumicam (कामिक - kámika, San.). From (kam, san. to desire).——Cauranam (कारण - kárana, San.). Means cause; as originant.——Chintyam (चिन्त्य - chintya, San.). From (chit, san. to know); object of meditation.——Chundra nyaunam (चन्द्रज्ञान - chandrañána, San.). From (chandra, san. moon + ñána, san. knowledge); knowledge of shiva.——Deeptam (दीप्त - dípta, San.). From (díp, san. to shine); luminous.——Kiranam (किरण - kirana, San.). From (krí, san. to scatter); means ray of light; sun.——Lalitam (ललित - lalita, San.). Means love.——Macootam (मकुट - makuta, San.). Means crown.——Niswausam (निश्वास - nishvása, San.). Means inspiration.——Paurameshwaram (पारमेश्वर - pâraméshvara, San.). From (parama, san. supreme + íshvara, san. lord).——Prodgeetam (प्रोद्गीत - pródgíta, San.). From (pra, san. intensive prefix + udgíta, san. sung); perhaps from opening words.——Rowravam (रौरव - raurava, San.). From (ru, san. to kill); a place where the soul undergoes inordinate torture.——Sahasram (सहस्र - sahasra, San.). Means thousand; perhaps in allusion to shiva with thousand heads, eyes, arms and feet.——Santauna sarwottam (सन्तानसर्वयुक्त - santánasarvayuktá, San.). From (santána, san. succession + sarva, san. all + yukta, san. joined); he in whom is all succession.——Siddham (सिद्ध - siddha, San.). From (sidh, san. to accomplish), accomplished; perfect; epithet of shiva.——Soocshmam (सूक्ष्म - súkshma, San.). Means subtle.——Sooprabhedhacam (सुप्रभेदक - suprabhédaka, San.). From (su, san. intensive prefix + prabhédaka, san. separating).——Swauyambhooram (स्वायम्भुव - sváyambhuva, San.). From (svayam, san. self + bhú, san. to be).——Vautoolam (वातुल - vátula, San.). From (váta, san. wind); crazy.——Veeram (वीर - víra, San.). Means heroism. Otherwise (víratantra), meaning heroic tantram.——Vijayam (विजय - vijaya, San.). Means victory.——Vimalam (विमल - vimala, San.). Means purity.——Yogajam (योगज - yógaja, San.). From (yóga, san. meditation + jan, san. to be born); fruits of meditation [matam].

AUHAN (अयस् - ayas, San.; حديد - hadíd, Ar.; آهن - áhan, Pers.; लोहा - lohá, Hind.; ಕಬ್ಬಿಣ - kabbina, Can.; ఇనుము - inumu, Tel.; ഇരിമ്പ - irimpu, Mal.; இரும்பு - irumbu, Tam.). San. from (i, san. to go). Can. from (kappu, can. black + banna, can. color). Tel. from tamul. Tam. from (irul, tam. black + pon, tam. metal). Iron. Ferrum of chemists. Gray color and strong metallic lustre, susceptible of being heightened by polishing. Exceeds all metals in tenacity [dhautoo, loham]. For distribution see vol. II, 36. The native metal is scarce, most iron being found in form of oxide, in ochres, bog ores, and other friable earthy substances of brown, yellow, or red color [tavalay cull]. Iron obtained by smelting is not pure, but in the three following states, white crude iron, grey crude iron, and black cast iron, which last is commonly fused with white iron. Crude iron, especially grey, fused again in contact with air, unites, sparkles, loses weight, and becomes less brittle, and may be converted into bar iron by fusing it in charcoal and beating it. The purified or bar iron, is soft, ductile, flexible, and malleable. The same is converted into steel by being exposed to the action of heat, in contact with carbonaceous matter, which penetrates its substance; and by being tempered when red hot by immersion in water, by which it becomes harder, more elastic, and brittle. In the selection of ores the native manufacturer employs only those which are rich in metal, never mixing those of different qualities, and seldom using fluxes to suit particular ores. The clay iron stones and calcareous iron ores are neglected. The furnaces in which the ores are smelted are small and the walls are not thick. The only blast is that of the common native bellows made of cow skins inflated, and the metal does not flow freely enough to be separated from the scoriæ. The native process may be regarded as one for refining and not for smelting the ores. The silicious particles are got rid of, and the iron is agglutinated into a lump which descends to the bottom and is taken out in a state fit for working up. By this mode the subsequent heating and puddling which are required in the English process for cast iron are avoided. The process is economical for manufactures of a small kind. For s. indian steel see Wootz. Indian pharmacopœia articles are very numerous [ospitry]. For native medical uses see below, especially annabhaidy and iroomboo tooroo [veidyan]. Iron is not much valued here. There is a Tamul proverb :—எத்தனை புடம் இட்டாலும் இரும்பு பசும்பொன் ஆகாது "However much iron may be heated, "it will not become gold."——Anna bhaidy (அன்னபேதி - annabhéthi, Tam.). See sep. title.——Cauntam (காந்தம் - kándam, Tam.). Magnetic oxide of iron. See sep. title.——Cooshy (कुशी - kushí, San.). Wrought iron.——Iroomboo pody (लोहचूर्ण - lóhachúrna, San.; لوهے کا بورا - lohekábúrá, Hind.; ಕಬ್ಬಿನರಾಪುಡಿ - kabbinarápodi, Can.; ఇనుమురాపొడి - inumurápodi, Tel.; ഇരിമ്പുപ്പൊടി - irimpuppoti, Mal.; இரும்புப்பொடி - irumbuppodi, Tam.). San. from (lóha, san. iron + chúrna, san. powder). Tel. from (rátsu, tel. to file + podi, tel. powder). Mal. and Tam. mean iron-powder. Iron filings. Ferri limatura of chemists. Not used as medicine by Hindoos. Used as tonic by Mahomedans, prescribed by them along with ginger and cumin seeds. In conjunction with vinegar, cadookye, and marootham bark, used for dyeing black; also with other ingredients, to give leather the same color.——Iroomboo tooroo (अयोमल - ayómala, San.; لوهیکا گو - lohekágú, Hind.; ಕಬ್ಬಿನದತುಕ್ಕು - kabbinadatukku, Can.; ఇనుపతుప్పు - inupatuppu, Tel.; ഇരിമ്പുത്തുരുവു - irimputturuvu, Mal.; இரும்புத்துரு - irumbutturu, Tam.). San. from (ayas, san. iron + mala, san. refuse). Hind. from (lohá, hind. iron + gú, hind. impurity). Can. from (kabbina, can. iron + tukku, can. rust). Tel. from (inumu, tel. iron + tuppu, tel. rust). Rust of iron. Otherwise Impure red oxide of iron. Ferri peroxidum, Ferri rubigo of chemists. Native medicinal use, tonic, emmenagogue and anthelmintic. Substituted for British Tinctura ferri perchloride. Used by natives for nearly the same purposes in the arts, as iron filings.——Irooppoo kittam (मण्डूर - mandúra, San.; ಕಬ್ಬಿನದಕಿಟ್ಟ - kabbinadakitta, Can.; ఇనుపచిట్టెము - inupachittemu, Tel.; ഇരിമ്പുകിട്ടം - irimpukkittam, Mal.; இருப்புக்கிட்டம் - iruppukkittam, Tam.). Title from (irumbu, tam. iron + kitta, san. dirt). San. from (mand, san. to surround). Can. from (kabbina, can. iron + kitta, can. dross). Tel. from (inumu, tel. iron + chittemu, tel. dross). Scales of iron, oxidized iron.——Swarnamaucshicam (स्वर्णमाक्षिक - svarnamákshika, San.; ಕಲ್ಲಿದ್ದಲು - kallíddalu, Can.; స్వర్ణమాక్షికము - svarnamákshikamu, Tel.; பொன்னிமிளை - ponnimilai, Tam.). San. from (svarna, san. gold + mákshika, san. honey). Can. from (kallu, can. stone + iddalu, can. coal). Tam. from (pon, tam. gold + nimilai, tam. pyrite). Iron pyrites. Occurs dark yellow nodules with a golden lustre. As an alterative in tonic, generally used in combination with other medicines of its class, such as iron, talc, mercury, &c.——Tandavaulam (कान्तलौह - kántalauha, San.; తండువాళము - tanduválamu, Tel.; தண்டவாளம் - tandaválam, Tam.). Title from tamul. Tam. from (danda, san. stick + pálam, tam. bar of metal). San. from (kánta, san. beautiful + lauha, san. iron). Cast-iron.——Taura maucshicam (तारमाक्षिक - táramákshika, San.; ತಾರಮಾಕ್ಷಿಕ - táramákshika, Can.; తారమాక్షికము - táramákshikamu, Tel.; வெள்ளிமிளை - vellinimilai, Tam.). San. from (tára, san. radiating + mákshika, san. honey); on account of its likeness to honey. Tam. from (velli, tam. silver + nimilai, tam. pyrite). San. also (rúpyamákshika), meaning silver + pyrite. Tam. also (rajatanimilai), meaning silver + pyrite. Iron pyrites; variety with silvery radiated crystals. Same uses as Swarna maucshicam.

AUK (ఆకు - áku, Tel.). Leaf.—"a" Plant first term. Ex.:—Euphorbia cattimandoo (ákujemudu), leafy euphorbia.—"b" Plant second term. Ex., where transl. is of first term:—Cinnamomum iners (pattsáku), green; Launea pinnatifida (vádateduáku), rudder; Nicotiana tabacum (pogáku), smoke; Notonia grandiflora (kundéluchevviáku), hare's ear; Pistia stratiotes (nírâku), water. See gloss. paragraphs.——Aukroy (कलिङ्ग - kalinga, San.; ఆకురాయి - ákuráyi, Tel.). Title from teloogoo. San. from (kali, san. strife + gam, san. to go); quarrelsome. Tel. from (ákuráyi, tel. file); from call like rasping of file. Cuckoo-shrikes or File-birds. Campephaginæ, laniadæ [pingalam], dentirostres, insessores, aves [pacshy, 19], of naturalists [jantoo].—"a" The black headed cuckoo-shrike is Volvocivora sykesii, called by natives small aukroy. Alias Campaphaga sykesii; Ceblepyris canus, fimbriatus. Head, neck and breast, deep black; whole upper plumage pale grey; tail black, outer feathers broadly tipped white; lower breast and abdomen pale grey, passing white on lower abdomen and lower tail-coverts; hunts in small parties, slowly examining the foliage; favorite food caterpillars and other soft insects; usually silent, but has harsh call.—"b" The grey cuckoo-shrike is Graucalus macei, called by natives large aukroy. Alias Graucalus nipalensis, papuensis. Whole upper plumage light plumbeous grey. Flesh eaten.

AUKHIR (آخر - ákhir, Hind.). Last, the end. Aukhiry chahaur shamba is the last Wednesday of Safar. So observances thereon [islam, shamba]. See vol. I (96).

AUL (آل - ál, Hind.). Same as Dyeing mulberry.

AUL (ಆಳು - álu, Can.; ആൾ - ál, Mal.; ஆள் - ál, Tam.). From (ál, tam. to rule). An individual. Aul amaunjy is same as Amanjy. Aul cooly are wages of laborer. Aulotty from (óttu, tam. to drive) is an overseer. Aul pauttom is in Malabar hire of a laborer lent out to another person. Aul soonka was in Canara a tax once levied on cultivators who employed laborers, at so much per head of laborers. See vol. I, 112.——Aulcautty (ஆள்காட்டி - álgátti, Tam.). Means man + pointer; from screeching on approach of man by night. Bird name common to:—Lobivanellus goensis, Ortygornis ponticeriana, Sarciophorus bilobus; see gloss. paragraphs.

AUL (ആൽ - ál, Mal.; ஆல் - ál, Tam.). From (álu, tam. to spread). Banyan tree, Ficus bengalensis, linn. Suffix in place names; as Otteiyaul, meaning Solitary banyan. Plant second term. AULAY (ആല - ála, Mal.; ஆலை - álai, Tam.). From (álu, tam. to resound). Sugar mill. Suffix in place names as Shetvaulay, meaning muddy ground + sugar mill. Also proper name in lower castes [peyar]. The native sugar mill is of wood with two uprights, one revolving round the other, and between the two the cane is pressed. Bullocks walk round and cause the mill to revolve. The cane is cut into pieces about two cubits long. These are inserted between the uprights, when the sap flows down, and the crushed cane comes out above. Each piece is crushed three times. A vat beneath the mill catches the juice. As soon as the vat is full, the juice is taken out in pots, poured into a vessel and boiled. When the juice has boiled for three or four hours, it becomes jaggery. It is then poured into a long wooden trough, and left to cool. When it has cooled, it is stirred with wooden trowels to cause it to harden. It is then made with the hand into balls and so sold [jaggery, sugar].——Aulangaud (ആലങ്ങാട് - álannátu, Mal.). From (above + kátu, mal. forest). AULORE (ఆలూరు - álúru, Tel. alúr *). From (ávu, tel. cattle + úru, tel. village).——(1) Talook, Bellary district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. Area 686 square miles. Population 88,088. Language Canarese and Teloogoo. E. talook of district. Bounded on the north by the Adony talook, E. Putticondah talook of Kurnool district and Gooty talook of Anantapore district, south by Gooty talook, and west by Bellary talook and the Hagary river. The surface is a uniform dead level, except for the low hills near Holagondy and the rocks near Ramandroog. The soil throughout is the best regar. Trees will not grow, for beneath the black soil there is a soft calcareous limestone, which renders the water in all the wells brackish. Almost every acre fit for cultivation has been taken up. The principal crops are cotton and cholum, and these are sent out to Bellary, the surrounding talooks, and Madras. Holagondy and Molagavelly are the centres of the trade, and many of the merchants here are very wealthy. Paddy and coarse cloths are imported. The Hagary river flows along the western boundary of the talook, but no channels are taken from it. The river changes its bed frequently, and on either bank for some distance the soil is deeply covered with drifted sand-heaps which prohibit cultivation. From the uniform dead level of the talook the storage of water is not easy, and there is no tank of any size. The largest is at Aulore cusbah; that at Arikera is second to it being about two miles from the cusbah, where a small gorge in the hills has been dammed up. Best camping grounds are:—Arikera, Aspry, Aulore, Ballore, Chintacoonta, Chippagherry, Gooliem, Harivaunam, Holagondy, Lingadahully, Molagavelly, and Virpapore. Places of archæological interest:—Aulore, Chippagherry, Coroocondah, Haulhervy, Nerniky, Rauvihaul, Sheedarhaul, Yellarty. Trig. stations in the talook:—Arkeribetta, Holagondy. The leading places, &c., in the talook are the following.——Arikera (అరికెర - arikera, Tel.). From (ari, can. stone + kere, can. tank). AULY (سیپی - sípí, Hind.; ಚಿಪ್ಪು ಮೀನು - chippumínu, Can.; గుల్లచేప - gullachépa, Tel.; മുരു - muru, Mal.; ஆளி - áli, Tam.). Tel. from (gulla, tel. shell + chépa, tel. fish). Oyster. Ostrea edulis of naturalists. South indian oysters small, but inferior to none in any part of the world. Coromandel coast oysters are best in months of May, June, July and August. Places where Coromandel coast oysters are found, of the best quality, are:—Alamparva, Ennore, Ramnaud, the best; Caricaul, Topetoray and Sadras, not quite so good; Fort St. David and Cuddalore, tolerably good. Malabar coast oysters are in season earlier than on Coromandel coast, and season ends in May. On Malabar coast best oysters procured at Calicut and Tellicherry. At the mouths of several rivers on west coast oyster-beds have been made by the natives. Best on west coast in the months of March, April and May. Variety called rock-oyster by English fishermen, occasionally met with in some parts of Coromandel coast; distinguished by being thin.

AUM (آم - ám, Hind.). From (ámra, san. mango). Mango. Cf. also Spondias mangifera (janglíám), jungle mango, and several similar.

AUMADA (ఆమడ - ámada, Tel.). Linear measure. 4 pargoos = 1 aumada [alavay, 1b]. Approximate actual value, 1 aumada = 10 miles. Compare San. yojanam, Hind. gow, Tam. cautham.

San. also (ámanda), meaning a beautiful plant; (gandharvahasta), meaning gandharvan's hand, from serrate leaves; (pañchángula), meaning five fingered, from appearance of leaf. Can. also (audlagida), meaning castor-oil seed + plant; (karala). Tel. also (errámuda), meaning red + castor-oil plant. Mal. also (kotta), meaning seed; (pándiyávanakku), meaning paundy, the place + the plant. Tam. also (muttukkottaiççedi), meaning pearl + seed + plant; (kottaimuttuççedi), meaning seed + pearl + plant. Greek κρότων and κίκι; Latin ricinus. First Greek name and the Latin name derived from resemblance to a tick or dog louse. Second Greek name is from Egyptian. The name Palma christi, derived from its substitution by Christians on Palm sunday for true palm branches. Castor-oil is the Palmæ oleum of old pharmacologists. In Shakespeare's As you like it, Rosalind says, "Look "here, what I found on a palm tree," which means the Palma christi. Title otherwise Castor, Gandharva's hand, Jonah's gourd, Lamp-oil plant, Palma christi plant, Pearl-seed plant, Yerandam.—"a" Botanically Ricinus communis, linn., euphorbiaceæ [vricsham, 118]. Alias Ricinus vulgaris. Height 8-10 feet; root perennial; stem round, thick, jointed, channelled, glaucous, purplish-red color upwards; leaves alternate, large, deeply divided into seven segments, on long, tapering, purplish stalks; spikes glaucous, springing from the divisions of the branches; the males from the lower part of the spike, the females from the upper; capsules prickly; seeds oval, shining, black dotted with grey; flowering nearly all the year; cultivated; in hot countries it is a perennial, in cold an annual or biennial; found here wild, but generally cultivated.—"b" Two varieties, known respectively as fructibus minoribus; and fructibus majoribus; the former is a small distorted plant, as compared with latter. Distinguished in vernaculars as small and large. Oil made from seeds of small-seeded variety is viscid, nearly colorless or of pale-yellow color, and has a peculiar bland oily taste with a slight nauseous smell; this is called castor-oil. That from large seeded variety is much thicker, more or less of brown color, and has an acrid and very disagreeable nauseous taste and odour; this is called lamp-oil. But there is no difference between the oils of small and large seeds, if they are prepared in a proper manner, and by cold-drawn process.—"c" Skin of the seeds consists of three coverings; the active principle is found more or less throughout the entire seed; the oil is soluble in pure sulphuric ether and alcohol; combines easily with alkaline leys; being entirely soluble in highly rectified alcohol of specific gravity ·825, any adulteration of it with other fixed oils may be ascertained by dissolving a sample in eight times its weight of spirit; the fixed oil is not dissolved but floats on the surface; this however is not an infallible test.—"d" Cultivated in red sandy soil; dry ground prepared in south in chittray [mausam] or april; on coromandel in jyeshtam or june and ashaudham [mausam] or july, on w. coast in maidom or april and yedavam [mausam] or may, seed sown in south in auvany [mausam] or august and coromandel in shrauvanam [mausam] or august, on w. coast in maidom or april and yedavam or may; no nursery; seed sown in furrows; depends solely upon rain; grown usually as a field border, commonly on the border of cotton and sugar-cane fields; sometimes on isolated patches of a few square yards near dwelling houses; three to six months after sowing branches are cut and gathered; covered by leaves till rotten; then exposed to sun for two or three days and beaten with sticks and seeds separated; brought to market one month after; average price, 16 imperial seers for 1 rupee.—"e" The ordinary process of boiling seeds for oil is as follows:—The seeds are cleared of small stones and other substances, heated or toasted a little, and then beaten into a mass in stone mortars; this mass is boiled just like rice, when oil floats on the surface; the oil is then poured into another vessel and heated twice again; it is of a dark color; the mass precipitated at bottom of vessel at first boiling of seeds is made into bratties and used as fuel; this rough process is generally applied to the larger variety.—"f" The following is a Tamulian recipé for making an oil for domestic purposes. It will be observed that it is entirely the hot-drawn process:—Take five seers of the smaller castor-oil nuts, and soak them for one night in cold water; next morning strain this water off, throw it away, and put the nuts into a second quantity of fresh water, and boil them in it for two hours; after which strain the water off and throw it away as in the first instance; the nuts are then to be dried in the sun on a mat for three days, at the end of which time they are to be well-bruised in a mortar; add to the nuts thus bruised ten measures of water, and set them on the fire to boil, taking care to keep continually stirring the contents of the pot until all the oil appears at the top, when it is to be carefully strained off, and after being allowed to cool put into a bottle for use; the quantity of nuts mentioned in the above recipé ought to yield about one quart bottle full of oil; in place of the ten measures of plain water, the same quantity of cocoanut water may be used, being supposed to make the castor-oil of a paler and finer color.—"g" The following is the more scientific mode of making the oil:—The fresh seeds after having been sifted and cleaned from dust, stones, and all extraneous matters, are slightly crushed between two rollers, freed by hand from husks and colored grains, and enclosed in squares of clean gunny or canvas; the packets of seed then receive a slight pressure in an oblong mould which gives a uniform shape and density to them; the bricks as they are technically called are then placed alternately with plates of sheet iron in an ordinary screw press; on the application of a gradually increasing pressure, the oil exudes through the pores of the gunny and is received into clean tins. So far this is the cold-drawn process, giving the purest oil; the process however generally proceeds, and water in the proportion of a pint to a gallon of oil being added, the whole is boiled until the water has evaporated; the mucilage will then be found to have subsided and encrusted the bottom of the pan, whilst the albumen solidified by the heat has formed a thin layer between the oil and the water; great care must be taken to remove the pan from the fire the instant the whole of the water has evaporated, which may be known by the bubbles having ceased, for if allowed to remain longer, the oil which has hitherto been of the temperature of boiling water or 212°, suddenly rises to that of oil or nearly 600°, thereby heightening the color and communicating an empyreumatic taste and odour; the oil is then filtered through blanket, flannel or american drill, and put into cans for exportation; it is usually of a light straw color, sometimes approaching a greenish tinge; the cleansed seeds yield from forty-seven to fifty per cent. of oil.—"h" The oils made here are much stronger than those of France and Italy.—"i" Castor-oil is the well known laxative medicine; among hindoos used as remedy in cutaneous affections externally applied; bark of the root is a powerful purgative; fresh juice used as an emetic in poisoning by opium and other narcotics; plant gives to pharm. ricini semina, preparation oleum ricini, officinal, from the fructibus minoribus; lamp-oil, like castor-oil, is purgative.—"j" Castor-oil becomes readily rancid, then considered dangerous; but in that state it may be purified by calcined magnesia.—"k" Leaves are a favorite food of some silk-worms; castor-oil used for culinary purposes; seeds also put into curries.—"l" Lamp-oil employed for common and simple lamps, where viscidity and drying qualities no objection, and in horse medicine; seeds used by dyers to mix with colors and render them permanent. Castor-oil is used for burning in the better class of wicklamps and other domestic purposes; also used by natives for anointing the head; soap of good quality may be made from it; but cost and disagreeable smell preclude its general use.—"m" Wood white, soft, light, with large central pith.—"n" No other species here.——Creeping aumanac (കൊടിയാവണക്ക - kotiyávanakku, Mal.; புல்லாமணக்கு - pullámanakku, Tam.). Mal. from (koti, mal. creeper + ávanakku, mal. ricinus communis, linn.). Tam. from (pul, tam. small + ámanakku, tam. ricinus communis, linn.). Tam. also (kallámanakku), meaning stone + castor plant. Title otherwise Pillaumanac. Botanically Sebastiana chamælea, müller, euphorbiaceæ [vricsham, 118]. Alias Tragia chamælea. Perennial or herbaceous; flowers small, greenish; flowering in cold season. No other species here.——Foreign aumanac (பறங்கியாமணக்கு - parangiyámanakku, Tam.). Title from leaf. Tam. also (áthalai); (érikkaraikkáttámanakku), meaning tank bund + jatropha curcas, linn. Title otherwise Adul oil plant, Lowly aumanac. Botanically Jatropha [nicoombham] glandulifera, roxb., euphorbiaceæ [vricsham, 118]. Alias Adenorhopium glaucum; Croton lobatum; Jatropha glauca. Small plant, one foot, erect, pubescent; leaves five to three cleft, serrated, smooth, glaucous, almost veinless; petioles sub-villose, longer than the leaves, with glandular hairs; petals of female flowers ovate, the length of the calyx; capsule muricated, as large as hazel nut; seed size of a pea; flowers small, greenish yellow; flowering all year; bunds of tanks. Gives to pharm. seeds and oil of seeds, non-officinal; oil stimulating, external application in chronic rheumatism and paralytic affections; much resembles castor-oil in appearance. Dried leaves dye cloth of a fine apple green color; seeds yield a clear limpid oil for burning; plant largely used for hedges.——Small wild aumanac (ವಿಲಾಯತಿಹರಳು - viláyatiharalu, Can.; காட்டுநேர்வாளம் - káttunérválam, Tam.). Can. from (viláyati, can. foreign + haralu, can. ricinus communis, linn.). Tam. from (kádu, tam. forest + nérválam, tam. croton tiglium, linn.). Title otherwise Coral plant, French physic nut, Small physic nut, Tyle berry plant. Botanically Jatropha [nicoombham] multifida, linn., euphorbiaceæ [vricsham, 118]. Alias Adenorhopium multifidum. A very common, large, herbaceous shrub, ornamental, when kept down to a moderate size; large, much slit, vivid, bluish green leaves, above which rise bunches of small flowers somewhat resembling pieces of red coral. Seeds purgative and emetic; in pharm. non-officinal. Gives an oil.——Wild aumanac (काननेरण्ड - kánanéranda, San.; रानएरण्डी - ránaérandí, Mahr.; काडएरडि - kádaéradi, Conc.; دندنهری - dandinahrí, Ar.; دند بری - dandibarrí, Pers.; جنگلی ارنڈی - janglíarandí, Hind. and Dec.; ಕಾಡುಹರಳು - káduharalu, Can.; ಕಾಡಲಂಬುಡು - kádalambudu, Too.; అడవిఆముడ - adaviámuda, Tel.; കാട്ടാവണക്ക - káttávanakku, Mal.; වලෙන්ඩරු - valendaru, Singh.; காட்டாமணக்கு - káttámanakku, Tam.). Hind. also (safeddand), meaning white croton-oil plant; (pahárìarand), meaning mountain castor-oil plant. Can. also (turukaharalu), meaning turk + castor-oil plant; (ádaluharalu); (doddaharalu), meaning big + castor-oil plant; (maraharalu), meaning tree + castor-oil plant; (parangiharalu), meaning european + castor-oil plant; (dundiginagida); (bettadaharalu), meaning hill + castor-oil plant. Tel. also (kondaámuda), meaning hill + castor-oil plant. Singh. also (rataendaru), meaning foreign castor-oil plant. Tam. also (kadalámanakku), meaning sea + castor-oil plant. Title otherwise Moghul castor, Moochee wood plant, Physic nut, Purging-nut, Sea castor, Turkey castor. Botanically Jatropha [nicoombham] curcas, linn., euphorbiaceæ [vricsham, 118]. Alias Castiglionia lobata; Curcas purgans; Ricinus americanus. Small tree or shrub; leaves scattered, broad-cordate, five-angled, smooth; panicles terminal, or from the exterior axils, cymose, many-flowered; male flowers at the extremities of the ramification on short articulated pedicels, the female ones in their divisions, with pedicels not articulated; calyx five-leaved; corolla five-petalled, campanulate, somewhat hairy; styles three, short; flowers small, green; ovary oblong, smooth; flowering nearly all year; planted near villages; fruit oval, size of a small nut, yellow or blackish; seeds size of a small bean, blackish. Viscid juice flowering from the plant gradually dries into a substance resembling shell-lac in color and consistence. Oil expressed from seed is of a pale color; it differs from castor and croton oil in its slight solubility in alcohol; but mixed with castor-oil its solubility is increased. Seeds used as a purgative by natives; their operation is stronger than castor and weaker than croton; and two or three may be taken for a dose; leaves warmed and rubbed with castor-oil are applied to inflammations when suppuration is wished for; juice is applied externally in hæmorrhoids; gum used like collodion to close wounds; quoted in pharm. non-officinal. Plant frequently used as a hedge-plant, as cattle will not touch the leaves; the juice is tenacious, and if blown forms large bubbles, owing to presence of caoutchouc; the oil has been imported to england as a substitute for linseed oil; oil used for burning in lamps; milky juice dyes linen black. Wood white, very soft, perishable. Baliospermum montanum [wild jamalgota] is also considered by the Tamulians a wild castor. Also croton tiglium [jamalgota].

AUMAY (تانبيل - támbel, Hind.; తాబేలు - tábélu, Tel.; ஆமை - ámai, Tam.). Tam. from (ám, tam. water). Tortoise. Terms coextensive with families testudinidæ and emydidæ, chelonia, reptilia [sarpy, 1, 2], of naturalists [jantoo]. Of two sorts; Land or Testudinidæ, and Freshwater or Emididæ [coormam]. For Turtle see Cadalaumay. Land tortoises appear thus:—Shell very convex; toes distinct; feet club-shaped for walking; no web between the toes; shell with horny shield; caudal shields united into one. Freshwater tortoises appear thus:—Shell sometimes convex, generally more or less depressed; toes distinct, webbed; feet for walking and swimming; shell with horny shields; caudal shields separate. Only gradual transition from land proper to thoroughly aquatic. Development of webs indicates power of swimming. Kites carry to a height the small terrapen, and drop it so as to break the shell. Hindoo mythology represents the world as supported on the back of an elephant, itself sustained upon a round-backed tortoise. The following are the species of both kinds in s. india:—"a" Batagur elliotti, emididæ. The Batagur. Freshwater; large size. Kistna river. Posterior margin of shell strongly serrated; uniform brownish above, yellowish below. Feet during life dotted with brown.—"b" Emys trijuga, emididæ; alias Emys belangeri, sebæ, thermalis, Geoclemys seba. Common Terrapen or Ceylonese pond tortoise; freshwater. Has thorax and sternum solid, entirely bony, and united into an immovable carapace in the adult state. The upper shell more or less depressed. Feet with the toes broadly webbed. Claws strong, five anteriorly and four posteriorly. Rest on the water with the shell and the snout raised above its surface, suddenly disappearing at the approach of danger. Their pointed claws enable them to crawl easily over steep places; they are chiefly carnivorous. Food of the carnivorous, water-insects, frogs, small fishes, small aquatic birds and mammals; whilst they are persecuted by alligators and large fishes, and the young and eggs by numerous other animals. Not used as food by man, the flesh of most species having a very disagreeable smell, which is also perceptible when first taken out of the water in a net or by a hook baited with meat. There is a Tamul punning proverb:— ஊமை ஊரைக்கெடுக்கும் ஆமை கிணற்றைக் கெடுக்கும்—"The dumb man destroys a village, a tortoise destroys a "well." Easily kept in captivity, attain only a small size; all more or less ferocious. The head and feet can be completely retracted within the carapace. The terrapen is common in the peninsula. Full-grown at a length of from 7 to 8 inches.—"c" Pangshura tecta, emididæ. The Pangshure. Freshwater. Distinguished by its elevated back; shell brownish or blackish. The lower parts of the shell yellow with large blackish-brown spots. Habits like terrapen.—"d" Pangshura tentoria, emididæ; alias Batagur tentoria, Emys tectum, tentoria. The Dura. Similar to Pangshure, but shell more depressed. Upper shell uniform brown. On banks of the Kistna and tributaries.—"e" Testudo elegans, testudinidæ; alias actinodes, geometrica, stellata, megalopus. Land tortoise. The Starred tortoise. Has the head, feet, and tail completely retracted within the shell; entirely terrestrial being the worst swimmers of the whole class of reptiles, with the exception of the chameleon. Movements slow; feed on vegetables; edible, of small size. Found in Coromandel coast, and the low jungles of the Carnatic; color and appearance blended with the rocky nature of the ground. Remain in concealment beneath shrubs or tufts of grass during the heat of the day. In rainy season in the greatest activity. ——Cadal aumay (कूर्म - kúrma, San.; رق - rakk, Ar.; باخه - bákhah, Pers.; کچهوا - kachhvá, Hind.; دریا کا تانبیل - daryá-kátámbel, Dec.; ಕಡಲಾಮೆ - kadaláme, Can.; సముద్రపుతాబేలు - samudraputábélu, Tel.; കടലാമ - kataláma, Mal.; கடலாமை - kadalámai, Tam.). Title from tamul. San. from (ku, san. prefix showing inferiority + úrmi, san. speed). Hind. from (kachhapa, san. tortoise). Dec. from (daryá, hind. sea + támbel, hind. tortoise). Rest mean sea tortoise. Turtle. Terms coextensive with families trionycidæ and chelonidæ, chelonia, reptilia [sarpy, 3, 4], of naturalists [jantoo]. Of two sorts:—Freshwater turtles or Trionycidæ and Marine turtles or Chelonidæ. Order chelonia [coormam]. For Tortoise see Aumay. The following is the description of the freshwater turtles:—Shell much depressed, covered with soft skin; feet for swimming; toes distinct, strongly webbed. The following is the description of the marine turtles:—Long, compressed, fin-shaped, non-retractile feet, toes being enclosed in a common skin, out of which one or two claws project; carapace broad and much depressed, so that when these animals are on shore and turned over on their back, they cannot regain their natural position; head large and globose, cannot be retracted within the shell; covered above with symmetrical horny shields, jaws armed with sharp horny sheaths. The shells of marine turtles are the tortoise-shell of commerce [zabl]. There is a Tamul proverb:—அவனை அவன் பேச்சிட்டுப் பேச்சு வாங்கி, ஆமைமல்லாத்துகிறாப்போல் மல்லாத்திப்போட்டான்—"Having fished out his secrets by cunning he turned him upside "down as a turtle is turned." The following are the species of turtles of both kinds which are best known in Southern india:—"a" Caouana olivacea, gray. Indian loggerhead. Family Chelonidæ, marine. Alias Chelonia dussumieri, olivacea. Carnivorous, eating fishes, mollusca, and crustacea. Found on Coast of Malabar. Of no commercial value, flesh not esteemed and tortoise-shell of inferior quality.—"b" Caretta squamata. Hawk-bill turtle or Indian caret. Family Chelonidæ, marine. Alias Caretta imbricata; Eretmochelys squamata; Testudo squamata. Carnivorous, gives the best tortoise-shell. So named from its rather elongate and compressed, curved upper jaw, does not attain to the same size as the other turtles. Natives eat the flesh of green turtle.—"c" Chelonia virgata. Indian turtle, family Chelonidæ, marine. Herbivorous, feeding on algæ. In size equals the Atlantic turtle, which it rivals in flavor. The flesh is sometimes found to be poisonous.—"d" Dermatochelys coriacea. Family Chelonidæ, marine. Alias Sphargis coriacea, mercurialis. Testudo coriacea.—"e" Emyda vittata. Family Trionycidæ, freshwater. Has neck very long and flexible; head short, jaws covered with sharp horny sheaths, eyes small, slightly directed upwards, tail none; armed with strong claws, habits aquatic and carnivorous; does not attain a large size. When the water dries up buries itself deep in the mud. Characterized by black streaks and spots on the head and neck, whence the name.—"f" Halys elliotti. Tail short, not prehensile, terminates in a spine. Olive-green above; pearl-white beneath.—"g" Trionyx javanicus. Family Trionycidæ, freshwater. Alias Gymnopus cartilaginea, javanicus; Trionyx javanicus. The largest of the freshwater turtles, thoroughly aquatic and carnivorous.

AUMSAM (ஆமிசம் - ámisam, Tam.). From (amsha, san. share). Estimate. Especially of the yield of standing crop.

AUN (ஆண் - án, Tam.). From (ál, tam. to rule). A ruler, a male.——Aundaul (ஆண்டாள் - ándálu, Tam.). Literally she who ruled. Lutchmy. Hindoo female proper name [peyar]. Common among Veishnavas [alwar].——Aunday (ஆண்டை - ándai, Tam.). A master.——Aundoo (ആണ്ടു - ándu, Mal.; ஆண்டு - ándu, Tam.). Any dynastic year. Especially the year of the Collam era [q.v.].——Aundy (ಆಂಡಿ - ándi, Can.; ஆண்டி - ándi, Tam.). Sheiva mendicant. Some 70,000 in Presidency. Suffix in Tamul proper names of the inferior castes, as Pulney aundy [peyar].——Aun vazhy (ആൺവഴി - ánvazhi, Mal.). From (vazhi, mal. way). The male line in descent or Makkatoyem. Opposed to Penvazhy or Maroomakkatoyem.

AUNA (ఆన - ána, Tel.). Abbreviation for Anno Domini.

AUNA (آنا - ánah, Pers.). Suffix meaning like; as Nuzrauna, meaning offering + like.

AUNAH (आना - áná, San.). Goldsmith's weight. 6 goonjams = 1 annah; 2 aunahs = 1 mausham [niray, 3f]. Approximate actual value, 1 aunah = 11 grains.

AUNAY (ಆನೆ - áne, Can.; ആന - ána, Mal.; ஆனை - ánai, Tam.). From (éndu, tam. to support). Elephant. Aunesaul, from (shálá, san. hall) is an elephant stable. For Aunacomban paddy see paddy. Aunacoova, from (kúva, mal. arrowroot) is Malabar arrowroot [elephant]. Common plant term, indicating size of plant or fruit, and often joining two genera. Ex., where transl. is of second term:—Adansonia digitata (ánaippuli), tamarindus indica, and (ánappuliyárai), oxalis corniculata; Adenanthera pavonina (ánaikkunrimani), abrus precatorius; Agave americana (ánaikkattázhai), aloe indica; Boucerosia umbellata (ánaikkallimulaiyán), boucerosia pauciflora; Casearia tomentosa (ánavananni), reverenced by; Curcuma aromatica (ánemañjal), curcuma longa, turmeric, and (ánakkúva), curcuma angustifolia, arrowroot; Elephantopus scaber (ánaççóvati), footmark, and (ánaiççeviyadi), ear + foot; Girardina heterophylla (ánaççoriyanam), tragia involucrata; Odina wodier (ánaikkárai), canthium parviflorum; Pedalium murex (áneneggilu), tribulus terrestris; Pothos scandens (ánapparuva), creeper; Scindapsus officinalis (ánaittippili), piper longum; Sida rhombifolia (ánaikkuruntótti), sida rhombifolia, var. retusa; Typha elephantina (ánaikkórai), cyperus. See gloss. paragraphs.

AUNY (ஆனி - áni, Tam.). From (háni, san. loss). Third solar month [mausam].——Auny amavausyay (ஆனியமாவாசியை - ániyamávásiyai, Tam.). Means third solar month + new moon day. Luni-solar festival [pundigay, 5a]. New moon festival of the third solar month Auny [mausam], i.e., between June 13th and July 14th. The floating festival at Trivellore falls on this date.——Auny tirmanjanam (ஆனித்திருமஞ்சனம் - ánittirumañjanam, Tam.). Means solar month + holy ablution. Luni-solar festival [pundigay, 6d]. The sacred bathing or anointing of the Lingam especially at Chidambaram which is always held when the moon stands in Pooshyam the eighth lunar mansion in third solar month Auny [mausam], i.e., between June 13th and July 14th. Occurs in June.

AUR (ആറ് - áru, Mal.; ஆறு - áru, Tam.). From (aru, tam. to cut). Natural current or river. Differs from Caulvye and Vycaul, which are artificial channels. Suffix in river names; as Palaur, meaning milk + river. Not the same word as Airy [q.v.]. The corresponding teloogoo termination is Air.—"a" Into the Arabian sea no considerable rivers flow in this Presidency. Flowing towards the Bay of Bengal there are the Veigay through the district of Madura; the Cauvery with the towns of Tranquebar, Trichinopoly, and Tanjore; the Bhawauny; the Ponniaur dry in the hot season, with Cuddalore; the Palaur dry in the hot season, with Arcot and Vellore; the Pennair dry in the hot season, with Nellore; the Kistna with Masulipatam; the Toongabudra with Kurnool; the Hagary flowing through Bellary district; and the Godavery with Rajahmundry. The Rooshcoolya in the north-east falls into the Bay of Bengal near Ganjam; the Vamshadhaura falls into it at Calingapatam, and near it the Langoolya also from C. Provinces. Further south the deltas of the Godavery and Kistna water large districts. In the Carnatic, the Goondlacumma rises in the Eastern ghauts; the Pennair, Palaur, and Ponniaur rise in the east of Mysore and flow into the bay. The Cauvery at Trichinopoly divides into several branches, of which the Coleroon is the most important; it rises in the Western ghauts and flows southeast. The Veigay and Tamrapurny rise on the borders of Travancore and fall into Palk's strait and the Gulf of Manaar respectively.—"b" Common plant term from growing on river sides or in river beds, and sometimes joining two genera. AUTMAM (आत्मा - átmá, San.). From (at, san. to move). The Supreme Being whether Bramha, Vishnoo, or Shiva. The living or individual soul. For transmigration see samsauram. The Hindoos believe that the soul or conscious life enters the body through the sagittal suture, lodges in the brain, and may contemplate through the same opening the divine perfections. Mind or the reasoning faculty is reckoned to be an organ of the body situated in the heart. The following verses are from the Tamul Bhagavat geeta, a rare work :—பீறிய போர்வையை விரும்பு பெயர்த்துப்பின்னரோர் வேறிய போர்வையை தான் வாரொன ஆறிய வுடம்பினி னுதித்தவுண்மை தான் மாறி யோருடம்பினை மருவுமன்னனே—" As those who " throw away a tattered garment desire another clothing, so

"the reality or soul, O king, which appears in one mortal body "will enter into another body." உறுப்பான்மை மற்றதனுக் கொருதானுமின்மையாற் செருப்பால் வெம்படைக் கலங்கள் சேதிக்க மாட்டாவா நெருப்பால் வெந்தழியாது நீரானெக்கொழுகாது மருத்தாலுஞ் சலியாது மற்றதன்றனியல்பேகேள்—"As the nature of the body at no "time appertains to the soul, the keenest weapons on battle "field cannot divide it. It exists in all places. It is "unchangeable. It is eternal. It is immoveable. Besides "which it is the pure intelligence beyond the powers of the "fourteen caranams to conceive; what knowest thou then to "grieve as thou dost, as if the soul could be destroyed as other "perishable substances." மாயுமவராலுமுயிர் வாழுமவரா லு மாயுமறி ஞோர்களழியாமை யறியாயோ நீயு மிவர் தாமுநிகழ் நானு நெறி தேரினேயும் வகையா துலகிலென்று முளமேகாண்—"Dost thou not know that "the wise neither grieve for the dead nor for the living. "Thyself, these princes, and I myself, when well considered "shall never cease to be."——Autmanautma viraicam (आत्मानात्मविवेक - átmánátmavivéka, San.). From (anátman, san. the not-soul + vivéka, san. discernment). Very succinct Tamul treatise on intellectual knowledge; from Sanscrit. Contains two divisions, on divine and human nature. In divinity there are three forms, actuated by one pervading mind. The three forms are Bramha, Vishnoo, Shiva, whose bodies are respectively red, blue, and white. In the pervading mind there are five properties or powers, analogous to five senses. They are one in council, diverse in operation; Bramha creating, Vishnoo preserving, Shiva destroying. There is only one supreme in the universe, the Trimoorty. In the human nature there is a compound of body and soul. In the soul there are five senses. In the body there are seven vital airs, which operate in various ways, by pulsation, &c. In the body there are nine apertures. The perfection of human nature consists in the restraint of the five senses, seven vital airs, and nine apertures; the mind being fixed in contemplating the supreme, who has five powers, and diversely operates by three forms, as creator, preserver, and destroyer.——Paramautman (परमात्मा - paramátmá, San.). The supreme soul-god [matam].

AUTTAUL (ஆத்தாள் - áttál, Tam.). From (agam, tam. house + ál, tam. pers. termination). House woman. Mother; epithet of Parvaty, mother of the world. Suffix in proper names among the lower castes, as Mauriyauttaul [peyar].

AUTTCAUL (ஆற்றுக்கால் - áttukkál, Tam.). From (áru, tam. river + kál, tam. channel). River; Madura district, Pulney talook. Rises in Aroongaunal hill, fertilises for three miles Peroompullam valley, then winds N.W. and west for three miles, and turning S.S.W. one mile and a half receives the Covanjy, the latter having run a course N. by E. six miles from its sources in the Permaul range. The river, now known as the Vardaputnam, winds N.W. three and a quarter miles to a dam constructed across it from which the channel runs north to Ayacoody. About two furlongs below the dam, a small branch is conveyed into a tank south of Ayacoody. The river now splits in two, unites again about a mile below, and half a mile further on is again dammed. The canal conveyed away on the right bank flows south of Pulney, and ultimately discharges itself into the large tank west of the temple. The river now assumes the name of the Varattaur, and running a devious course of four and a half miles N.W. by W. through an open tract discharges itself into the Palaur, one and a half mile W.S.W. of Pulney. Total length, 17 miles.

AUTTY (ஆத்தி - átti, Tam.). Plant of Mountain ebony or bauhinia class.——Auttisoody (ஆத்திசூடி - áttisúdi, Tam.). From (above + shúdu, tam. to wear); from the opening words. One of Avvay's aphoristic works taught in schools. Contains 108 aphorisms, each beginning with a different letter of the alphabet and its vowel combinations [avvay, condrayvendan]. Example, the opening:—ஆத்திசூடி யமர்ந்ததேவனை யேத்தி யேத்தித் தொழுவோமியாமே. நூல்.—அறஞ்செய விரும்பு. ஆறுவதுசினம். இயல்வதுகரவேல். ஈவது விலக்கேல். உடையதுவிளம்பேல். ஊக்கமது கைவிடேல். எண்ணெழுத்திகழேல். ஏற்பதிகழ்ச்சி. ஐயமிட்டுண். ஒப்புரவொழுகு. ஓதுவதொழியேல். ஔவியம் பேசேல். அஃகஞ்சுருக்கேல். கண்டொன்றுசொல்லேல். ஙப்போல்வளை. சனிநீராடு. ஞயம்படவுரை. இடம்படவீடிடேல் இணக்கமறிந்திணங்கு. தந்தை தாய்ப்பேண்—"Let us worship and praise continually the "god who is dear to that being who wears a garland made of "the flowers of the autty tree. Desire to do virtue. Anger "should be subdued. Do not conceal your means. Do not "prevent giving alms. Do not boast of your possessions. Do "not lose courage. Do not despise numbers and letters. Beg- "ging is disgraceful. Give alms then eat. Conduct yourself "consistently. Cease not to learn. Do not speak enviously. "Make not grain scarce. Do not say one thing after seeing "another. Be united to your relatives like the letter ங, i.e. as "the letter ங is united to its kindred letters. Bathe on Satur- "day. Speak so as to give pleasure. Do not build too large a "house. Be friendly on experiencing friendship. Protect your "father and mother." The style is not profound, but is extremely popular with the Tamulians [bhaushay].

A cycle of time among Jeinas. They divide each yoog into two cycles, Ootsarpiny or age of increase and Avasarpiny or age of decrease. Each cycle is again subdivided into six stages. That of the Ootsarpiny has:—Super bad, bad, bad good, good bad, good, and super-good times. Avasarpiny has the reverse series. Throughout Ootsarpiny men's ordinary age and stature increase, Avasarpiny the reverse. In the best stages there was no light of the sun or the moon, but day and night were formed by the reflection and non-reflection of the calpacam trees. Seem to refer to changes in globe due to precession. The present is the Avasarpiny cycle; the stage in which men now live is the fifth, bad time.——Avastaunam (अवस्थान - avast'hána, San.). From (above + st'hána, san. place). Division of the sun's total course southward or northward, viewed in relation to the nacshatrams. There are three:—Eirauvatam or northern, or northern declination; Jauradgavam or southern, or southern declination; and Veishwaunary or central, or a portion taken out of each. The European system does not recognize a Veishwaunary [jyotisham].——Avastay (अवस्था - avast'há, San.). From (st'há, san. to stand). Condition. The five kinds of Avastays are:—Activity, dream, deep sleep, abstraction of mind, insensibility. The Trimoorties, Bramha, Vishnoo and Shiva are three avastays of Bramh, in the different characters of creator, preserver and destroyer. The avastays are also sufferings and enjoyments from actions of former births. The saptauvastay, the seven stages of the soul from ignorance to knowledge of bramh and consequent felicity are :—anyaunam or ignorance, auvarnam or envelopement, vicshaipam or projection, parotcham or unperceived approximation to emancipation, aparotcham or union with deity, shocanivritty or relief from application and anandam or felicity [matam].——Avatar (अवतार - avatára, San.). From (tri, san. to cross). The descent of a deity upon earth and his incarnation as a man or animal. The story of the Ramayanam and Mahabhaurat turns wholly upon the doctrine of incarnations; all the chief dramatis personæ of the poems being impersonations of gods and demigods and celestial spirits. The most frequent references are to the ten avatars of Vishnoo, viz. :—"a" Matsyam, or fish avatar, under which form Vishnoo preserved Menoo the ancestor of the present human race during a universal deluge; —"b" Coormam or tortoise avatar; —"c" Varauham or boar avatar ;— "d" Narsimhan or man-lion avatar; —"e" Vaumanan or dwarf avatar ;— "f" Bhaurgavan or Parshooraman ;— "g" Ramchendran or Codandaraman ; —"h" Krishna ; this is the most celebrated of Vishnoo's avatars, in which he is supposed to have been completely incarnate ; —"i" Booddha. The Bramins considered Booddha to have been a delusive incarnation of Vishnoo assumed by him to induce the Asooras to abandon the Vedas, by which they lost their supremacy ; —"j" Calky or white horse yet to come. An account of each will be found in this glossary. The following is a Sanscrit memoria technica for the ten greater Vishnoo avatars :— मत्स्य, कूर्म, वराह, नारसिंह, वामन, राम, राम, राम, कृष्ण कल्कि.

Matsya, Coorma, Varauha, Naurasimha, Vaumana, Rama, Rama, Rama, Krishna and Calky. Here the three Ramas indicate Parshooraman, Ramchendran and Balaraman. The following are secondary avatars of Vishnoo :—Capilan ; Duttautreyan ; Dhanwantary, physician of the gods, who rose from the sea of milk when it was churned by the gods and asooras ; Haya greevan ; Mohiny or manyay, a female form of vishnoo, said to have conversed with shiva, and thus to have produced ayenaur ; Nara narayanan ; Nauradan ; Sanacan ; Sanandanan ; Sanatcomauran ; Sanautanan ; Vrishabhayogy, the first of the twenty-four jeina saints ; Vyausan or veda vyausan ; Yaugapaty. Shiva even is said to have had some avatars. See vol. 1 (74) [matam].

AVADAVAT (रक्ताङ्ग - raktánga, San. ; منیا - muniyá, Hind. ; జీనువాయి - jínuváyi, Tel.). Title from ahmedabad whence imported into Europe. San. from (rakta, san. red + anga, san. body) ; from color of body. Hind. is properly the female only. Tel. from (jínu, tel. anchor + váyi, tel. mouth). Male birds are :—Hind. AVARAY (ಅವರೆ - avare, Can. ; அவரை - avarai, Tam.). Dolichos lablab [country bean]. Also in comp. for other genera. Ex., where transl. is of first term :—Canavalia obtusifolia (kózhiyavarai), cock ; Cyamopsis psorolioides (chapparadavare), shed, (kottavarai), cluster, and (shíniyavarai), china ; Glycine javanica (kádavare), jungle ; Mucuna pruriens (púnaiyavarai), cat ; Phaseolus trilobus (shímaiyavarai), foreign ; Psophocarpus tetragonolobus (murukkavarai), curling ; Vigna catiang (válavarai), sword. See gloss. paragraphs.

AVERGAL (அவர்கள் - avargal, Tam.). Double plural of (avan, tam. he) ; honorific title used in reference to both sexes [avan, gauroo].

AVERJAH (آوارجہ - awárijá, Hind. ; ಆವರ್ಜಿ - ávarji, Can.). From (áwárá, pers. scattered). Collection of detached notes. A rough day book.

AVISHY (అవిశ - avishi, Tel.). Sesbania grandiflora [west indian sesban]. Also in comp. for other genera. Ex., where transl. is of 1st term :—Bauhinia racemosa (adaviavishi), forest ; Cassia alata (símaavishi), foreign ; Linum usitatissimum (nallaavishi), black. See gloss. paragraphs.

AVVAY (ಅವ್ವ - avva, Can. ; అవ్వ - avva, Tel. ; அவ்வை - avvai, Tam.). From (ambá, san. mother). Mother. Among Jeinas, a female ascetic. Honorifically Avvaiyaur, the celebrated Tamul poetess. Her real name not known. Her mother gave birth to her in a choultry near Warriore. Being exposed there, she was found and brought up by a Paunan or minstrel. She continued unmarried all her life. It is stated that by a panacea she prolonged her existence to 240 years, and then made the Mahaprastauna gamanam or great journey to the Imaus and died there. Her two books of moral aphorisms are called Auttisoody and Condray vendan. In both, the aphorisms are written in the order of the Tamul alphabet ; hence called the Golden alphabets of the Tamulians. Her other works are the Moothooray, Nalvazhy, Calvy oloocam, Asathy covay, Nunnool covay, Naunmany covay, Aroontamizh maulay, Darshanaputt, Nyauna cooral and Panthan antaudy. Of these the first eight are on ethics and religion, the ninth is on metaphysics, and the tenth is a panegyric on a wealthy merchant of the name of Panthan, who resided at Cauveryputnam. There is also extant under her name a Nigantoo or dictionary in verse, containing the Tamul synonyms of the materia medica, but it is not in general use. The Hindoo system of moral philosophy involves four questions, viz., What is virtue, and how is it to be exercised ? What is wealth, and how is it to be acquired ? What is pleasure, and how is it to be enjoyed ? What is heavenly bliss, and how is it to be obtained ? Avvay compressed all the four questions and their answers within the compass of the following stanza :— ஈதலறந்தீவினை விட்டீட்டல் பொருளெஞ்ஞான்றுங், காதலிருவர் கருத்தொக்க—ஆதரவு, பட்டதேயின்பம்
பரனை நினைந்திம் மூன்றும், விட்டதே பேரின்பவீடு.
"To give is virtue. That which is acquired without sin, is "wealth. The constant mutual affection of two, whose tastes "agree, is pleasure. To forsake these three, in the contempla-"tion of the supreme being, is heavenly bliss." The following impromptu by her is well known :—நல்லார்களெல்லாரு
நல்லாரேதன்மையால், வல்லாராற்கேடுபடாராயின்—பெண்
நல்லறி, வாண்மக்கட் பற்பலர்க்கேயுண்டாகும் பெண்
டிரும், மாண்புக்கெடுக்காவிடின்.—"All women would be "good by nature, if men did not spoil them ; and most men would "have a tolerable stock of sense, if the women did not make fools "of them." *The subjoined stanza eulogizing the city of Conjeeveram is attributed to her :—வையகமெல்லாங் கழனியாய்
வையகத்துட்—செய்யகமே நாற்றிசையின் தேயங்கள்—

செய்யகத்தன், வான்கரும்பேதொண்டை வழநாடு வான்கரும்பின், சாறே யந்நாட்டிற்றலையூர்கள் சாறட்ட, கட்டியேகச்சிப்புறமெல்லாம் கட்டியுட், டாணெற்றமான் சருக்கரைமாமணியே யாணெற்றன் கச்சியகம்—"The "whole earth may be compared to an expanse of wet land; the "several countries of the earth, marked by their boundaries on "the four sides, are cultivated fields within it; Tondeivalanaud "is a lofty sugar-cane in one of these fields; the chief towns of "this country are the crude juice of this sugar-cane; Conjee-"veram and its vicinity are like a cake of unrefined sugar "obtained by boiling this juice; and a large concretion of "refined sugar in the midst of this cake represents the interior "of Canchy where the bull-borne deity resides." There is a Tamul proverb:—ஔவை சொல்லுக்கு அச்சம் இல்லை—"No fear about Avvay's sayings" [bhanshay].

AYACUT (ಆಯಕಟ್ಟು, - áyakattu, Can.; ആയക്കെട്ട - áyakkettu, Mal.; ஆயக்கட்டு - áyakkattu, Tam.). From (áyam, tam. extension + kattu, tam. to frame). Regulation, settlement. Measurement of lands, determining the boundaries of a village. Hence the whole land belonging to a village. The Nunjah ayacut is the wet land belonging to a village. The ayacut of a tank is the land irrigable by that tank. See vol. I, 112.

AYAH (ஆயாள் - áyál, Tam.). From Portuguese aio, tutor; aia, governess. A nurse for children, or a lady's maid.

AYAK (അഴക്ക് - ázhakku, Mal.). From (ara, mal. half + uzhakku, mal. a measure). Mal. form of Olluck. A measure of capacity. 5 chavadoos = 1 ayak; 2 ayaks = 1 oyak [alavay, 3d]. Approximate actual value, 1 ayak = 3½ c. inches. Varies with the Yidangazhy.

AYAN (عين - aín, Hind.; ಐನ - aina, Can.; அயன் - ayan, Tam.). From Arabic. Actual. Also ordinary as distinguished from extra. Also used for circar lands as distinguished from inam or zemindarry. Also for the standard assessment of Government revenue. Also for amauny lands kept in hands of Government.

AYANAM (अयन - ayana, San.). From (ay, san. to go). A course. Sun's progress from one solstice to another. Oottarauyanam, or northward progress, from Tye [mausam] or january to end of Auny or june. Dacshinauyanam, or southward progress, from Audy [mausam] or july to end of Margaly or december. Two Ayanams compose a year [caulam]. The southward Ayanam is a night and the northward a day light of the gods. Twelve thousand divine years, each composed of such days constitute a maha yoog. In Oottarauyanam all Hindoos must devote themselves to study of Vedas; marriages and auspicious rites are performed; all acts done have a virtuous effect. In Dacshinauyanam everything done, though virtuous in itself, is unprofitable in effects; sin abounds. Ayanam is used loosely for solstitial and equinoctial points, when terms have contradictory appearance; see below. Also for the progress of sun through either southern or northern signs; perhaps original meaning. Distinguish from Avastaunam.——Ayana caulam (अयनकाल - ayanakála, San.). From (kála, san. time). The time from one equinox to the ensuing. Also the time of commencement of the tropical year or month; called in Tamul Ayana pirapp.——Ayanaumsham (अयनांश - ayanámsha, San.). From (amsha, san. degree). The arc between the sun's vernal equinoctial point, and the beginning of the fixed and artificial solar sidereal zodiac; being one of the most important elements in the whole of Hindoo astronomy, as it refers the sidereal to the tropical zodiac. For finding the Ayanaumsham at any particular time it need only be remembered that the fixed and movable solar zodiac are supposed to have been coincident at the expiration of the 3600th year of the Caly yoog; and that the equinoctial points are assumed by the Hindoos to have a retrograde motion of 54″ in a sidereal year. The Soorya siddhauntam says:—the Ayanaumsham moves eastward thirty times twenty in each Maha yoog. By that number or 600 multiply the Ahargunam, and divide the product by the number of seven days in a yoog, and of the quotient take the bhoojam or supplement to or excess over 180°, which multiply by 3, and divide the product by 10; the quotient is the Ayanaumsham [craunty pauta gaty, rishy]. At one time astronomers conceived the Ayanaumsham to librate in an arc of 27° of the ecliptic on each side of ♈, at another to revolve in an epicycle about the same point as a centre, at another to move round the platonic cycle in a period of 24,000 years.——Dacshinauyanam (दक्षिणायन - dakshináyana, San.). From (dakshina, san. south). Northern [ayanam] solstice.——Maishauyanam (मेषायन - mésháyana, San.). From (mésha, san. aries). Vernal equinox.——Oottarauyanam (उत्तरायण - uttaráyana, San.). From (uttara, san. north). Southern [ayanam] solstice.——Toolauyanam (तुलायन - tuláyana, San.). From (tula, san. libra). Autumnal equinox [jyotisham].

AYANDAH (آینده - áindah, Hind.). From (ámadan, pers. to come). Future.

AYAPPANAY (ಅಯಪನಿ - ayapani, Tel.; அயப்பனை - ayappanai, Tam.). Tel. and Tam. naturalized terms, supposed erroneously to be from (ayam, tam. oleander shrub, nerium odorum, soland + panai, tam. palm). Botanically Eupatorium ayapana, vent., compositæ [vricsham, 74]. Specific term is S. american. A small shrub; branchlets reddish; leaves opposite, lanceolate; flowers yellow. The leaves have peculiar fragrant odour, and when first tasted slightly irritate tongue, but afterwards astringent quality is felt. When fresh bruised, applied to cleansing of foul ulcers; whole plant is aromatic, and good stimulant, tonic, and diaphoretic; a decoction of leaves makes good fomentation; quoted in pharm., but non-officinal. Agrimony hemp; otherwise Dutch agrimony, Hemp weed, Holy rope, Water agrimony, Water hemp; is from allied Eupatorium cannabinum, linn., a tall, erect plant with downy leaves and terminal crowded head of dull purple flowers, inhabiting damp, watery places. Another species is Polyanthum.

AYE (അഴി - azhi, Mal.). From (azhi, tam. to perish); place where the water is lost in the sea; river-mouth. Suffix in place names; as Maudye, meaning shallow + river-mouth.

AYE (ಆಯಿ - áyi, Can.; ஆயி - áyi, Tam.). Mother; suffix in female proper names among the lower castes as Mauriyaye the small-pox deity + mother. Chinnaye meaning little + mother, Ponnaye meaning gold + mother, and Shellaye meaning favorite + mother, are terms of familiar address towards young children of both sexes [peyar].

AYEEN (آئین - áin, Hind.). Statute. By secular authority, in distinction to those of the koran or sacred tradition.——Ayeen e acbaree (آئین اکبری - áiniakbarí, Hind.). From (akbarí, ar. belonging to akbar). A statistical and political account of the Moghul empire drawn up during Acbar's reign by his minister Abool fazl.

AYEESHA (عائشه - áishah, Hind.). From (ásha, ar. live). Voluptuous. Name of daughter of Aboo bakr, and prophet's wife. Common female alam [ism].

AYEN (ஐயன் - aiyan, Tam.). From (ai, tam. lord + an, tam. pers. termination). Village deity. The male of Amman. Ayenaur is the honorific form and the one generally used. This is the only male deity among the Graumadevatays. When incorporated into the Hindoo system, he is also named Harihara pootran, or son of Shiva by Vishnoo as Mohiny. Represented in arts by human form in sitting posture, with red skin, crown on head, and pearls in his locks. On forehead he wears the mark of the Sheivas, made with sacred ashes of burnt cowdung. On his ears and neck he has pearls. On breast a sort of ribbon. His arms, hands, feet, &c., are covered with jewels and ornaments. In his right hand he holds a sceptre, as king among demons. Round body and left leg a belt, called Bauhoo puttay, which is also used by sages when they sit. On his shoulders are garlands. The upper part of his body is uncovered. Ayenaur's two wives, Pooranay and Poodcalay, are represented as having natural bodies of a yellow color, with crowns on their heads, holding flowers in their hands. Pooranay wears on her forehead the mark of Custoory, and Poodcalay that of Shiva made with sacred ashes. They sit to the right and left of Ayenaur. Pagodas of Ayenaur are very numerous, one in almost every village. They are small, and stand usually at some distance W. of village in a grove. At their entrance stand two door-keepers, called Moonnadiyaur or head-servants, who have crowns on their heads, thick sticks in their hands, and lions' teeth in their mouths. In the first room stand seven small figures of stone, called Saptamautahs, or seven matrons, who are under a curse. Their names are:—Baula shacty or young shacty; Bhagavaty or goddess; Bhoovana shacty or world-Shacty; Cauttairy or demoness; Mooyalcarashoory or the heroine of Shiva with the hare in his hand; Racta chamoondy or blood-Chamoondy; Tricarashoory or the three-handed demoness. These names differ from the Aryan saptamautahs. In same room are also two images of Vigneshwaran. All these are occasionally worshipped with offerings. In inner room is Ayenaur with his two wives, and round them stand seven figures of stone, representing virgins, which however are not worshipped. In front of the pagoda stands an altar of stone for living sacrifices; and by the side of it is frequently a vault with figures of wood, representing elephants, horses, birds, demons, &c., which are used at festivals as conveyances for Ayenaur and his wives. Close by the pagoda, on both sides of it, stand figures of clay, among which are Ayenaur's military commanders, called Palyacaurar. There are also horses on which he is supposed to ride about the fields, keeping off demons. These figures are presents to the god from people who call on him in sickness and recover, or from women who desire offspring. Ayenaur is worshipped daily, two or three times, with offerings and incense. For this a bramin is sometimes engaged. For the living sacrifices of pigs, goats, cocks, &c., with libations of strong drink, a Shoodra, usually a Pundauram or a Sheiva devotee, is engaged. After the harvest, is Ayenaur tirnaul, holy day of Ayenaur. It lasts seven or nine days, during which images of Ayenaur and wives are carried in the streets, morning and evening, on conveyances mentioned above. On last day, they are dragged on a car. At this festival, every inhabitant is bound to make an offering to the god according to his ability. There are no books regarding Ayenaur, but stories are related about him in the Sanscrit pooraunams, and forms of prayer have been made in his name. Of his various titles the following may be mentioned:—Arattay cauppone or the preserver of virtue; Aryan or priest; Ayyan or lord; Hariharan or Shiva-Vishnoo; Harihara pootran son of Shiva-Vishnoo; Nullashevagan or the good warrior; Poodcalay manaulan or Poodcalay's husband; Pooncadal varnan or the sea colored; Poornaykizhavan or Pooranay's husband; Poorattavan or he who is by the side as watchman; Shauttan or teacher; Tirmoodishevagan or the warrior with the sacred crown; Vellaiyauneiyoorty or the rider on a white elephant; Yogy or ascetic, &c. There is a proverb:—ஐயனார் கோவில் செங்கல் அத்தனையும் தெய்வம்—"The bricks of Ayenaur's temple are so "many gods." Ayenaur's worship may be said to be chiefly south of the Palaur. Ayyappan, the hunting god of the Arayan tribe of the west coast and of the Coorgs, is the same deity. Tigers are there regarded as his dogs.——Ayenaur tirnaul (ஐயனார்த்திருநாள் - aiyyanárttirunál, Tam.). Holy day of Ayenaur [pundigay, 6 c]. Village movable festival celebrated for several days after the harvest in January [maryauday, matam].

AYICOTTAH (അഴിക്കോട്ട - azhikkótta, Mal.). From (azhi, mal. river mouth + kótta, mal. fort); on the Northern branch of the Periyaur. Town; Cochin state, Cranganore tal.; pop. 3,641; lat. 10° 10′; long. 76° 14′; from Ernacolum N.N.W. 15 miles; from Cranganore S.W. 2½ miles; from sea E. 1 mile. At N. extremity of southern Cranganore. According to tradition, St. Thomas landed here. In latter part of eighteenth century held by Dutch. During war with Tippoo sultan in 1790, garrisoned by Company. The mouth of the Chaulacoody and of one branch of the Alwye river is called Ayicottah. This is always navigable.

AYIVOO (അഴിവു - azhivu, Mal.). Expense.——Ayishilavoo (അഴിച്ചിലവു - azhishilavu, Mal.). From (shilavu, mal. expense). The expense of preparing gardens allowed for in cases of Cooyicaunom [q. v.] lease. It bears the proportion of 20 per cent. to the valuation of trees settled when making the Cooyicaunom agreement. This expense being added to the value of the trees, the proprietor must if he redeems pay for both; or else the interest of the two sums, according to the usual rate of the place, is included in the Pramaunam or bond and deducted from the pauttom or Jenmy's rent. See vol. I, 112.——Ayivoo cooyicaunom (അഴിവുകുഴിക്കാണം - azhivukuzhikkánam, Mal.). From (kuzhi, mal. pit + kánam, mal. lease). By Malabar inversion for pit expense lease [cooyicaunom].

AYIYAM (അഴിയം - azhiyam, Mal.). Low land.——Ayiyapaudam (അഴിയപ്പാടം - azhiyapátam, Mal.). From (pátam, mal. field). The lowest lying rice lands.

AYOOB (ایوب - aiyúb, Hind.). From Arabic. Job. Common alam [ism].

AYYAN (ಅಯ್ಯ - ayya, Can.; అయ్య - ayya, Tel.; അയ്യൻ - ayyan, Mal.; ஐயன் - aiyyan, Tam.). Father; master; elder brother. Tamul plural is Ayyar, always taken as title by Smarta bramins. Tamul honorific plural is Ayyangar, generally written Iyengar, always taken by Veishnavites. Cf. with these two the Mahratta row [q.v.]. Common suffix in 2nd or pers. names; as Ramayyan. This in Tamul must mean a Bramin; but not necessarily so in other languages. Ayenaur is the male village deity [ayen].——Ayyaloo (అయ్యలు - ayyalu, Tel.). Tel. plural of Ayyan. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Ayyam pidaury (ஐயம்பிடாரி - aiyambidári, Tam.). From (ayyai, tam. mistress + pidári, tam. the village deity, so called). There is a Tamul proverb:—ஆட்டுக்கும் மாட்டுக்கும் இரண்டு கொம்பு, ஐயம்பிடாரிக்கு மூன்றுகொம்பு—"Sheep and "oxen have two horns, an Ayyam pidaury has three;" from the three horns sounded in her processions [pidaury].——Ayyanavar (ಅಯ್ಯನವರು - ayyanavaru, Can.). From (ayya, can. father). Lingayet priest.——Ayyappa (ಅಯ್ಯಪ್ಪ - ayyappa, Can.). From (appa, can. father). Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Ayyasawmy (அய்யாசாமி - ayyásámi, Tam.). From (svámí, san. lord). Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Ayyattoray (அய்யாத்துரை - ayyátturai, Tam.). From (turai, tam. ruler). Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Ayyavayyan (அய்யாவய்யன் - ayyávayyan, Tam.). Reduplication of Ayyan. Very common. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Ayyay (ஐயை - aiyai, Tam.). Feminine of (ayyan). Bhadracauly or Shiva's inferior wife [jauty, matam].

AZ (اض - اظ - از - اذ - az, Ar.). Al [q.v.] before z in Arabic single terms, as az zikr, az zeinab, az zarb, az zohr.

AZADIRACHT (آزاد درخت - ázáddarakht, Pers.). From (ázád, pers. free + darakht, pers. tree). Same as Large neem.

AZAM (اعظم - azam, Hind.). From (azima, ar. to be great). Means highest. Alam; as Azam ally, double alam. Also component part of lacab; as Azam oon nissa, the highest woman. Literary designation of the last Nawaub of the Carnatic, Ghoolaum mahomed ghouse khan [ism].——Azam jah bahaudur (اعظم جاه بهادر - azamjáhbahádur, Hind.). From (jáh, pers. dignity + bahádur, pers. title). Last Nawaub of the Carnatic but one, Azeem jah being regent during Mahomed ghouse khan's minority. A.D. 1819–1825. See vol. I, 43.

AZAUN (اذان - azán, Hind.). From (izn, ar. permission). The summons to prayer proclaimed by the Mooazzin in mosques from the side of the building. The Mooazzin stands with his face towards Mecca with the points of his forefingers in his ears and recites the prescribed formula. The call is:—"God is "great; I bear witness there is no God but one God; I bear "witness that Mahomet is His prophet; come to pray; come to "salvation; God is great; there is no God but one." In the morning is added:—"prayer is better than sleep."

Dec. also (bach). Tam. also (paççainávi), by corr.; (návi), corr. from (nábhi, san.). Title otherwise Butch, Indian aconite, Mahoor, Poison-root. Botanically Aconitum [bish] ferox, wall., ranunculaceæ [vricsham, 1]. Stem erect, 2-3 feet, slightly downy above; tubers 2-3 blackish, white inside; branches villous; leaves roundish-cordate, deeply five-parted; lobes pinnatifid, cuneate at the base, hairy on the brim beneath; racemes terminal, downy; flowers large, deep blue, hoary; helmet gibbous, semi-circular, slightly acuminated in front; cucullate petals slightly incurved. Grows in himalayas. Simple tuberous roots of an elongated conical form, like a carrot, 3 to 4 inches long and ½ to 1¾ inches in greatest diameter; blackish brown; brittle, break with a resinous fracture, and readily reduced to a coarse powder; in this state destitute of smell, slightly bitter to the taste, the tongue being subsequently benumbed wherever touched on; somewhat resemble roots of sweet-scented flag [vashamboo]; sometimes steeped in cow's urine to preserve them from insects, and then unfit for use in medicine; found in every large bazaar. Roots much used medicinally as external application, being formed into a paste and spread upon the skin; internally, chiefly used in treatment of chronic intermittent fevers; used in large doses along with stimulants in snake-bite and scorpion sting; sedative, anodyne, and antiphlogistic; natives employ it in leprosy; for british aconitum napellus, linn.; gives to pharm. dried root, aconiti ferocis radix, active principle aconitia, officinal; much more potent than the aconite root of europe [wolf-strangler]. Used in hilly districts to poison arrows for wild beasts; has been used in warfare to poison wells and tanks. There are two well-known varieties:—The first is in Tamul vennauvy or white bachnaug being pale internally, in Hindostany meetah zahara or sweet poison. The other is in Tamul carnauvy or dark bachnaug being dark brown internally, in Hindostany singyah bish as looking like small horn of a deer or goat, also called in Hindostany teliyah bish from being generally greased to keep it from air. The root of Methonica superba, lam. [wild bachnaug] is common fraudulent substitute; no poison in it. For non-poisonous aconites see Atees and Jadwaur; for european aconite see Wolf-strangler.——Wild bachnaug (अग्निशिखा - agnishikhá, San.; कळलावी - kalalávi, Mahr.; वागानांक्त - vágánánkta, Conc.; كرياري - kariyárí, Hind.; ناٹ کا بچهناگ - nátkábachhnág, Dec.; ಕರಡಿಕನ್ನಿನಗಡ್ಡೆ - karadikanninagadde, Can.; ಬಲಿಪಪ್ಪು - balipapú, Too.; అడవినాభి - adavinábhi, Tel.; മേത്തോന്നി - méttónni, Mal.; නියඟලා - níyágalá,

San. also (lángalikí), meaning plough-like, from root; (haripriyá), meaning dear to hary; (ahijihvá), meaning serpent's tongue; (uttamáraní), meaning superior fire; (amritá), meaning imperishable [chebulic myrobalan, emblic myrobalan, goolancha]; (garbhaghátiní), meaning causing abortion. Conc. also (shivashakti), meaning shiva + power. Can. also (shivashakti), meaning shiva + power; (shivaraktiballi), meaning shiva + red + creeper. Tel. also (pottidumpa), meaning short + root; (kalapagadda), meaning plough + root. Mal. also (kántal), meaning burning. Tam. also (akkiniççilam), meaning fire + water; (talaiççuruli), meaning head + to curl, from twisted petals; (kannóvuppúndu), meainng eye disease + small plant; (návi), meaning aconite; (kalappaikkizhangu), meaning plough root; from the bend of the root suggesting the plough. Title otherwise Caurtigay plant, Country aconite, Flame flower, Hary's plant, Malabar glory lily, November flower plant, Plough root, Serpent's tongue, Superb lily. Botanically Methonica superba, lam., lilliaceæ [vricsham, 136]. Generic name from malayalam. Alias Gloriosa superba. Slender climbing plant, with small narrow leaves and flowers of long, narrow, inverted, twisted petals, one half deep crimson and one half primrose color on first opening, but afterwards becoming altogether crimson; grows in dry jungles. The root is tuberous, cylindrical, bent at a right angle near one end, knotty at the angle, and occasionally much pointed at both ends; length from 3 to 5 inches; about size of a finger or thumb, sometimes larger when the plant grows in the sandy and wet soil; knot bears a mark of the stem on the upper surface, and gives an attachment to many thin rootlets by the lower; the root is covered with a thin, loose, and wrinkled epidermis, which is of brownish-grey or pale brown color, and the surface underneath the latter is brown or dark-brown if it is well dried root; this substance internally is of white color; its taste is bitter not acrid, and it is farinaceous in structure. The plant is religious. Veidyans apply the root in paste to the hands and feet of women in difficult parturition; mixed with honey it is given in gonorrhœa; it is not poisonous in twelve-grain doses, but on the contrary is alterative, tonic and antiperiodic; quoted in pharm., non-officinal; considered to possess nearly the same medicinal properties as the root of Aconitum ferox, wall., hence substituted for, or adulterated with, the true root. A salt is obtained from the root by repeated washing and grinding, throwing away the liquor, and washing the residuum carefully; the white powder thus obtained is bitter to the taste. No other common species here.

BACKDORE (باگ ڈور - bágdor, Hind.). Bridle-cord, rein.

BACKWATER (కయ్యి - kayyi, Tel.; காயல் - káyal, Tam.). Stretch of salt water close to the coast and separated from the sea by sand spits. Found on both coasts [cauyal].——Back water tree (నీటితుమికి - nítitumiki, Tel.). Tel. means water diospyros. Same as Gaub.

BADA (ಬಡ - bada, Can.). North.——Badaga (ಬಡಗ - badaga, Can.). Literally northmen [vadooga]. Tribal-title; personal forms, Badaga, sing., Badagas, pl. Often called by the English Burghers.—"a" The most numerous, wealthy, and civilized of natives of Neilgherries. Speak an old Canarese dialect. Originally from North coimbatore and South mysore, then part of Congoo kingdom. Lingayet wodeyas are the most recent. They are almost all Sheiveites, while Mysore rajahs were converted to Veishnavite faith some centuries back.—"b" They are an active race, of moderate stature, with the usual Dravidian features, a prepossessing expression, and light complexion. They are accustomed to labor from their earliest youth; boys of from seven to ten years of age being employed to break stones upon the roads, whilst the women take an equal share with the men in working in the fields. This may in part account for their extreme thinness; they are generally a healthy, but they are not a robust race.—"c" The Badagas are Sheiva hindoos, but the worship is of a rude sort. The Shiva temple is in a conical form outside the village, with a nundy at entrance. Special deities are Hetteydeva, an old man, and Hiryadeva, who brought them to the mountains. There are other male and female gods. Like other tribes they worship at Rungasawmy peak, where Iroolas officiate as priests. Also at Hoolicull, where a Badaga officiates. A few Badagas are Lingayets. The principal temples are:—Hettey coil in Paranginaud; two dedicated to Mahalingasawmy at Tainaud in Paranginaud, and at Mailore in Merkoonaud; Jaday sawmy's temple at Nedooncoolam in Paranginaud; Hiriya-sawmy temples, one at Kodanaud and one at Mailore. They are in perpetual fear of the Coorumbar on account of supposed sorcery. In the season for tilling the ground a Coorumban is sent for who sacrifices a lamb in the field, and afterwards holds the plough for a short distance. The annual ceremony to the Mahalingam is performed in the season for reaping. The temple is then thatched anew, the walls and floor are cleaned and repaired on a Sunday, and on the next day a Coorumban is sent for to reap a handful of the produce, which is hung in front of the temple, and some water, in which bark from a tree has been soaked, is poured on the idol. Plantains and flowers are then offered up, with prayers, to preserve the community from sickness. Afterwards should sickness occur no medicines are used.—"d" Badaga villages are not so picturesque as munds of Todahs. But their long rows of neatly-thatched or tiled houses stand in the midst of fields of coraly and shaumay and are surrounded by well-stocked farm yards, showing comfort and wealth. As the men work on coffee plantations, labor in their own fields is performed by women. A Badaga pays Rs. 150 or Rs. 200 for a wife. Badagas intermarry very closely. Betrothal is made by parents, but marriage only takes place when grown up. No polyandry, but divorce is easily obtained. Badagas both burn and bury their dead. The men wear the lungooty, and both sexes wear a large unbleached cloth, which is stiffened to render it water-tight and warm to an extent which makes it ungraceful. It is loosely wrapped round them; so loosely that as a Badaga man works in the fields, he is obliged to stop between every few strokes of his hoe to gather up his cloth and throw one end over his shoulder. They wear turbans of the same cloth with an end hanging behind. Their ornaments consist of brass, iron, or filigree silver earrings, necklaces, bracelets, and armlets; they also wear nose-rings. The men frequently carry a silver box for opium or any small treasure they may happen to possess, such as a charm, a title-deed, or paper. The women are tattooed in rows of dots about the chest and four marks thus ⸬ on the forehead. The women wrap the cloth round their bodies from below their arms to their knees and fasten it with a cord below their arms and around their hips; the arms and shoulders and their legs below the knees are bare. A scarf goes round the head, and is let fall behind. The women are of domestic habits, and affectionate mothers. The Badagas are a light-hearted race and fond of music. Their national melodies are quaint and original. They have many ballads of great length, which are sung to a monotonous kind of chant. They are the husbandmen of the hills, and are diligent in tilling the ground, from which they raise barley, the poppy, the amaranthus, and the grain which they furnish to the Todahs and consume themselves. They have buffaloes, oxen and goats in abundance, and live on their milk and ghee, and the grain above mentioned, which they grind into meal, and eat mixed with water, which forms a thick dough. They eat no animal food.—"e" Numbers about 250,000. They recognize eighteen sub-castes. Of the seven highest each one has a history of its own. The first called the Wodeyar, a branch of the caste of the reigning family of Mysore, are aristocratic. They refuse to carry burdens and work for Europeans, and in consequence are poor. They possess only five villages. The Wodeyar will not eat with the other castes, and consider themselves as gooroos or priests. They wear the lingam. Second are the Congas. Their ancestors came from Sargore north-west of Goondloopett by the Guzzelhutty pass on the Coimbatore side of the hills. They wear the lingam. Adhicauries are divided into two sets, Lingadhicauries who wear lingam, and Maitadhicauries who come from village of Nellitoray. The Kanakar or accountants are the only class who read and write. They are also physicians and exorcists. Probably introduced by control of Tamul rulers, this officer being called Shanbogue in Mysore [conicopoly]. The Chittrey class came to the hills with the Wodeyar, in the train of the Rajah of Mailcottah, a ruined fort near head of Seegore ghaut. The Belly or silver class are the most astute of Badagas. There is an out-caste tribe of this name in Mysore. Jackatalla close to Wellington is inhabited by these, whence Badaga proverb, "if you are not wide-awake, do not go to Jackatalla." The Haurwar are a degenerate class of Bramins. They may be connected with the Harihara [q.v.] sect. They wear Braminical string and officiate at harvest festivals. Every second year they walk with bare feet over burning coals. The first settlers of this caste did not bring any women with them. These are the seven principal castes. The remaining are as follows:—Hatarar, Aneyar who live exclusively in todanaud, Marey, Custry who live at kaity and are also called gangalar, Doomas, Gonajar, Maunicar or gem caste. See vol. I (36); II, 108 [burgher, jauty].——Badagara * (വടകര - vatakara, Mal.). From (vata, mal. north + kara, mal. village). Mal. also (mávilávu), meaning large wood-apple tree. Tam. also (kúvilam), meaning sharpness + wood-apple tree, feronia elephantum, corr., from thorns. Title otherwise Bel, Bengal quince, Bilba, Cow gall, Dietetic bael, Golden apple, Holy fruit, Indian bael, Indian quince, Larger wood-apple, Mabura, Pumpkin tree, Stone apple, Thorny bengal quince, Thorny wood-apple. Botanically Ægle marmelos, corr., rutaceæ [vricsham, 32]. Alias Cratæva marmelos; Feronia pellucida. Large and erect tree, 20-30 feet, armed with sharp spines; leaves pinnate; leaflets oblong or broad-lanceolate, crenulated, unequal, middle one petiolate, lateral ones almost sessile; petals four to five, spreading; stamens distinct; style short, thick; flowers in panicles, axillary, on long pedicels, large, greenish white, fragrant; berry with a hard rind, smooth, many-celled, many-seeded; seeds covered with a transparent glutinous matter; bark ash-colored, branches few and irregular; flowers during hot season, and fruit ripens after the rains; very slow in growth; wild in forests of coromandel ghauts; ascends mountains to about 4,000 feet. From abundance and cheapness, wood-apple [q.v.] is substituted for bael fruit but they can be distinguished thus:—Bael-fruit is generally round, slightly obovate, often oblong; about size of an orange, and often as big as a pomegranate or larger; greenish yellow, smooth, slightly shining; rind very hard and woody; in centre of pulp, from five to eighteen cells, each of which contains one to twelve or more seeds and mucus; in small bael-fruits, the seeds are often absent in the cells; seeds are oblong, flat or compressed, woolly, and about size of a lime seed; mucus is thick, very tenacious, transparent, and terebinthinate in smell and taste; when fruit is quite ripe, pulp is brownish red with strong balsamic odour and taste; when very ripe or dry, pulp is very adherent to rind. Wood-apple is almost always round or spherical; generally about the size of an orange and sometimes as large as a pomegranate; dull white or greenish-white in color and not smooth; rind hard and woody, but more easily broken; no cells at all, and the seeds are embedded in the pulp; the seeds are small, round, and smooth; contains no mucus; in the same condition, the pulp is of reddish grey color, with a very sweet and agreeable taste and smell; in the same condition, the pulp and seeds are more or less loose from the rind. The bael tree gives a true gum occurring in tears of a yellowish color, like gum arabic, or in fragmentary tears resembling coarse brown sugar. Is sacred to shiva and leaves used in his worship, like toolsy to vishnoo; the triple leaf is also typical of the three gods of trimoorty; according to indian poets it sprang from the milk of shree, the goddess of abundance; is constantly alluded to as an emblem of increase and fertility in ancient sanscrit poems; is common about pagodas. Gives to pharm. the half-ripe fruit, belæ fructus, astringent, mild stimulant of intestinal mucus membrane; preparations, mistura belæ, extractum belæ, extractum belæ liquidum; officinal; also in british; specially used in chronic diarrhœa and dysentery; the half-ripe fruit is best suited for medicinal use, especially newly gathered; the root bark is on malabar coast a remedy in hypochondriasis, melancholia, and palpitation of the heart; the leaves in decoction are used in asthma. To make bael sherbet:—take two ounces of the strained soft gummy interior, from the ripe or half-ripe fruit, mix it with three or four ounces of water, sweeten it with sugar, add tamarind, and cool it artificially; a simple remedy for dyspepsia. The fruit is never eaten as dessert, though its pulp is sometimes made into a preserve with sugar; fruit is used as famine food. Mucus of seeds is used as an addition to mortar, especially for wells; rind yields a yellow dye, used with myrobalans in calico-printing. Wood yellowish white, hard, with a strong aromatic scent when fresh cut; no heart-wood, not durable, readily eaten by insects; of no great value; in godavery forests the native drum is made from it; in some parts used for the naves of wheels and sugar crushers. There is a wild variety, with far inferior fruit. No other common species here.——Barber's bael (नैबेल - naibéla, Mahr.). From fruit used for soap by barbers. Same as Wild lime.

Hind. from (balsán, ar. balsam + tel, hind. oil). The product. Aromatic semi-solid exudations from trees [gond], a sub-division of resins [raul]. More solid than oleo-resins [teilam], but the dravidians do not distinguish these two. Hind. distinguishes, real balsams being from arabia. The best known so called balsam here is Gurjan balsam [q.v.], a dipterocarpus; but this is really an oleo-resin. True balsams are from balsamodendron and liquidamber trees. Balm is the same word, but generally confined to the arabian article or Balm of gilead.

BALY (बलि - bali, San.). San. means sacrifice. In Malay means to return; a land of quick return, from its unfailing irrigation throughout the year. Next island E. of Java, divided from it by a strait a mile and a half broad. Between S. lat. 6° 45′ and 8° 3′ 30″ and E. long. 114° 26′ and 115° 40′. The indigenous Balinese are same race as Malays and Javanese, but the island, like Cambodia, was reached by Indian aryans and is still under their influence. Balinese are divided into Bramins, Cshatriyas, Veisyas, and Shoodras; more strictly than Hindoos. The sacred language of Baly and Java is Kawy. See vol. I (113).

BAMBOO (بمبو - bambú, Hind.; ಬೊಂಬು - bombu, Can.). Onomatopœic from the crackling and explosions when they burn. Botanically the Bambusa genus, graminaceæ [vricsham, 156]. Tribe of gigantic grasses strong-rooted perennial plants with jointed hollow stems, rarely solid and varying greatly in size, terminating with branches furnished with grass-like leaves; do not survive seeding. The English bamboo-cane is a species of rattan. Bamboos are by natives distinguished as male and female, the latter embracing all the common species with hollow stems, the former title being applied to Bambusa stricta, roxb., which has a nearly solid core. Ctesias, B.C. 400, says that the Indian reeds were divided into male and female, the male having no ἐντεράνην. The species best known to the natives are shown below. With the bamboos are also classed by the natives:—dendrocalamus [bengal bamboo], crinum [poison bamboo], melocanna [berry bamboo], phragmites, and saccharum [naunal]. For the Bamboo fish see Talabone; so called from color and cylindrical form.——Bengal bamboo (پیا بانس - piyábáns, Hind.). Hind. from (piyá, hind. lover + báns, hind. bamboo), lover bamboo; from gracefulness. Hind. also (bishníbáns), meaning same. Botanically Dendrocalamus tulda, nees, graminaceæ [vricsham, 156]. Specific name from bengalee. Alias Bambusa tulda. Stems jointed, unarmed, smooth; leaves alternate, bifarious, sheathing, linear-lanceolate, broad, and sometimes cordate at the base; sheaths longer than the joints; panicles oblong, composed of numerous supra decompound ramifications, only appearing when the plant is destitute of leaves; spikelets lanceolate, sessile four to eight-flowered. No other species here.——Berry bamboo (വിഷമുള - vishamula, Mal.). Title from appearance of fruit. Mal. from (visha, san. poison + mula, san. bamboo, bambusa arundinacea, willd.), from quality of berries and other parts. Title otherwise Beesha, Berry-bearing bamboo, Rheede's bamboo. Botanically Melocanna rheedii, rupr., graminaceæ [vricsham, 156]. Alias Beesha rheedii. Beesha from malayalam meaning poison. Unarmed; leaves alternate, ovate-lanceolate, bifarious, smooth on both sides; sheaths villous bearded at the mouth; pericarp a large, fleshy, conical-curved and pointed fruit, with a single oval seed in each; the circumference near the base is 12–13 inches, the height from 50–70 feet, erect, and without the least flexure or inequality of surface, bare of branches, except near the extremity; common on travancore hills. Yields a tabasheer; is common for building; the natives make arrows and bows from the stems and pens from the younger shoots; the leaves are put on verandahs and roofs to keep away white-ants.——Common bamboo (वंश - vamsha, San.; वंस - bansa, Mahr.; वासो - vásó, Conc.; قصب - kasab, Ar.; نئی - naí, Pers.; بانس - báns, Hind.; بانسا - bánsá, Dec.; بلوح - buluh, Malay; ಬಿದಿರು - bidru, Can.; ಬೆದ್ರು - bedru, Too.; వెదురు - veduru, Tel.; മുള - mula, Mal.; උණ - una, Singh.; மூங்கில் - múngil, Tam.). San. from (van, san. to sound); from crackling sound of cluster. Mahr. and conc. from sanscrit. Ar. from (kasaba, ar. to cut); from joints. Hind. and dec. from sanscrit. Can. from (biduvu, can. extension). Mal. means shoot; from appearance of plant, as it sprouts out of earth. San. also (téjana), meaning arrow, from being used for arrow shaft; (kíchaka), from rustling sound; (trinadhvaja), meaning chief among grass; (shataparvá), meaning having many knots; (yavap'hala), meaning having fruits like barley. Hind. also (magarbáns), meaning crocodile bamboo; (nalbáns), meaning tube bamboo. Malay also (mambu). Tel. also (bonguveduru), meaning hollow + bamboo; (pentiveduru), meaning female + bamboo. Tam. also (kuzháymúngil), meaning tube bamboo. Title otherwise Bamboo cane, Bans, Female bamboo, Hollow bamboo, King of grasses, Moongil, Thorn grass. Botanically Bambusa [bamboo] arundinacea, willd., graminaceæ [vricsham, 156]. Alias Arundo arborea, bambos; Bambusa orientalis; Nastus arundinaceus. A gigantic grass with a ligneous stem 70–90 feet, spinescent; grows in large compact clumps of thirty to hundred culms, all from one root. Stems erect, bending at the summit, jointed, hollow between the joints; branches alternate; thorns two or three, alternate on the joints; when double, a branchlet occupies the centre; when triple, the largest is strong, sharp, and somewhat recurved, occasionally wanting; leaves 4–8 inches long, sheathing, linear-lanceolate, upper sides and margins hispid, sheaths downy; when in flower, the tree is leafless and the extremities are covered with flowers like one large panicle composed of numerous verticillate spikes, each verticel composed of several oblong, jointed, sessile spikelets; calyx two to six-flowered, three-valved; flowers hermaphrodite and male; seeds size and appearance of oats; male flowers one to three above the hermaphrodite ones. The silicious concretion known as tabasheer is a bluish-white concrete light substance, a secretion from the joints of the reed in a state of disease, malformation, or fracture; consists of 90·50 per cent. of silica, a minute quantity of lime, and vegetable matter; refractive power is lower than that of any other body, whether solid or fluid; with certain oils, which it imbibes, it becomes as transparent as glass; absorbs water and becomes as white and opaque as if covered with white-lead; so far resembles silex as to form a kind of glass when fused with alkalies; is unaffected by fire and acids; sticks to the tongue. The bamboo is of rapid growth, and in four or five years is fit for many uses, but does not bear flower or fruit till it has reached a very considerable age, as for instance twenty-five, after which it perishes; large patches of jungle always flower together and at long irregular intervals; the jungle tribes regard these phenomena as the heralds of famine and sickness. Immense quantities of bamboos are floated down rivers of west coast. Tabasheer is medicinally a stimulant and aphrodisiac, in pharm. non-officinal; the root of the bamboo is diluent, the bark a specific in eruptions, and the leaves anthelmintic and emmenagogue. Seed eaten by the poorer classes like paddy; as it appears at the very season when drought occurs and other crops fail, it is of some advantage to the poor; it is a very unsafe aliment, being apt to produce diarrhœa and dysentery; rats are fond of it; young shoots are cut when tender, eaten like asparagus and used in chutneys; leaves and twigs form an important fodder, being largely consumed by elephants. The stem gives a fibre; the full-grown stems, while green, form convenient cases, which exhaling a perpetual moisture are capable of transporting fresh flowers, &c., for hundreds of miles; when ripe and hard they are converted into bows, arrows, and quivers, lance shafts, the masts of vessels, bed-posts, walking sticks, the poles of palanquins, the floors and supporters of rustic bridges, and a variety of similar purposes; in a growing state the spiny kinds are formed into stockades, which are impenetrable to any but regular infantry, aided by artillery; bruised and crushed in water, the leaves and stems form chinese paper, the finer qualities of which are only improved by a mixture of raw cotton and by more careful pounding; cut into lengths and the partitions knocked out, stems form durable water-pipes; slit into strips, they afford a durable material for weaving into mats, baskets, window-blinds, and even the sails of boats; a joint of bamboo answers the purpose of a bottle, and a section of it is a measure for liquids, &c., in bazaars; 21 bamboos of rice make 1 maund; as measure of length it is 14 yards; a piece of it is used as a blow-pipe and as a tube in a distilling apparatus; a small bit of it split at one end serves as tongs to take up burning charcoal, and a thin slip of it is sharp enough to be used as a knife in shelling betel-nuts, &c.; its surface is so hard that it answers the purpose of a whetstone, upon which the ryots sharpen their bill-hooks and sickles; from buoyancy it is used in numbers for floating heavier woods. The bamboo is next to the cocoanut palm the most useful and economical of all the vegetable products of the country; in no other plant is strength and lightness combined to such a degree. There is a Tamul saying:—ஆல்போற்றழைத்து, அறுகுபோல் வேரூன்றி மூங்கில்போற் சுற்ற முசியாமல் வாழ்ந்திருப்பீர்—"May you flourish as the banyan full of "boughs and foliage, spread like creeping stems of hurrially "grass, putting forth roots and prosper as the bamboo amid "unfailing kindred;" a congratulatory expression to a newly-married couple.——Creeping bamboo (लतावंश - latávamsha, San.). Singh. also (vandurá), a generic name for the black monkey. Title otherwise Bonnet monkey. Macacus sinicus, cercopithecinæ [baboon], cercopithecidæ, quadrumana, mammalia [sastanam, 1], of naturalists [jantoo]. Alias Cercocebus radiatus; Macacus radiatus; Simia sinica. Of generally dusky olive-brown color, paler and albescent on the belly, and somewhat ashy on the outer sides of the limbs; hairs on the crown of the head, radiated; tail, dusky brown above, whitish beneath. Found over all south, extending north to latitude 18°, where replaced by Bengal monkey, Macacus rhesus. It sometimes inhabits the jungles, and also lives in towns, carrying off fruit and grain from shops. It is the monkey most commonly found in menageries. For silenus species see Siyah bandar. Indian species not here found are:—Arctoides or brown stump-tailed monkey, Assamensis or hill monkey, Cynomolgus or crab-eating monkey, Leoninus or long-haired pig-tailed monkey, Nemestrinus or pig-tailed monkey, Pileatus or toque monkey, Rhesus or bengal monkey. There is a Tamul proverb:—இஞ்சிதின்ற குரங்குபோல்—"Like a "monkey that has eaten green ginger; i.e., suffering for one's "own folly." And another:—மர்க்கடநியாயத்தீர்ப்பு—"Monkey's judgment"; i.e., a corrupt judgment. The natives hold that the urine, discharged in a thick stream and which admits of being collected when dry, has property of curing rheumatic pains, applied with garlic. Chentsoos obtain a sale for even stones on which this monkey has made water. The hill people suffering from chronic fever sometimes drink its blood.——Siyah bandar (केसरिवानर - késarivánara, San.; سیاه بندر - siyáhbandar, Pers. and Hind.; ಶಿಂಗಳೀಕ - shingalíka, Can.; ಕರಿಂಗೋಡೆ - karingóde, Coorg; కొండముచ్చు - kondamuttsu, Tel.; നീലൻ - nílan, Mal.; මහවඳුරා - mahavandurá, Singh.; கருங்குரங்கு - karungurangu, Tam.). Title from hindostany. San. from (késari, san. the maned lion + vánara, san. monkey). Pers. from (siyáh, pers. black + bandar, hind. monkey). Can. from (chinnala, mal. lion). Title otherwise Lion monkey, from form of tail. Macacus silenus, cercopithecinæ [baboon], cercopithecidæ, quadrumana, mammalia [sastanam, 1], of naturalists [jantoo]. Alias Innus silenus; Silenus veter; Simia ferox, silenus. Black, with a reddish-white hood or beard surrounding the face and neck; tail, with a tuft of hair at the tip. It is a native of the more elevated forests of the Western ghauts from latitude 14° to the extreme south, but most abundant in Cochin and Travancore. It frequents the most dense and unfrequented parts of the forests, at a considerable elevation. In its nature it is savage. In Ceylon there is the Semnopithecus ursinus or Wanderoo [q.v.]. There has been a certain amount of confusion between this animal and the lion monkey. They are both large monkeys, with great beards of light colored hair, but in no other respect do they resemble each other.

BANYAN (न्यग्रोध - nyagródha, San.; वड - vada, Mahr.; بڑ - bar, Hind.; بڑکا جهاڑ - barkájhár, Dec.; برنگن - baringin, Malay; ಆಲ - ála, Can.; ಗೋಳಿದಮರ - gólidamara, Too.; మఱ్ఱి - marri, Tel.; ବୋରୁ - bóru, Oor.; പേരാൽ - pérál, Mal.; මහනුග - mahanuga, Singh.; ஆல் - ál, Tam.). Title first bestowed on a tree of this species growing near gombroon or bunder abbas on persian gulf, under which the hindoo traders or banyans had built a small pagoda. San. from (nyak, san. turned downwards + ruh, san. to grow); from descending shoots. Mahr. from (vata, san. the tree). Hind. from the same. Can. from tamul. Mal. from (peru, mal. large + ál, mal. the banyan tree). Singh. from (mahá, san. great + nuga, singh. milky fig tree, ficus laccifera, roxb.). Tam. from (álu, tam. to spread); from spreading branches. San. also (vata), meaning circle, from its circumference; (bahupád), meaning many-footed, from descending shoots; (mánavriksha), meaning proud tree; (skandhajanya), meaning produced from stem or cuttings; (pátánga), meaning tree with descending branches; (chiravriksha), meaning long-lived tree. Can. also (gólimara), from globular fruit. Tam. also (égavásam), meaning solitary tree; (kánmaram), meaning forest tree. Title otherwise Arbor de rais, Bengal fig, Descending tree, Grove tree, Indian fig, Murry, Oval-leaved fig, Pagoda tree, Wad. Botanically Ficus [atty] bengalensis, linn., moraceæ [vricsham, 121]. Alias Ficus indica, vuta; Urostigma bengalense. Vuta from sanscrit. Immense tree; branches spreading very much; lower ones rooting; leaves alternate, ovate, bluntly acuminated, with parallel nerves, paler underneath, entire, downy when young, afterwards smooth; fruit receptacles axillary, paired, sessile, as large as a middle-sized cherry, appearing and ripening in the hot season. Common everywhere; it is remarkable for the singular property of letting a gummy kind of rootlet fall from its branches; these form a natural support to the larger branches of the parent tree, forming a vast assemblage of pillar-like stems covering a considerable area round the original trunk; as the banyan tree gets old, it breaks up into separate masses, the original trunk decaying and the props becoming separate trunks of the different portions; if the seeds drop into the axils of the leaves of the palmyra tree, the roots grow downwards embracing the trunk in their descent, until they envelop every part except the top; in old specimens the leaves and head of the palmyra emerge from the trunk of the banyan tree as if they grew from it; these the hindoos regard with reverence and call holy marriages. Friar jordanus, the quilon bishop of the fourteenth century, has the following:—"there be also many other trees, and wonderful ones; among "which is one which sendeth forth roots from high up, which "gradually grow down to the ground and enter it, and then wax "into trunks like the main trunk, forming as it were an arch; "and by this kind of multiplication one tree will have at once "as many as twenty or thirty trunks beside one another, and all "connected together; 'tis marvellous! and truly this which "I have seen with mine eyes, 'tis hard to utter with my tongue; "the fruit of this tree is not useful, but poisonous and deadly." The account of the banyan in paradise lost, b. ix, it may be noted, is an exact versification of pliny's description. The banyan is the hindoo emblem of immortality; in the end of time all nature will perish except one mystic banyan at the foot of which the deity will be enthroned. The seeds of the fruit are medicinally cooling and tonic; the white glutinous juice from the stems is applied in toothache and also to the soles of the feet when cracked and inflamed; the bark given in infusion is a tonic, used in diabetes; a balsam from bark is mixed with oil and applied to ulcerous affections of the ear and in deafness; a bath made from bark of root and stem is efficacious in leprosy, and mitigating pains in limbs; heated leaves are poultice to abscesses, &c. Fruit sometimes eaten by poorer natives. Rootlets from branches form substitute for tooth-brush, the ends being beaten so as to make them soft; birdlime is prepared from the tenacious milky juice; the leaves are sewn together and used as plates to eat; coarse rope made from the bark and from the aërial roots; paper from the bark. The wood is light coarse-grained and brittle of a light brown color, not strong nor durable but durable in water, used for well rings; the wood of the drop is stronger and tougher, and is used for yokes of bullock carts and other purposes. There is a Tamul proverb:—சிறு ருபத்தை உடைய பேரும் அரும்பொருளைச்செய்வார்: அது போல, சிறு விதை ஆகிய ஆலமரம் பெருநிழலைக் கொடுக்கும்—"Those who are of inferior stature may accomplish difficult things; the seed of the banyan is small, but the "tree affords a large shade."——Bramha's banyan (బొమ్మమర్రి - bommamarri, Tel.; തേരകം - térakam, Mal.; සිවනාමද්දෙය - sívanamaddeya, Singh.). BARCORE (ಬಾರ್ಕೂರು - bárkúru, Can.; വക്കനൂർ - vakkanúr, Mal.; barkúr *). Sanscrit name (dvádashakanyápura), meaning twelve + girl + town; from the twelve Jeina girls whom Bhootaulan married. Bacanore of Barbosa. Distinguish from Basroor or Barcelore in Coondapore talook. Village; South canara dist., Oodipy tal.; pop. 951; lat. 13° 28′; long. 74° 48′; from Coondapore S.S.E. 11 miles; from Mangalore N. 42 miles; from Oodipy N. 9½ miles; from the sea E. 4 miles. The port is Hangarcutta. On the Seetanuddy. Connected by road with Bednore and situated in a fertile well-watered country. The present town marks the site of a very ancient city, once the largest in Canara, and even in the sixteenth century of considerable importance. Barcore also gave its name to a former sub-division of Canara, comprising a portion of the western declivity of the ghauts; very hilly, and traversed by numerous mountain streams. This tract, formed part of the ancient Cadamba realm. As the capital of the Jeina kings of Tooloovam, the seat of Bhootaula pandya's government, and subsequently a stronghold of the Vijianugger rajahs who obtained possession of it in 1335, the ruined city possesses much interest. After the defeat of the Vijianugger power at Talicote in 1565, it passed into the hands of the Bednore rajah. In 1763, Hyder ally absorbed Bednore, and after the death of his son, Tippoo sultan, the country was incorporated in the British dominions. Traces of the great fort built by Harihara rajah about A.D. 1370 still exist, as also the tanks and part of the walls of Bhootaula pandya's palace. Ruins of Booddhist temples abound, and inscriptions dated A.D. 1383, 1390, 1430, 1522, and 1525, testify that in the fourteenth century Barcore was the seat of the vice-regal government of the Royel of Vijianugger. Among the sculptures, one representing a procession of armed men, bearing a striking resemblance in equipments and general appearance to the Greek soldiery, and another of a centaur, deserve special mark. Tradition asserts that it was from here that the Aliya santauna law of inheritance was promulgated. The present town possesses some trade in brass and copper utensils.

BASAVA (ಬಸವ - basava, Can.). From (vrishabha, san. bull). Canarese name of Nundy, vehicle of Shiva. So Canarese proper name, and especially that of the founder of the Lingayet sect. This man was son of a sheiva bramin; while yet a boy, he refused to assume the sacred thread, because the initiatory rites required adoration of the sun; and in A.D. 1135 he fled from his home, accompanied by his sister, to calyaun, whose ruler bijjala was of the jeina religion; here he joined his maternal uncle, a bramin and the rajah's minister, who gave him employment and also gave him his daughter in marriage, and basava became prime minister on his uncle's death; the bulk of the people from north of calyaun to mysore adhered to him; but king bijjala opposed the movement, and was assassinated by two fanatics, on which the calyaun kingdom closed; basava disappeared at the shiva lingam temple, at the confluence of the kistna and maulprabha, but his sister's son, channa basava, extended the sect. For the sect, see Lingayet. See vol. I (70) to (94), and the following foot-notes:—history of rel. and phil. I (70), existing hindoo sects I (88), jeinas I (95) [matam].——Basavy (బసవి - basavi, Tel.). Devoted to the service of the nundy. The corresponding terms are:—Tel. bogam, Tam. devadausy. Prostitute caste [jauty].——Baswant (ಬಸ್ವಂತ - basvanta, Can.). From (above + ante, can. like). Pers. name among Lingayets and Mahrattas [peyar].

BASHEER (بشير - bashír, Ar.). From (bashara, ar. to rejoice). Comely. Prefixed to an alam forms a lacab; as Basheer ahmed, beauty of Ahmed the prophet [ism].

BASIREDDY (బసిరెడ్డి - basireddi, Tel.). From (basava, can. shiva's bull + reddi, tel. caste title). Otherwise Vasireddy. A family founded by one Vasireddy veerappa naidoo, who obtained the pergunnah of Nundigauma in Kistna district from the king of Golcondah in 1670. In 1794 the Zemindarry residence was changed from Chintapully on the Kistna to Amravatty. The present zemindars have pensions from Government [charitram].

BASROOR (ಬಸರೂರು - basarúru, Can.). From (basari, can. the waved leaved fig tree, ficus infectoria, miq. + úru, can. town). Sanscrit name (vasupura), meaning wealth + town; called after a king named Vasoo. Bracalor of Faria y Souza. Cf. Barcelore peak which is the hill. Village; South canara dist., Coondapore tal.; pop. 1,950; lat. 13° 37′; long. 74° 47′; from Coondapore E. 4 miles; from Mangalore N. 52 miles; from the sea E. 5 miles; from Shiroor S.S.E. 21 miles. Once of great celebrity, but now in ruins. Two miles inland from the present mouth of the Coondapore river. The walls and water gates still remain in good preservation.

BASSES (இராமப்பாதம் - irámappátham, Tam.). From (ráma, san. the god + páda, san. foot). Divided into great and little. Bassæ of Ptolemy's map of Taprobane. Rocks east of Ceylon. Believed to be remnants of a great island. Mahavanso states that early inhabitants of Ceylon were Yacshas, deported by Booddha to two beautiful islands, probably meaning the Basses before their submersion. See vol. I (4) [charitram].

BASTY (بستی - basti, Hind.). From (vas, san. to dwell).—"a" A village. Basty daukkal from (above + dákhal, pers. entered) are lands included in village-sites. See vol. I, 112.—"b" A Jeina temple. Distinguish from Betta. A well-known group of basties is that at Shravanabelgola in Mysore. There are there two hills, Indragherry and Chundragherry. On the former stands a colossal Gomataroya [betta]. On a shoulder of the latter stand the basties, fifteen in number. All in Dravidian architecture [staupatyam], and are consequently built in gradually receding storeys, each of which is ornamented with small simulated cells. No instance occurs among them of the curvilinear shikharam or spire, universal with N. jeinas. Below the ghauts in Canara, Jeinism is the religion of the country, and nearly all temples belong to this sect, but the architecture is neither Dravidian style nor that of N. india, and belongs of Nepaul. One of the largest of Canara temples is Moodbidry. A basty is as to exterior much plainer than an ordinary Hindoo temple. The pillars look like logs of wood with the angles partially chamfered off, so as to make them octagons, and the sloping roofs of the verandahs show that the style itself cannot be far removed from a wooden original. In many places below the ghauts the temples are still wholly constructed in wood without any admixture of stone, and almost all the features of the Moodbidry temples may be found in wood at the present day. The feature however which presents the greatest resemblance to the northern styles is the reverse slope of the eaves above the verandah. The interiors of the Canara basties are in marked contrast with the plainness of the exteriors. Nothing can exceed the richness or the variety with which they are carved. No two pillars are alike. Their plans are those usual in Jeina temples; spacious, well-lighted porches, leading to a dark cell in which the image of one of the Teertancarans is placed. This is naked, as all the southern Jeinas belonged to the Digambaran sect [aursham, baur, cheityam, coil, goomta, jeina, laut, matam, maunasauram, staupatyam, tope, vihauram].

BATAGUR (سلحفات - sulahfát, Ar.; سنگ پشت - sang-pusht, Pers.; کچھوا - kachhvá, Hind.; تامبل - támbel, Dec.; దాసరితాబేలు - dásaritábélu, Tel.; കാരാമ - kárámá, Mal.; பறையாமை - paraiyámai, Tam.). Sanscrit name (bhávapurí), meaning supreme being + town, called after Bhauva narrainsawmy, the god of the place.——(1) Talook, Kistna district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 225. Area 679 square miles. Population 151,736. Language Teloogoo. Lies along the coast south of Guntoor and extends from near Nizampatam to Pedda ganjam salt factory. S.W. of district. Bounded on the north by Guntoor talook, east Repully talook, south Bay of Bengal, west Ongole talook of Nellore district, and Narsarowpett talook. Parallel to the coast and some miles inland runs a great sand ridge which shuts in the drainage flowing towards the sea and causes an enormous swamp with outlets to the sea at Chinna ganjam. The town of Baupatla itself is on this sand ridge and the old line of the Madras road is shown by avenues westwards along the ridge. The north-west portion is black cotton soil, flooded in wet weather by the local torrents which flow from the Condaveed hills and Narsarowpett, but dried up in the hot weather. Through this black soil runs the old line of the Guntoor-Madras road, with travellers' bungalows at Parchoor and Incolloo, a route practicable in dry weather and impassable after heavy rain. A large portion is deltaic alluvium and is under irrigation which makes the contrast the more striking between the expanse of rice fields under Kistna water and the barren villages a few miles to the north-west. Soil is sandy along coast, rest regar. Indigo and cotton manufacture. Agriculture is chief industry. Grain merchandise, also pulses and casuarina timber. The Commamore canal enters the north-east corner of the talook at Zaugarlamoody and leaves it at the south-west corner at Pedda ganjam, where it joins the Buckingham coast canal. BELLAMCONDAH (బెల్లంకొండ - bellamkonda, Tel.). From (bellamu, tel. jaggery + konda, tel. hill). Tel. also (bilamkonda), meaning cave + hill. Village, Hill; Kistna dist., Suttenapully tal.; pop. 1,503; lat. of trig. station 16° 30′ 19·16″; long. 80°03′ 32·15″; height 1,570 feet; from Crossoor W.S.W. 8½ miles; from Masulipatam W.N.W. 79 miles. Hills crowned with the ruins of a fortress. The village stands at the foot of the hill, on the Guntoor-Nelgonda road. The fort constructed by the Condaveed reddies. After their power passed away in A.D. 1428 it passed under the Orissa rajahs. In 1531 Sultan coolee of Golcondah took the place. It again fell into the hands of the Carnatic kings, and was taken by the Mahomedans in 1578. At the close of the last century the English stationed a few sepoys at foot of hill in temporary mud huts. The works consist of a single stone wall connecting the principal elevated points of the hill, having tower bastions at the south-east and north-west angles, which terminate the principal front. The entrance is on this side, at about a third of its length from the latter bastion, and is gained by a winding pathway from the foot of the hill near the village. In shape it is somewhat of an equilateral triangle, enclosing an area of irregular elevation of about one-sixteenth of a square mile. The wall is in a ruinous state. The two bastions, that to the north-west 970, and to the south-east 1,090 feet above the plain, are the most perfect parts of the work, but even these from their overhanging position seem to threaten destruction to everything below them. The interior is overgrown with bushes and long grass which obstruct the passage to the eastern and western faces in many parts. There still remain some buildings of stone, the old magazine and godowns, the remains of a small mosque and a tomb of one of the Mussalman commanders, a small pond with good water, and a mound of earth thrown across part of the interior apparently intended as a passage to the northern part of the droog.

BELLARY * (بلهارى - balhárí, Hind.; బళ్ళారి - ballári, Tel.). From (bala, san. name of a giant + hári, san. defeat); place where Bala the giant was killed. But probably there is some indigenous derivation.——(1) Revenue district; situated on the north-west corner of the Presidency, between 14° 29′ and 15° 58′ N. lat., and between 75° 42′ and 77° 41′ E. long.; bounded north by river Toongabudra, east by Kurnool and Anantapore districts, south and west by Mysore. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 225. Area 962 square miles. Population 172,216. Language Canarese and Teloogoo. Centre of district. Situated between lat. 14° 57′ and 15° 44′ N. and long. 76° 41′ and 77° 13′ E. Bounded by Toongabudra river on the north, Aulore talook of Bellary and Gooty talook of Anantapore on the east, Hospett talook on the west, and Royadroog talook and Mysore on the south. Surface is mostly a level plain, sloping down from the Mincherry range to the Toongabudra and Hagary. About two-thirds are black cotton soil, and the remainder light brown soil changing in the vicinity of the hills into red gravel. In certain places the black soil is impregnated with saline matter which affects its fertility. The greater portion of the surplus grain of the talook finds its way to Bellary, but a considerable quantity of paddy is annually sent to the principal markets in the Doab. Dharwar supplies the greater portion of the wheat. A considerable supply of raggy is drawn from Mysore, especially in times of scarcity. Coarse country cloths and cumblies are chiefly woven in the talook, these being much used by the population. Large quantities of plantain leaves and fruits are brought weekly into Bellary from Camalaupooram in Hospett, Deshanore and Siroogooppa in Bellary talook. Copper and brass vessels at Hireyhaul, silk and cotton cheeras at Bellary, are the principal manufactures. Nuts and cocoanuts from the Mysore territory and rice from the Royadroog talook and the neighbouring districts are imported largely every week into the Bellary market. Jaggery is exported from Siroogooppa to the Nizam's territory. There are only five tanks, and these very insignificant. The Toongabudra and Hagary flow along the boundaries. In connection with the Hagary there are channels to the villages of Asoondy, Chauganore, Moka, Roopangoody, and Tolamaumidy. Larger channels are taken off from the Toongabudra by anicuts at Deshanore and Siroogooppa. The rainfall is very small. There are camping grounds at Courtney, Hireyhaul, Moka, Paramadevanhully. Places of archæological interest:—Bellary, Coorgode, Courtney, Hireyhaul, Kenchengode. Principal trig. stations:—Coorgode, Gooddadore, Kenchengode, Sooggaldevy. The leading places, &c., in the talook are the following.——Bellary (బళ్ళారి - ballári, Tel.). See below.——Brucepettah (బ్రూసుపేట - brúsupéta, Tel.). Remnants of large town on S. bank of Toongabudra. Near it is burial place of Pumpaupaty gowda, and ruins of stone fort, palace, and gardens erected by Kenchengowda, founder of the place. The latter contain a curious model of a labyrinth in stone. Several anicuts across river. Founder was a peasant who emigrated here during reign of Krishna deva royel of Vijianugger, by whose permission he settled with the privileges of Nautgowdy. His descendants, Basava and Naugottama gowda, accompanied Ramrauz of Vijianugger on an expedition against his brother at Adony, and were rewarded by privileges of Nowbut, Chanwar and Chaund. Kenchengode, Siroogooppa and its dependencies were conferred upon them for ever. Basava assumed title of rajah. He died after ruling fifty-two years, succeeded by his son Hampa gowda, in whose time Masood khan, Soobahdar of Adony, appropriated the revenue, leaving the Gowda the rights only of Nautgowdy, with an allowance. Trig. station in lat. 15° 35' 40·57"; long. 76° 53' 06·65"; from Bellary N. 31 miles; from Hirekal N.N.E. 1 mile.——Mellorpettah (మిల్లరుపేట - millarupéta, Tel.). Village; pop. 1,989; acres 5,619; lat. 15° 03'; long. 77° 06'; from Bellary E.S.E. 12 miles. Has a channel in connection with the Hagary.——Siroogooppa (ಶಿರುಗುಪ್ಪ - shiruguppa, Tel.). See sep. title.——Sooggaldevibetta (ಸುಗ್ಗಲದೇವಿಬೆಟ್ಟ - sugaladévibetta, Can.). From (suggi, can. spring + dévi, can. goddess + betta, can. hill). Contains old copper mines. Trig. station in lat. 15° 04' 34·57"; long. 76° 52' 23·65"; height 3,285 feet; from Bellary S.W. 7¾ miles.——Tekkalcote (తెక్కలకోట - tekkalakóta, Tel.). From (tekkali, tel. robbery + kóta, tel. fort). Village; pop. 3,721; acres 10,621; lat. 15° 32'; long. 76° 55'; from Bellary N. 28 miles. Formerly capital of province given by Vijianugger ruler to first Nayar poligar of Bellary. Fell into hands of Mahomedans in sixteenth century, taken by Hyder when he overthrew the Balaghaut, and ceded by Nizam to British in 1800.——Toongabudra (తుంగభద్ర - tungabhadra, Tel.). See sep. title.——(3) Sub-magistracy, Bellary town. Pay Rs. 100. See on district above.——(4) Town, Cantonment, Head-quarters of Collector, Judge, Talook and Division, Deputy tahsildar's station, Railway station; Bellary dist., Bellary tal.; pop. 59,467; acres 15,882; lat. 15° 08'; long. 76° 58'; height 1,477 feet; from Adony S.W. 41 miles; from Hospett E.S.E. 38 miles; from Hurpanhully E.N.E. 67 miles; from Tadpatry W. 74 miles. On an arid plain stretching from the foot of a mass of granitic rock, and defended by two lines of fortifications. Very dry climate. A dependant of Krishna deva royel of Vijianugger built a fort here. His descendants held it even after Talicote, when Bellary passed to Beejapore. In 1650 Anoopa the Rajah of Bellary defeated the descendant of the Vijianugger rajahs, who had claimed tribute from him, and for a century the feud continued between the two families. On the district passing with its neighbours into the hands of the Nizam, Bellary was included in the estate of Adony which had been given to Basaulut jung, the Nizam's brother. In 1769 the poligar appealed to Hyder ally for help against Sufder jung and M. Bussy, who had been sent from Adony to collect tribute. Hyder defeated the Nizam's troops and seized the fort for himself. It was held by Tippoo sultan till 1792, when it fell by the partition treaty to the Nizam, who ceded it in 1800. The present fortifications were built by a staff of French engineers. Tradition is that after the new citadel had been completed, Hyder ally hanged them at the gate, as he found that the fort could be commanded by a higher rock. The summit constitutes the upper fort, unoccupied. The lower fort, containing the arsenal, guards the eastern base and is about half a mile in circumference. Southward of the rock and south-east of the lower fort stretches the native quarter, Cowl bazaar, Brucepettah, and Mellorpettah, to which the inhabitants were removed in 1816 from the fort. A large tank, nearly 3 miles in circumference. About half a mile south-west of the base of the rock are the regimental lines. The Church of St. Mary was erected in 1866 for soldiers. There are two churches of the London missionary society, one in Brucepettah and one in the Cowl bazaar. Of late years water has been scarce and old springs seem to be drying up. Chloride of soda and carbonate of lime appear largely in the soil. The opening of the railway has given an impetus to cotton traffic.

BELLIAPATAM (വളപട്ടണം - valapattanam, Mal.). From (valar, mal. to grow + pattana, san. town). Sanscrit name (vriddhipura), meaning growing town; also (vallabhapura), meaning town of vallabhan, the king; also (shivéshvara), meaning shiva + lord.—"a" Town; Malabar dist., Chiracal tal.; lat. 11° 56'; long. 75° 24'; from Bombay S.S.E. 486 miles; from Calicut N.N.W. 54 miles; from Poothiyangaudy N.N.W. 80 miles; from Cannanore N. 4½ miles; from the sea E. 2¼ miles. On left bank of river of same name, 4 miles from mouth and just below Mount delly. In 1735 the Company obtained permission from the Rajah of Chiracal to build a fort, named Madakara, near this place as a precaution against the transport of pepper and cardamoms by the river. Near Belliapatam Hyder ally, in his descent upon Malabar, gained a signal victory. He used a fleet to transport his horsemen across the river. Sacred temple in the south-east of the town. Port has a fair amount of coasting trade. Crafts of considerable size enter the river and take in the country produce brought to market by the Belliapatam and Taliparamba rivers, which here unite. Poon and teak spars are floated down the river and shipped here during the fine season.—"b" River; Malabar district, Chiracal talook. Otherwise Neytarpoya or ghee village river. Rises with the Lutchmanateertam and Paupnaushy in the Bramhagherry hills in the Kiggat naud sub-division of Coorg where called Barapoley, flows for several miles in almost a straight line and then westwards through Malabar district into the Arabian sea. Its upper course lies amid deep gorges and wild forest scenery, one of its tributaries falling over a perpendicular rock of great height, forming a cascade [aroovy] near Codyaul coffee estate. On the Coorg frontier it also forms a waterfall of 200 feet. At foot of the hills joins another large stream flowing from the range in north-east of Manattana. Immediately below junction, the united stream is spanned by Iritty bridge on high road from coast to Coorg and Mysore. From Iricore, where it is always navigable for large boats, it flows westward to Grovapoya. Here a third stream rising from the same sources joins it, the river widening considerably at the confluence. It then flows past and debouches into the sea 4 miles north-west of Belliapatam in lat. 11° 57'; long. 75° 21'. Numerous plantations of areca and cocoanut palms make the scenery of the lower stream picturesque. Total length, about 74 miles. Though its length is less than that of several other rivers in Malabar, it discharges more water into the sea than any of them.

Title otherwise Assa dulcis, Assa odorata, Gum benjamin, Gum benzoin, Java honey, Liquor cyrenaicus, Malacca benzoin. Botanically Styrax [dhoopam] benzoin, dryand, styraceæ [vricsham, 84]. The plant is a native of Java, Sumatra and Siam. Benzoin is the juice obtained by making incisions into the tree; this hardens on exposure to the air, that which flows first being the purest and most fragrant; it occurs in dry and hard grey masses, rather shining, brittle, formed of ovoid, whitish tears, like stripped almonds, and placed as it were in a cement of a greenish red porous mass; fracture resinous; odour sweet, peculiar, very agreeable, increased by friction; taste sweetish, sub-resinous, balsamic, irritating; powder yellowish grey, disposed to cake. Benzoic acid is obtained from the crude benzoin by sublimation, or boiling with an alkali; this acid, when pure, is colorless, and it fuses and sublimes at a moderate heat; if strongly heated it burns with a bright yellow flame. The resin is in medicine internally stimulant, expectorant; externally stimulant; the smoke given out acts as a disinfectant and drives away mosquitoes and flies; substituted for british balsams of peru and tolu; in pharm. officinal, benzoinum, contains volatile oil and a peculiar acid, benzoic acid; it is an ingredient in the old friar's balsam; the benzoic acid obtained from it enters into the composition of the paregoric elixir; is used in perfumery and burnt as incense.

BERBERRY (दारुहरिद्रा - dáruharidrá, San.; दारुहळद - dáruhalada, Mahr.; امبر باریس - ambarbárís, Ar.; پیل زهره - pílzahra, Pers.; دارہلد - dárhald, Hind.; മരമഞ്ഞൾ - maramañňal, Mal.; முள்ளுக்களா - mullukkalá, Tam.). Title from arabic. San. from (dáru, san. wood + haridrá, san. turmeric, curcuma longa, roxb.); from yellow dye of wood and root. Mahr. from sanscrit. Ar. from greek. Pers. from arabic. Hind. from sanscrit. Mal. means tree turmeric. Tam. from (mul, tam. thorn + kalá, tam. carissa); from black sour berries. San. also (dárví), meaning wooden [false calumba]. Ar. also (filzahraj), meaning elephant poison. Hind. also (chitra); (dárchob), meaning wood tree; (raswat), meaning hot juice. Greek for product is λύκιον ἰνδικόν, the other λύκιον being from a buck thorn [rohitacam]. Title otherwise Chitrak, Chotra, Dyer's berberry, Indian berberry, Rasoot shrub, Thorny carissa, Tree turmeric, Wood turmeric, Yellow wood, Zarishk shrub. Botanically Berberis aristata, dec., berberideæ [vricsham, 6]. Alias Berberis angustifolia, chitria, tinctoria. Shrub, 6-10 feet; leaves simple, oboval, entire, or with distant, small, spiny teeth, glaucous, with the principal veins and nerves prominent beneath, but not above; racemes stalked, longer than the leaves; pedicels slender; petals six, distinctly biglandular; sepals five, spines deeply divided into three sharp rigid segments; flowers yellow. Berries shrivelled and much compressed; dark-brown or black in color; pleasantly acid in taste; about third of an inch long, and fifth broad; smooth, soft, and moist; pedunculate; contain dark brown pulp; generally contain no seeds, but sometimes one small, hard, and oblong seed in each. Native of himalayas. Wood whether from root or stem is called Darhald. The bark from wood, especially root, occurs in thin, brittle, slightly quilled or flat pieces; outer surface has a corky texture and a light-brown color; the inner surface is darker and a somewhat greenish yellow, and has a shining appearance, it is almost inodorous, but has a very bitter, somewhat mucilaginous taste. Watery extract called Rasoot or Rusot is prepared in hilly districts from sliced root, stem, and branches; it is dark brown like opium, bitter to taste, rich heavy smell; readily soluble in water, partly so in rectified spirit. Zarishk is a moist sticky mass of the dried fruits. Periplus enumerates λύκιον among commodities brought to barygaza; mentioned among indian drugs on which duty was levied at roman custom house of alexandria about A.D. 176-180; vases are preserved in collections of greek antiquities, made to contain λύκιον and bearing the name of the seller of the extract. Root bark in medicine diaphoretic, antiperiodic and tonic, of great value in intermittent and remittent fevers, and in general debility from whatever cause, substituted for british cinchona and its alkaloids; rasoot febrifuge and external remedy in eye-diseases, useful in all kinds of hæmorrhages and in diarrhœa, jaundice, &c., substituted for british argenti nitras; both in pharm. berberis cortex and extractum berberis, officinal. Medicinal preparations:—decoction, take of the wood in shavings or coarse powder six ounces, water two pints and a half, boil on a slow fire till the liquid is reduced to one pint; tincture, take of the wood in shavings or coarse powder six ounces, proof spirit one pint, macerate for seven days with occasional agitation, strain and add more proof spirit to make one pint; extract, take the shavings or coarse powder in any quantity, boil with water till the liquor becomes somewhat thick, strain and evaporate on a sand-bath to the consistence of an extract. Doses:—of the decoction, from two to six fluid ounces; of the tincture, from two to six fluid drachms; of the extract, from one to two drachms. Fruit eaten; also dried in sun like raisins; the zarishk is imported. Root and wood dark yellow and form yellow wood of persian authors; used for dyeing a yellow color; contains yellow coloring principle in a greater state of purity than common english berberry; wood used for fuel. Rasoot, &c., also from berberis asiatica, roxb.; bush with three to five-fold strong spinous shining leaves, spinous on the margin and abundant small pure yellow flowers. Also from berberis lycium, royle; shrub, 6-8 feet; spines trifid or simple; leaves oval, cuneated or elliptical, mucronate, smooth, under surface, glaucous, entire or spinulosely toothed; racemes short, many-flowered, corymbose, shorter than the leaves; pedicels elongated, one-flowered; berries purplish; flowers small, yellow. Other species are:—concinna, nepalensis.

On the great northern road. Built upon a rocky ledge, surrounded by an extensive cultivated plain, sloping towards the sea on the east and south, but on the west and north bounded by hills about 8 miles distant. The soil of the cantonment is dry and gravelly and in many places granite rocks protrude from the surface. In consequence of an epidemic of fever at Ganjam in 1815, the Collector's cutcherry and the military force was removed to Berhampore and located here till 1835. The town is a conglomeration of six revenue villages. The military lines are situated in a hollow in Baupore. The Madras bank has a branch. The chief industry is the weaving of tusser silk into gold embroidered turbans, dresses, and other articles of wearing apparel. Common native cotton cloths are also woven. Sugar and sugar-candy are manufactured largely. During the cold weather English vegetables are raised. Snipe, wild-fowls, and other game are plentiful during the season. BERIBERY (බැරිබැරි - baribari, Singh.). Meaning weakness. Acute human disease presenting dropsical symptoms, paralytic numbness of the lower extremities, and oppressed breathing.

BERIZ (برج - berij, Hind.). From (báriz, pers. head of an account). Same as Jumma. The aggregate of an account, especially of revenue assessment. Beriz zaubitah was a register under Mahomedan governments showing total assessment of each village.

BERLIAUR (ಬರಲಿಯಾರು - baraliyáru, Can.; barliyár *). From (baralu, can. dry + áru, tam. river). Village; Neilgherry district, Paranginaud division; pop. 2,184; lat. 11° 20′; long. 76° 53′; from Coonoor E. 4 miles; from Ootacamund E.S.E. 12 miles. One of the stages on the Coonoor ghaut, containing a chuttram and Government garden. Principal fruits produced are the mangosteen, nutmeg, clove, cocoa, and vanilla. Gives its name to a river. Coffee estate of same name S. of toll gate and village.

BESTA (ಬೆಸ್ತ - besta, Can. and Tel.). From (bhriti, san. wages); hired laborer. Caste-title. The corresponding terms are:—Tam. shembadavan; Can. and Mal. moocwa. Fishermen and palankeen-bearers. They also cook in zemindars' families. Not numerous inland, but found there. They call themselves Soota coolam or cooking clan, and say they are the descendants of the rishy Soota maha moony. They are divided into Teloogoo bestaul and Parikithy bestaul, the difference being chiefly religious; the former get themselves branded on shoulders with Veishnavite emblems chunk and chuckram, but the latter do not. They employ Dausaries as the messengers of a death, and Saucalavaur as those of a birth or of the fact that a girl has reached womanhood. Their chief object of worship is Hanooman, a picture or figure of whom always in their houses. About 750,000; most in Bellary. The Boyies are very similar. There is a teloogoo proverb:—[illegible]—"The youngest among Bramins, and the oldest among Bestas;" both are made drudges [jauty].

BETEL (വെററില - vettila, Mal.; வெற்றிலை - vettilai, Tam.). Title from malayalam through portuguese. The betel-vine. See betel pepper under pepper. Called also indian leaf; but not to be confounded with folium indicum of druggists, which is leaf of wild cassia or malabathrum.——Betel and nut (வெற்றிலைப் பாக்கு - vettilaippákku, Tam.). Small pieces of areca nut, spice, catechu [cutch, kath], and sometimes quicklime [choonam], rolled up in a leaf of the piper betel [paun], to be slowly masticated, answering the purpose of an aromatic, astringent and alkalescent condiment. This is much used for the relief of malaise; and is also commonly presented from one person to another in token of civility or affection; presentation is essential in ceremonial visiting and on marriage and other festive occasions [paunsoopaury].——Betel leaf (वीटिका - vítiká, San.; विडा - vidá, Mahr.; بیڑی - bírí, Hind.; بیڑا - birá, Dec.; ಪತ್ತಿವೀಲೆ - pattivílye, Can.; ఆకుమడుపు - ákumadupu, Tel.; വെററിലത്തിപ്പ് - vettilamatippu, Mal.; வெற்றிலைச்சுருள் - vettilaiççurul, Tam.). Title from malayalam through portuguese. San. from (vi, san. prefix of intensity + it, san. to go). Mahr. from sanscrit. Hind. from sanscrit. Can. from (patti, can. wrapped + vílye, can. betel-leaf). Tel. from (áku, tel. leaf + madutsu, tel. to fold). Mal. from (vettila, mal. betel-leaf + matippu, mal. fold). Tam. from (vettilai, tam. betel-leaf + shurul, tam. roll). Tam. also (patti), meaning roll. The leaf of the betel-vine [pepper], especially when used to enclose the masticatory. Paun more generally used among anglo-indians in this sense.——Betel nut (पूगीफल - púgíp'hala, San.; सुपारी - supárí, Mahr.; سپاری - supárí, Hind. and Dec.; پینانگ - pináng, Malay; ಅಡಕೆ - adike, Can.; వక్క - vakka, Tel.; അടക്ക - atakka, Mal.; පුවක්ගෙඩිය - puvakgediya, Singh.; கொட்டைப்பாக்கு - kottaipákku, Tam.). Title from use with leaf of the betel-vine. San. from (púga, san. areca palm + p'hala, san. fruit). Can. from malayalam. Mal. from (ata, mal. close + káya, mal. fruit), from covering. Singh. from (puvak, singh. areca palm + gediya, singh. fruit). Tam. from (kottai, tam. nut + pákku, tam. areca). Tel. also (pókavakka). Tam. also (pákku). Title otherwise Areca nut, Pauk, Penang nut. Nuces areca, Semen arecæ, of chemists. Nut of the Areca palm [q.v.].

BETTA (ಬೆಟ್ಟ - betta, Can.). Means a hill.—"a" A Jeina open courtyard on a hill containing a colossal image. Distinguish from Basty [q. v.]. As compared with the images, are not of a Teertacaran but of a Gomataroya so called, probably a corruption of Gowtama rajah [booddha]. Three of them are known. The largest is at Shravanabelgola in Mysore. The hill there called Indragherry is one mass of granite [caroom cull] about 400 feet in height, and probably had a mass or tor on its summit, either a part of the subjacent mass or lying on it. This the Jeinas undertook to fashion into a statue 70 feet 3 inches in height, and have acheived it with great success. Even in Egypt no statue surpasses it in height. The image at Caurcal in Canara which is next in size, being 41 feet 5 inches in height and which weighs about 80 tons, was evidently moved to the place where it now stands; its date is engraved upon it, A.D. 1432. The third at Yenoor in Canara is about 35 feet high; from the style of art in which it is executed it is probably the oldest of the three. All these three figures belong to the Digambaran sect of Jeinas, being entirely naked, and all possess the peculiarity of having twigs of the Bo-tree [peepul] of Shakya moony, the ficus religiosa, twisted round their arms and legs in a manner found nowhere else, and in having serpents at their feet [staupatyam].—"b" Makes proper names. Thus Bettads chauma rajah a Mysore rajah. Bettana, from (anna, tel. a brother), otherwise known as Tumby, was an illegitimate brother of Dalavoy saitoopaty of Ramnaud; vol. I (124).—"c" Suffix in place names, as Dodabetta, Devarbetta. Also prefix in ditto.——Bettoo (ಬೆಟ್ಟು - bettu, 'Can.). In Canara the third or worst kind of land for rice, situated on high ground, and imperfectly irrigated, yielding generally but one crop a year. See vol. I, 112.

BETTATNAUD (വെട്ടത്തനാട് - vettattanátu, Mal.). From (vettam, mal. heat + nátu, mal. country). Seat of ancient raj in Malabar district, Ponnany talook. This family became extinct and the estate escheated in 1793.——Bettattpoothiyangaudy (വെട്ടത്തുപുതിയങ്ങാടി - vettattuputiyannáti, Mal. vetatapudiyangádi *). From (vettattu, mal. a dynasty derived from chéramán's minister tólan, now extinct + putiya, mal. new + annáti, mal. bazaar).—"a" Deputy tahsildarry, Malabar district. Pay Rs. 70.—"b" Village, Deputy tahsildar's and Moonsif's station; Malabar dist., Ponnany tal.; pop. 6,353; lat. 10° 53′; long. 75° 58′; from Calicut S.S.E. 27 miles; from Cannanore S.S.E. 76 miles; from Madras W.S.W. 330 miles; from Malapooram S.W. 14 miles; from Manantoddy S. 62 miles; from Palghaut W.N.W. 49 miles; from Ponnany N. 6 miles; from Tellicherry S.S.E. 66 miles; from the sea E. 2¾ miles. Two miles east of the railway station. Sub-magistrate's and Judge's courts were built with the materials of the palace of the Bettatnaud rajahs, destroyed by Tippoo sultan in 1784. Has few Moplah mosques.

BEY (बे - be, Hind.). From Turkish. Same as Beg.

BEYPORE * (ബേപ്പൂർ - béppúr, Mal.). From (veppu, mal. deposit + úr, mal. village). Place formed by receding of sea. Sanscrit name (váyupura), meaning vayoo, the god + town.—"a" Town; Malabar dist., Yernaud tal.; pop. 3,672; lat. 11° 10′; long. 75° 50′; height 14 feet; from Bombay S.S.E. 560 miles; from Cadaloondy N.N.W. 4 miles; from Calicut S.S.E. 6 miles; from Molancadav S. 3 miles; from Munjery W.N.W. 22 miles; from the sea E. ¼ mile. Near mouth of river of same name. Formerly terminus of Madras railway, but station was abolished from 1st January 1888 on extension of line to Calicut. The terminus was on Chauliam island and incorrectly called Beypore. The port so called lies on north bank of river. The limits of port are:—north and south, the sea-shore within fifty yards of high-water mark spring-tides, from boundary pillars one-and-a-half miles north and south of the river's mouth; west, the anchorage between two lines running west from the boundary pillars to nine fathoms water; east, the banks of the river, backwater, creeks, and islands within fifty yards of high-water spring tides, and within a distance of one-and-a-half miles from the river's mouth. The anchorage for small vessels is inside the river, close to the north bank and immediately below a reef of laterite rock which projects far into the stream. The best anchorage in the roads for large vessels is in four-and-half to six fathoms and from two to three miles off shore. The bar admits craft of 300 tons to the river, and at low spring tides gives soundings of 12–14 feet. The Portuguese established a factory here, but it failed. Tippoo selected a spot 3 miles up the river as the site of the capital of Malabar and called it Ferokhee or Sultan putnam, but the plan came to nothing. Beypore was a regular port of call for steamers, before change of railway station. All the coffee of Ouchterlony valley, with much from East wynaud, comes here for export. Also teak floated down from forests. Rice and salt form staples of import trade. Iron ore, and wood in great abundance exist in vicinity. Five miles east is Chattaparamba or Field of Death, remarkable for its ancient stone circles and monuments. Beypore amshom was formerly known as Vadaparapnaud. In Beypore amshom there are four Covilagams called Manayatt, Nediyaul, Panangaud and Poothiya, belonging to the family of the Beypore branch of the Parapnaud family.—"b" River; Malabar district, Yernaud talook; also called Sharapoya or arrow river. Its two main branches rise respectively in the Coondahs and on lower ranges of S.E. Wynaud. The one, called the Gold river, passes over the ridge of ghauts in a long succession of rocky cataracts, lying a short distance south of the Carcoor pass, after draining an extensive tract of the Neilgherry. The other, called the Chola river, drains the Wynaud ghauts and falls from the crest of the Wynaud hills in a cataract [aroovy] close to a foot-path known as the Cholaudy pass. The two streams, after receiving many large feeders, unite in the midst of the Nelambore government teak plantations. After reaching the low country the river receives many affluents, the chief being the Carimpoya at its junction with which a massive timber bridge spans the joint stream, the Calakkampoya, the Carcoorpoya, and the Mappooram. Then flowing past Arriyacode, it joins the Codiyattore. It debouches into the sea at Beypore, being joined near its mouth by the Cadaloondy, with which it forms the island of Chauliam. Total length about 90 miles. Even in height of dry season boats of light draught can ascend as far as Maumbaud under the shadow of the Camel hump range. The sands are auriferous; lower classes make a small livelihood by washing sands after each annual flood.

BEZOAR (विषघ्न - vishaghna, San.; حجرالسم - hajarussamm, Ar.; پاد زهر - pádzahar, Pers.; زهر مهره - zahrmohrá, Hind.; پاؤ زهر - páuzahar, Dec.; گولیگا - goliga, Malay; ವಿಷಕಲ್ಲು - vishakallu, Too.; విషహారి - vishahári, Tel.; വിഷക്കല് - vishakkal, Mal.; විෂගල් - vishagal, Singh.; விடக்கல் - vidakkal, Tam.). Title from persian. San. from (visha, san. poison + han, san. to destroy). Ar. from (hajar, ar. stone + samm, ar. poison). Pers. from (pád, pers. antidote + zahar, pers. poison). Hind. from (zahar, pers. poison + mohrah, pers. shell). Dec. from persian. Drav. means poison + stone. Hind. also (kánízahrmohrá), meaning mineral bezoar. Malay also (mátika), meaning gem; (mántika). Tel. also (pámukallu), meaning snake + stone; (garudapattsa), meaning braminy kite + emerald. Tam. also (pámbukkal), meaning snake stone; (télgal), meaning scorpion stone. Two kinds according to European nomenclature; mineral and animal. The former a natural produce of india, persia, tartary, and other countries; chemically, silicate of magnesia and iron; no medicine so frequently resorted to by native practitioners, especially hakeems, in cholera; there are several varieties; that sought for in cholera is of pale green color, and easily ground with water on a stone; the paste is white and slightly odorous, the smell being often very feeble and somewhat like that of the prepared pipe clay; this is a variety of steatite or soap-stone. Animal bezoars are concretions named after the animal from which obtained, as fish-bezoar, goat-bezoar, snake-bezoar, &c.; the list of these has been much augmented since modern writers have extended that term to all the concretions in the body of animals; animal bezoar however is not considered as a variety of bezoar by native practitioners; it is called gorochanay [q. v.]; many snake-stones are mere animal bezoars. The following descriptions show the difference between the two classes of bezoar:—"a" Mineral bezoar; form not defined; it occurs in very irregular and angular pieces of various shape, like pieces of marble or any other stone; size unlimited, often as large as a fist, and sometimes much larger; surface generally rough, but smooth when covered with clay, which is the case sometimes; of various colors between white and green or yellowish-green, but generally pale green with one or two shades of yellow; structure amorphous.—"b" Animal bezoar or gorochanay; from defined and regular; oval, oblong, ovate, globular, or flat and circular; seldom of the size of an egg, but generally of various sizes below that; surface very smooth and glossy; color various, generally dark green, marbled, or bluish-brown; structure laminated and concentric.——Bezoar nut (గచ్చ - gattsa, Tel.). Title from pale green appearance of nut and kernel. Tel. from (gittsu, tel. to prick), from prickly legumes. Same as Bonduc.

BEZWADA (بجواڑا - bijwára, Hind.; బెజవాడ - bedzaváda, Tel. bezváda *). From (beddzamu, tel. deep gorge + váda, tel. village). Sanscrit name (vijayapura), meaning arjoonan, the victorious + town.——(1) Talook, Kistna district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 150. Area 236 square miles. Population 85,736. Language Teloogoo. On left bank of Kistna. Centre of district. Bounded:—North by Vissanapett division and Noozveed zemindarry; south by the Kistna river; east by Noozveed zemindarry and west by Nundigauma talook and Nizam's dominions. Include the Condapully range to the north and on the south portion of the territory acquired by the Valloor zemindar. Partly hilly and partly plain. Regar soil predominates. On Kistna, here crossed by ferry, and at junction of high roads from Madras to Calcutta and from Hyderabad to coast. Entrepôt for most canal traffic of Kistna delta and connected by canal with Ellore, Masulipatam, Cocanada and Rajahmundry. In ancient days religious centre of Vengy desham. About A.D. 605 captured by Chalookyas who came from Calyaun under Cobja vishnoovardhanan, and established the Eastern chalookya dynasty. Hwen thsang, Chinese pilgrim, resided in A.D. 639 at the Poorvashila booddhist monastery on a hill east of a town. In A.D. 1023 the Chola dynasty obtained possession of Vengy desham, and held the country till about A.D. 1228. Next held by Ganapaty dynasty of Warangal, who ruled till A.D. 1323, when they were in turn overthrown by Mussalmans. On the ruins of the Ganapaty kingdom rose a dynasty of local Reddy chiefs, who ruled at Condaveed till A.D. 1427, when they were subverted by Mussalmans of Golcondah cootb shahy dynasty. Between A.D. 1427 and A.D. 1515, under the sway of first a Gajapaty named Langoolya, then two of the early Vijianugger sovereigns, and then a succession of four Gajapaties, the last of whom was conquered by Krishnadeva royel in A.D. 1515. In 1565 Mussalmans regained possession of country after Talicote, and held it till British occupation, having their capital in hill fortress of Condapully. Numerous Booddhistic remains. Rock-cuttings on hill west of town, the Indraneeladry or Arjoonacondah of natives and Telegraph hill of English. Two marble statues of Booddha on west side of western hill. Of early Braminical period there are temples of Mulleshwaran, Arjoonan and Canaca doorga, with inscriptions, sculptured pillars, mantapams, and figures, besides rock-cuttings in the hills and small cave-temples. Traces of fort erected by East india company in 1760 and dismantled in 1820. For a description of the anicut, constructed here across the Kistna, see vol. I, 396. Trig. station in lat. 16° 31′ 15·47″; long. 80° 38′ 58·53″; height 703 feet; from Bezwada W. ½ mile. The following are the travelling distances by road from Bezwada to different places:—

BHACTAN (भक्त - bhakta, San.). From (bhaj, san. to worship). Devotee.——Bhactavatsa (భక్తవత్సలుడు - bhaktavatsudu, Tel.). From (above + vatsala, san. kind). Kind to adherents; epithet of Shiva or Vishnoo. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name. Common among non-bramin Veishnavites [peyar].——

Bhacty (भक्ति - bhakti, San.). Faith. Distinguished from Carmam [q.v.] or action, and Nyaunam [q.v.] or spiritual knowledge.

BHADRACHELLAM (భద్రాచలము - bhadráchalamu, Tel. bhadrachalam *). From (bhadra, san. lovely + achala, san. hill). Sanscrit name (rámatírt'ha), meaning rama, the hero + place of sacred waters; from rama having crossed the Godavery here on his way to Ceylon.——(1) Talook, Godavery district. Lying between lat. 17° 27′ and 17° 56′ and long. 80° 55′ and 81° 51′. Area with Rekapully, 911 square miles. Inhabitants, chiefly Koyas, a tribe of Gonds. Language Teloogoo. N.W. of district. Bounded N. by Cherla and Bustar, E. by Rekapully, S. and W. by the river Godavery. Ceded in 1860 by the Nizam, and thus formed part of Upper Godavery district, Central provinces. With Rekapully, transferred from the Central provinces to Madras in 1874; and the Rumpa country from the talook of Rajahmundry being added, together with parts of Yernagoodem and Peddapore talooks, the whole was formed into an Agency under the Godavery collector. The talook is flat, with the exception of a strip of land a few miles in breadth along the Godavery; it is covered with dense jungle with here and there a small village consisting of a few Koya huts. Soil good; black cotton soil on the bank of the river. In the interior sandy and rocky. Trade in timber and forest produce. No irrigation. Camping grounds:—Bhadrachellam, Doomagoodem, Lutchigoodem, Nellipanca, Nullamilly, Singavaram and Toomikicheroo. Zemindarry; Narrainpooram. Places of archæological interest:—Bhadrachellam, Devarpully, Doomagoodem, Lutchmanagootta, Nullapully, Purnashaula. Principal trig. station:—Singavaram. The leading places, &c., in the talook are the following.——Bhadrachellam (భద్రాచలము - bhadráchalamu, Tel.). See below.——Doomagoodem (దుమ్ముగూడెము - dummagúdemu, Tel.). See sep. title.——Godavery (గోదావరి - gódávari, Tel.). See sep. title.——Goondaula (గుండాల - gundála, Tel.). From (gundamu, tel. a pit); from sacred springs of water in the Godavery. Zemindarry village; pop. 318; lat. of village 17° 39′; long. 80° 59′; from Bhadrachellam E.S.E. 3½ miles; from Cocanada W.N.W. 97 miles.——Paupicondah (పాపికొండ - pápikonda, Tel.). See sep. title.——Purnashaula (పర్ణశాల - parnashála, Tel.). From (parna, san. leaf + shálá, san. hut). Bower. Zemindarry village, Place of pilgrimage; pop. 270; lat. of village 17° 56′; long. 80° 56′; from Bhadrachellam N. 18 miles; from Cocanada N.W. 109 miles. On the Godavery. Celebrated shrine built over the spot whence Seeta was carried off by Ravanan. In a stream at the back of the temple is shown a foot-print made by Seeta. The villagers show peculiar formations of hills and rocks as relics of the death of Jatauyoo and the abduction of Seeta.——Singavaram (సింగవరము - singavaramu, Tel.). From (singamu, tel. lion + pura, san. town). Trig. station; lat. 17° 45′ 10·38″; long. 80° 58′ 36·22″; height 724 feet; from Bhadrachellam N.N.E. 6½ miles; from Singavaram S. 1½ miles.——(2) Zemindarry, Town, Talook head-quarters, Place of pilgrimage; Godavery dist., Bhadrachellam tal.; pop. 2,053; lat. of village 17° 40′; long. 80° 56′; from Cocanada W.N.W. 102 miles; from Coonavaram W.N.W. 25 miles; from Ellore N.N.W. 66 miles; from Madras N. 310 miles; from Narsapore N.N.W. 100 miles; from Rajahmundry N.W. 74 miles. Built on a knoll about 100 feet high, on the Godavery. Consist of one long narrow street. Celebrated temple of Rama. The temple is built on the top of a small hill, called Bhadrachellam and is surrounded by twenty-four lesser pagodas and surmounted by a lofty gopooram, which is out of all proportion to the edifice it surmounts. The space in the centre is paved. The building is approached by a flight of stone steps from the river. The temple is managed by the Nizam's officials. The Nizam contributes Rs. 13,000 annually towards the maintenance. Rama being said to have crossed the Godavery at this spot on his expedition to Ceylon, an annual festival is held in April. About a mile east of the village are dolmens. Diamonds are found in the neighbourhood. There is a hot spring in bed of Godavery. Peshcush of Zemindarry Rs. 16,709. The Ranee traces her descent from Annappa ashwa row, who received grant of the estate from Emperor of Delhi in 1324.

BHADRAM (भद्र - bhadra, San.). From (bhand, san. to be greeted with praise). Propitious.——Bhadra (ಭದ್ರ - bhadra, Can.). Means beautiful. River; Cuddore district, Mysore. Twin stream of the Toonga, which both united form the Toongabudra. Confluence with the Toonga at Coodaly in the Shimoga district, about 8 miles north-east of Shimoga.——Bhadra cauly (भद्रकाली - bhadrakálí, San.). From (above + kálí, san. the goddess of that name). S. indian usage for Cauly, περσεφόνη of Greeks; Proserpina of Romans; Isis of Egyptians. The Moloch of Indian mythology. The Caulica pooraunam details her ritual, &c. There is a temple to her at Cauly ghattam near Calcutta, whence latter name. She is here one of the forms in which the village goddess of the south has been assimilated into the Hindoo system. Differs but little from Doorga. Said to have been Shiva's wife, but to have become arrogant; in consequence of which she was banished to this world, where she is now one of the queens who rule over demons, and protect men from them. She is sometimes called the shacty or inferior wife of Veerabhadran, Shiva's third son. She is represented in a dancing attitude; for she danced once in emulation with Shiva. The latter is for this reason called Peyodandy, the dancer with a devil, and represented in dancing attitude in the pagoda at Chidambaram, where at the annual great festival his dancing with Bhadra cauly is also acted. Bhadra cauly wears on her head a fiery crown, round which are serpents, and her whole body glows with fire. On her forehead she has Shiva's mark of sacred ashes, and in her mouth are two lion teeth. She has ten arms and hands; four of these are empty, and in the other six she holds respectively a rope, a parrot, a lance, a drum round which is a snake, a trident, and fire. An image of this description is found in her pagodas, together with Vigneshwaran, Veerabhadran and Aghoran. The last standing for Shiva is represented in a dancing attitude, having fourteen arms and hands, in which he holds various weapons. On his head he wears a crown; in his long erect locks are on one side Gungay and on the other the moon; on his forehead is the Sheiva sign made with sacred ashes; and on his feet are wooden slippers, in which he danced with Bhadra cauly; whilst garlands hang down from his shoulders. In the pagodas which have a sufficient income, Bhadra cauly is daily worshipped in the inner apartment, with offerings similar to those made to Shiva and Vishnoo, a Bramin usually officiating. The sacrifices made on the altars before the pagodas, consisting of swine, goats, cocks, strong drink, &c., are conducted by Shoodras or Pariahs. Bhadra cauly assists in the practice of black arts. Like the other Graumadevatays, Bhadra cauly enjoys an annual festival, which lasts seven or nine days. She has various names, and among them the following:—Alacay codiyaul or she on whose banner a devil is painted; Ayyay or mistress; Bheiravy or the shacty of bheiravan; Cauly or the black one; Chamoondy; Cungauly or she who wears skeletons; Devy or goddess; Madhoopaty or mistress of ardent spirits; Mauliny; Mautah or mother; Mautangy or the young woman; Mooccunny or the three-eyed; Oolaviya manyay or walking deception; Shooly or she who wears a trident; Shoory or heroine-demoness; Vallanang or the malevolent goddess; Veery or heroine; Vetauly or demoness; Yauliyoorty or she who rides the lion; Yaumalay; Yendoly or the eight shouldered. The name frequently occurs in books, conjointly with coil, for a temple in which the female energy is worshipped. Very many Cauly coils are scattered over Southern india, and by traditional statement a human sacrifice was offered at the foundation of every one of them. The Tauntrica rites of the Atarvana vedam pertain to her worship. For Shiva's wife in her milder form see Parvaty. See vol. I (70) to (94), and the following foot-notes:—history of religion and philosophy I (70), conspectus of pantheon I (77), devil worship I (80), existing hindoo sects I (88) [matam].——Bhadrachellam (భద్రాచలము - bhadráchalamu, Tel.). The sacred place; see sep. title. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Bhadradeepam (ഭദ്രദീപം - bhadradípam, Mal.; பத்திராத்திபம் - pattiraittíbam, Tam.). Means lamp of good fortune. Solar festival [pundigay, 6d] on the first day of fourth solar month Carcatacam [mausam] or 15th July and again on the first day of tenth solar month Macaram [mausam] or 12th January. Festival in Travancore. It is a kind of sun worship like the Pongal of the Tamuls, performed at the two ayanams or solstices of the year, calculated as occurring about 12th January and 15th July. The ceremony chiefly consists in the priests transferring, by means of muntrams or invocations, the spirit of the sun to sacred lamps. The Moorjapam, which is a special and extraordinary observance of the Bhadradeepam, is held every six years; this is supposed to compensate for any defect during the preceding six years. The Moorjapam is terminated by Laksha deepam [q.v.].——Bhadray (भद्रा - bhadrá, San.). Auspicious. Name of the second, seventh and twelfth days of any lunar fortnight, as auspicious days.

BHAEE (بھائی - bháí, Hind.). From (bhrátri, san. brother). Brother. Distinguish from Bye [q.v.].——Bhaee paun lao (بھائی پان لاؤ - bháípánláo, Hind.). Brother, bring Paun! A Thug signal.

BHAGAM (भग - bhaga, San.). From (bhaj, san. to enjoy). Fortune.——Bhagavanta (భగవంతుడు - bhagavantudu, Tel.). From (above + vat, san. suffix of possession). Epithet of the Supreme being. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Bhagavat (भगवद् - bhagavat, San.). From (above + vat, san. affix showing possession). The fortunate one, the supreme being, especially Vishnoo. The monotheistic Cooral used it for the one supreme being. Thus:—"The essence of the supreme is defined by the "term bhagavat; the word bhagavat is the denomination of the "primeval and eternal god; the letter bh implies the cherisher "and supporter of the universe; by ga is understood the leader, "impeller, or creator; the dissyllable bhagam indicates the six "properties, viz., dominion, might, glory, splendour, wisdom and "dispassion" [matam].——Bhagavat geeta (भगवद्गीता - bhagavadgítá, San.). From (gítá, san. song). Also short, the Geetay. An episode of Mahabhaurat, in form of discourse between Avatar krishnan and his friend and pupil Arjoonan. After twelve years' wandering of Pandavas, the hostile armies met on plain of Cooroo cshetram. Arjoonan, seeing his relatives drawn up against him in battle array, was struck with compunction. Krishnan, who was acting as his charioteer, replied in a metaphysical discourse that as Arjoonan belonged to the military caste his duty was to fight. Renunciation of the world ought not to involve avoidance of action, or neglect of professional duties. The fight then went on and the Pandavas gained the victory. The Geetay is philosophically eclectic and claimed by all religious parties, and resembles Stoic philosophy of the Greeks. According to it, god is the soul of the world, its material cause as well as its efficient cause. The world is his body, formed by himself out of himself. Everything that exists is a portion of god, and every action that is performed is an action of god. Next to the doctrine concerning deity, the most distinguishing principle is the importance of quietism. To the wise man, pleasure and pain, gain and loss, victory and defeat, are the same. He is of the same mind to the good and to the bad. He is free from desire and aversion, hope and fear, unconcerned about the issue of his actions. The real author is unknown. It was at an early date placed in the Mahabhaurat. It is however, quite independent. Example from the Canarese version which is the best known—"ಯಾವಾ ಕರ್ಮಗಳನ್ನು ಮನಸ್ಸಿನಿಂದ ಬಿಟ್ಟಂಥಾವನಾಗಿ ತಾನು ಮಾಡಿಸದೇ ಒಂಭತ್ತು ಬಾಗಿಲುಗಳುಳ್ಳ ಈ ಶರೀರವೆಂಬ ಪಟ್ಟಣದಲ್ಲಿ ಜೀವನು ಇಂದ್ರಿಯಂಗಳನ್ನು ಸ್ವಾಧೀನಮಾಡಿಕೊಂಡು ಸುಖವಾಗಿ ಇರುವನು. ಸಮರ್ಥನಾದ ದೇವರು ಲೋಕಕ್ಕೆ ಕರ್ತೃತ್ವವನ್ನು ಕರ್ಮಗಳನ್ನು ಕರ್ಮದ ಫಲದಿಂದ ಕೂಡುವಿಕೆಯನ್ನು ಉಂಟುಮಾಡುವದಿಲ್ಲವು ಸ್ವಭಾವವಾಗಿಯೇ ಪ್ರವರ್ತಿಸುವದು. ಅರಸಾದ ದೇವರು ಪುಣ್ಯ ಪಾಪಗಳಿಂದ ಬರುವ ಸುಖದುಃಖಗಳನ್ನು ಹೊಂದುವದಿಲ್ಲ ಆದರೆ ಜ್ಞಾನವು ಅಜ್ಞಾನದಿಂದ ಮುಚ್ಚಲ್ಪಟ್ಟದೆ ಆದರಿಂದ ಈ ಜೀವಜಂತುಗಳು ತಪ್ಪಿನಡಿಯುತ್ತವೆ. ಯಾರಿಗೆ ಅಂಥಾ ಅಜ್ಞಾನವು ಜ್ಞಾನದಿಂದ ನಾಶವಾಗಿ ಹೋಗುವದೋ ಅವರಿಗೆ ಸೂರ್ಯನಹಾಗೆ ಆತ್ಮಜ್ಞಾನವು ಅದೇಲೆ ಪ್ರಕಾಶಿಸುವದು. ಆ ಭಗವಂತನಲ್ಲಿಯೇ ಬುದ್ಧಿಯು ಆತನಲ್ಲಿಯೇ ಚಿತ್ತವು ಆತನಲ್ಲಿಯೇ ಭಕ್ತಿಯು ನೆಲೆಗೊಂಡಿರುವವರು ಮತ್ತು ಆತನಲ್ಲಿ ನಂಬಿಕೆಯುಂಟಾದವರು ಜ್ಞಾನದಿಂದ ತೊಳೆಯಲ್ಪಟ್ಟ ಪಾಪಗಳುಳ್ಳವರಾಗಿ ಯೆಂದೆಂದಿಗೂ ತಿರುಗದ ಸ್ಥಳವನು ಶೇರುವರು—"As for the man who has his passions in subjection and who does not concern himself with worldly matters, his soul sits at rest in the nine-gate city of its abode, neither acting nor causing to act. The Almighty creates neither the powers nor the deeds of mankind, nor the application of the fruits of action; nature prevails. The Almighty receives neither the vices nor the virtues of any one. Mankind are led astray by their reason being obscured by ignorance but when that ignorance of their souls is destroyed by the force of reason, their wisdom shines forth again with the glory of the sun, and causes the deity to appear. Those whose understanding are in him, whose souls are in him, whose confidence is in him, and whose asylum is in him, are by wisdom purified from all their offences, and go from whence they shall never return." Applied to males and females; also taken by native Christians [peyar].——Bhaugyanautan (பாக்கியநாதன் - pákkiyanáthan, Tam.). From (above + nát'ha, san. master). Shiva, the master of the eight Bhangyas or Siddhies. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].

BHAICAM (भेक - bhéka, San.; مینڈک - mendak, Hind.; ಕಪ್ಪೆ - kappe, Can.; కప్ప - kappa, Tel.; തവള - tavala, Mal.; தவளை - tavalai, Tam.). San. from (bhi, san. to be timid). Hind. from (mandúka, san. frog). Tam. from (távu, tam. to leap). The frog and toad order of animals. Terms co-extensive with the European order Batrachia ecaudata, sub-class Batrachians. This sub-class is sometimes included under Reptiles [sarpy], but is here separated. Batrachians are distinguished from other divisions of vertebrate animals by passing through a metamorphosis; that is, after their embryonal life, undergoing changes which affect not only their external form but also their internal organs. Food consists of insects and worms, only the largest kinds feed on small vertebrates. The prey is swallowed entire. Moisture is necessary; they are found only in damp places or in the neighbourhood of water; when the hot season commences, those which are remote from water bury themselves deep enough in the ground to escape the dry atmosphere, falling into a state of lethargy identical with the winter-sleep of species inhabiting colder climates. Many are endowed with a powerful voice; skin sometimes smooth. Many live at some distance from water; all enter it at the season of propagation. The young ones or tadpoles have a thick ovate body without legs, terminating in a long, strong, compressed tail, which serves as an organ of locomotion in the water. They are true aquatic animals, having the same anatomical and physiological arrangement of the organs of circulation as fishes. Food consists chiefly of living or decaying vegetables, but also of decomposing animal substances. None are poisonous. The sub-class Batrachians has two orders here represented. The first order is that represented by the title, viz., of Batrachia ecaudata or Tail-less frogs, otherwise Batrachia salientia or Jumping frogs; in this order the body is broad and short, and in the perfectly developed state with four legs and without tail. The second order is that of burrowing Batrachians, Batrachia apoda or frogs without legs; in this order the body is long, cylindrical, without limbs, worm-like; a tail is absent or extremely short; skin is smooth and viscous, forming numerous annular folds; eyes are rudimentary, more or less hidden below the skin; constantly live below ground, burrowing like worms; food consists of mould and worms; these are not classed by natives among frogs, and go under the head of worm [keerah]. There is a Tamul proverb:—தவளை தாமரைக்குச் சமீபமாக இருக்கும் அதின் தேனை உண்ணுகா; அதுபோல அறிவீனர் கிட்ட இருந்தாலும் கற்றுக்கொள்ளார்கள்—"The frog living near the lotus drinks not its honey, the illiterate though they live near the learned remain ignorant."——(1) The following is a synopsis of the Batrachia ecaudata of Southern india, ranged down to species. The italics indicate the families, and the ordinary type indicates the species.——Ranidæ.—Rana hexadactyla [tank frog], cyanophlyctis, kuhlii, tigrina [bull frog], gracilis, verrucosa, rufescens, breviceps, dobsonii, beddomii, semipalmata, leptodactyla, diplosticta, phrynoderma, malabarica, curtipes, temporalis; Rhacophorus pleurostictus [tree frog], maculatus [choonam frog], malabaricus, beddomii, lateralis; Ixalus opisthorhodus, fuscus, silvaticus, saxicola, leucorhinus, femoralis, beddomii, pulcher, variabilis [tinkling frog], glandulosus, punctatus, chalazodes, flaviventris signatus; Nyctibatrachus pygmæus, major; Nannobatrachus beddomii.—Engystomatidæ.—Melanobatrachus indicus; Microhyla rubra, ornata; Callula obscura, olivacea, triangularis; Cacopus systoma, globulosus.—Bufonidæ.—Nectophryne tuberculosa; Bufo pulcher, hololius, beddomii, melanostictus [indian toad], microtympanum, parietalis.——(2) The following are the principal South indian species of the Ecaudata arranged alphabetically with a few particulars.—"a" Bufo melanostictus, bufonidæ [indian toad].—"b" Cacopus systoma, engystometidæ; color of the upper surface black or blackish brown with delicate primrose undulating marbling.—"c" Callula triangularis, engystomatidæ; a large triangular blackish spot occupying nearly the whole length of the backs.—"d" Ixalus glandulosus, ranidæ; a small tree frog, with very obtuse muzzle; green above, yellowish on the sides and limbs.—"e" Ixalus opisthorhodus, ranidæ; color of upper surface brown; under surface yellowish with mottlings; lower surface of hind limbs rose-colored; black band on each side of the head under each eye.—"f" Ixalus saxicola, ranidæ; dark olive green with dark marbling, and barred limbs.—"g" Ixalus signatus, ranidæ; a large X shaped marking on the back; generally greenish yellow on upper surface.—"h" Ixalus variabilis, ranidæ [tinkling frog]; color and marking subject to great variations; very difficult to capture.—"i" Microhyla rubra, engystomatidæ; found near rivers and sandy banks.—"j" Nectophryne tuberculosa, bufonidæ; skin of the upper parts tubercular.—"k" Rana breviceps, ranidæ; habit stout; head short; snout rounded; skin of upper parts smooth, greenish marbled with brown; with the aid of its shovel-like metatarsal tubercle it burrows in the ground.—"l" Rana curtipes, ranidæ; head and back bright buff above, sides deep maroon, legs dark purple with a few white spots, and abdomen white mottled.—"m" Ranacyanophlyctis, ranidæ; allied to hexadactyla, smaller.—"n" Rana diplosticta, ranidæ; pinkish olive colored, black spots on the sides; legs with dark cross-bars; abdomen light colored.—"o" Rana gracilis, ranidæ; allied to tigrina, but smaller size, greyish olive with large dark spots on the back and limbs ; sometimes a triangular transverse spot between the eyes, with the point directed backwards ; five broad short bands radiate from the orbit, forming two spots below the eye ; uniform white below.—" p " Rana hexadactyla, ranidæ [tank frog].—" q " Rana rufescens, ranidæ ; rufous color above whitish beneath ; body rough and granulose ; limbs barred ; malabar coast.—" r " Rana tigrina, ranidæ [bull frog].—" s " Rana verrucosa, ranidæ ; upper parts with prominent warts ; malabar.—" t " Rhacophorus maculatus, ranidæ [choonam frog].— " u " Rhacophorus pleurostictus, ranidæ [tree frog] ; variable in color.——(3) The following are the different batrachians distinguished by the natives.——Bull frog (वर्षाभू - varshábhú, San. ; مینڈکا - mendká, Hind. ; గోదురుకప్ప - góduru-kappa, Tel. ; പേക്കൻ - pékkan, Mal. ; மிடாத்தவளை - midát-tavalai, Tam.). San. from (varsha, san. rain + bhú, san. to be), produced in the rains. Tel. from (góda, tel. bull + kappa, tel. frog). Mal. from (bhéka, san. frog). Tam. from (midaru, tam. throat + tavalai, tam. frog). Rana tigrina, ranidæ, of naturalists. Alias Rana brama, cancrivora, crassa, latrans, mugiens, rugulosa, vittigera ; Hoplobatrachus ceylanicus ; Hydrostentor pantherinus ; Pyxicephalus fodiens. Skin of the back with longitudinal folds ; tympanum distinct, about two-thirds the size of the eye ; lower jaw with two not very prominent apophyses in front ; fourth toe one-third or one-half longer than the fifth ; toes nearly entirely webbed, the web extending not quite to the tip of the fourth toe ; a well-developed membranaceous fringe along the outer side of the fifth toe ; a single small or large, blunt or shovel-shaped inner metatarsal tubercle. Color dark-brown above with large blackish spots. The males during the breeding season are pale greenish yellow with dark spots and a pale vertebral streak, and are smaller than the females which are greyish olive with dark spots. Its barking voice is familiar during the monsoon. This frog eats the smaller species.——Choonam frog (प्लव - plava, San. ; اڑتی مینڈک - urtímendak, Hind. ; ఉరుగుకప్ప - urugukappa, Tel. ; ചൊറിത്തവള - chorittavala, Mal. ; சொரித்தவளை - shorittavalai, Tam.). San. from (plu, san. to fly). Hind. from (urtí, hind. flying + mendak, hind. frog). Tel. from (uruku, tel. to fly + kappa, tel. frog). Mal. from (chori, mal. scab + tavala, mal. frog). Tam. from (shori, tam. rough + tavalai, tam. frog). Otherwise Flying frog. Rhacophorus maculatus, ranidæ, of naturalists. Alias Burgeria maculata, Hyla leucomystax, maculata ; Polypedates biscutiger, cruciger, leucomystax, maculatus, megacephalus, rugosus. Tympanum nearly as large as the eye ; toes nearly entirely, fingers slightly webbed ; discs of fingers and toes well-developed, about half the diameter of the tympanum ; a single, small, inner metatarsal tubercle. Skin smooth above, strongly granular on the belly and under the thighs ; a narrow fold above the tympanum. Coloration varies ; the most constant markings are brownish cross-bars on the limbs, small, more or less distinct, round white or whitish spots on the hinder side of the thigh, and a more or less developed white streak on the upper lip. This species has the power of changing its colors ; it is sometimes buff above, sometimes ashy-grey, chocolate-brown, tinged with rose or lilac, black spots being more or less visible. Frequently seen, adhering to vertical surface, walls and windows, by means of the discs on its fingers and toes.——Indian toad (स्थूलमण्डूक - st'húlamandúka, San. ; داڈر - dádur, Hind. ; తలకప్ప - talakappa, Tel. ; തേര - téra, Mal. ; தேரை - térai, Tam.). San. from (st'húla, san. large + mandúka, san. frog). Hind. from (dardura, san. rain cloud). Tel. from (tala, tel. head + kappa, tel. frog). Bufo melanostictus, bufonidæ, of naturalists. Alias Bufo bengalensis, carinatus, dubia, gymnauchen, isos, scaber, spinipes ; Phrynoidis melanostictus. Head with more or less elevated bony ridges ; tympanum at least two-thirds the width of the eye ; first finger generally extending beyond second ; toes at least half-webbed ; two moderate metatarsal tubercles. Upper surfaces with more or less prominent, generally spiny warts ; parotoids very prominent, kidney-shaped or elliptic, more or less elongate. Color and markings yellowish or brownish above, the spines of the warts and the ridges of the head generally black ; beneath immaculate or more or less spotted. Makes a chirping sound and sometimes a shrill whistle.——Tank frog (मण्डूक - mandúka, San. ; مینڈکی - mendkí, Hind. ; కప్ప - kappa, Tel. ; തവള - tavala, Mal. ; தவளை - tavalai, Tam.). Hind. is diminutive of (mendká). Tam. from (távu, tam, to leap). Otherwise common frog. Rana hexadactyla, ranidæ, of naturalists. Alias Dactylethra bengalensis ; Rana cutipora, robusta. Skin smooth, with rows of pore round the neck, sides, and belly ; toes and fingers pointed, the first finger extending a little beyond the second ; toes webbed to the tips ; fourth toe not very much longer than third and fifth ; a membranaceous fringe along the margins of the first and fifth toes ; metatarsus with a single small inner conical tubercle. Color generally bright grass-green, rapidly changing in spirit to chocolate brown, with a central green or yellow stripe, vertebral line, along the middle of the back, but the presence of this stripe is not constant. Very common in tanks and along the banks of rivers.——Tinkling frog (हरि - hari, San. ; هری مینڈک - harímendak, Hind. ; బొంతకప్ప - bontakappa, Tel. ; പച്ചത്തവള - paççattavala, Mal. ; பச்சைத்தவளை - paççaittavalai, Tam.). San. means green. Hind. from (harí, hind. green + mendak, hind. frog). Tel. from (bonta, tel. large + kappa, tel. frog). Tam. from (paççai, tam. green + tavalai, tam. frog). Ixalus variabilis, ranidæ, of naturalists. Tongue without a papilla ; snout rounded ; tympanum indistinct, about half the width of the eye ; fingers very slightly, toes two-thirds webbed ; discs moderate ; a small inner metatarsal tubercle ; skin smooth above, granular beneath ; color and markings subject to great variations, the upper surface being bluish, greenish, brownish or blackish, uniform, or variously spotted or speckled with darker or lighter ; Neilgherries ; found in grass and among bushes ; peculiar loud clear metallic tinkling call ; natives say that it is a ventriloquist.——Tree frog (మంటికప్ప - mantikappa, Tel. ; മരത്തവള - marattavala, Mal. ; மணற்றவளை - manattavalai, Tam.). Tel. from (mannu, tel. mud + kappa, tel. frog). Mal. means tree + frog. Tam. from (manal, tam. sand + tavalai, tam. frog). Otherwise Green frog, Mud-frog. Rhacophorus pleurostictus, ranidæ, of naturalists. Alias Polypedates pleurostictus. Tympanum small, indistinct, not quite one-third the width of the eye, fingers very distinctly webbed at the base ; discs well-developed ; toes broadly webbed, the interdigital membrane extending to the discs of the third and fifth toes ; metatarsus with a single tubercle ; very variable in color ; sometimes unspotted, at other times with gold spots or blackish spots ; at times golden-yellow with brown spots ; at other times brown with darker spots ; banks of streams and in shrubs.——(4) For insects see poochy ; for fishes see matsyam ; for reptiles see sarpy ; for birds see pacshy ; for mammals see sastanam. A general conspectus of the fauna of s. india is given in vol. II, appendix IV.

BHAIDAM (भेद - bhéda, San.). From (bhid, san. to break) ; difference. In natural history a species. For category, see Padaurtam ; for elementary substance, see Dravyam ; for matter, see Bhootam ; for organic and inorganic, see Indriyam and Anindriyam ; for organic kingdom, see Ganam [jantoo, vricsham] ; for organic class, see Vargam ; for organic order, see Santaunam ; for organic family, see Coolam ; for organic genus, see Jauty ; organic species is the present word. Oopa prefixed to either of the above means a sub-head. For inorganic minerals, see Dhautoo.

BHAM (भ - bha, San.). From (bhá, san. to shine). Star ; planet.——Bhaganam (भगण - bhagana, San.). From (above + gana, san. group). Group of stars and planets. Revolution of planets in the zodiac or the period during which a planet moves from the first point of Ashwiny to the last point of Raivaty. It is shorter or longer as the orbit is small or large. Chundran or moon which has the smallest orbit takes twenty-seven days to complete a revolution ; while Shany or Saturn which has the largest orbit takes thirty years for one revolution. Boodhan, Shoocran and Sooryan take one year ; Angauracan, a year and a half ; Gooroo, twelve years. Any great circle in astronomy divided into twelve raushies or signs and sub-divided at each step sexagesimally into bhaugams, calays, vicalays, &c., i.e., degrees, minutes, seconds, &c. [jyotisham].——Bhamundalam (भमण्डल - bhamandala, San.). Means starry circle, as opposed to terrestrial globe. Also zodiac, solar or lunar ; for the former cf. Raushy [jyotisham].——Bhascaracharry (भास्कराचार्य - bháskarácHárya, San.). From (bháskara, san. sun, the light-maker, proper name + áchárya, san. preceptor). Last of the celebrated astronomers and mathematicians [siddhauntam]. Lived at Beedar. Author of Beeja ganitam on arithmetic, Leelauvaty on algebra, and Siddhaunta shiromany on astronomy. Knew principle of differential calculus.——Bhascaran (भास्कर - bháskara, San.). Light-giver ; sun.——Bhascara saptamy (భాస్కరసప్తమి - bháskarasaptami, Tel.). Means sun + the seventh day of lunar fortnight. Same as Rata saptamy.——Bhaunoo (भानु - bhánu, San.). The sun. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name ; applied to males and females. Bhaunmoorty, or sun-deity [moorty] is common [peyar].——Bhaunoovidiya (భానువిదియ - bhánuvidiya, Tel.). Means sun + the second day of the lunar fortnight. Lunar festival [pundigay, 3a], subject to intercalation. A feast held in the first lunar month Cheitram [mausam] between 15th March and 14th April in honor of sun.

BHANDAURA (ಭಂಡಾರ - bhandára, Can.). Treasury.——Bhandaury (ಭಂಡಾರಿ - bhandári, Can.). From above. Title among Bunts. Hindoo third name [peyar].

BHANG (भङ्गा - bhangá, San. ; قنب - kinnab, Ar. ; بنگ - bang, Pers. ; بھنگ - bhang, Hind. ; ಭಂಗಿ - bhangi, Can. ; బంగి - bangi, Tel. ; കഞ്ചാവില - kañchávila, Mal. ; பங்கி - pangi, Tam.). San. from (bhanj, san. to break). Pers. and hind. from sanscrit. Mal. means ganjah leaf. Tam. from sanscrit. The dried leaves of the Cannabis sativa, linn. [kinnab]. Thence made drink of same name ; plant with female flowers only used for this purpose ; chiefly drunk by Mahomedans. The following is a recipe :—Take of hemp leaves, washed in water, one tolah or three drams, black pepper four annas' weight or forty-five grains, cloves, nutmeg and mace, of each one anna or eleven and one-fourth grains weight ; triturate the leaves and other ingredients with one pow or eight ounces of water, milk, or the juice of water-melon seed, or cucumber seed, strain and drink the liquor. It is usually employed without the spices ; the latter rendering it highly inebriating. Bhang is cheaper than ganjah [q.v.] and though less powerful is sold at such a low price that for one pice enough can be purchased to intoxicate a habituated person [mooskiraut, sharaub].——Slow bhang (بجر بہانگ - bajarbháng, Hind.). Tobacco.

BHATTA (ಬತ್ತ - batta, Can.). From (bhakta, san. boiled rice). Rice before it is deprived of the chaff; paddy, which is probably derived from this word.

BHATTY (ಭಟ್ಟಿ - bhatti, Can.). A still. Bhattisoonka, from (sunka, can. tax) is still-head duty.

BHAUGAM (भाग - bhága, San.). From (bhaj, san. to divide).—"a" Partition. Condition of coparcenary among Hindoos [avibhactam] may be broken up under certain circumstances by partition of the joint property, each co-heir taking his appointed share. The effect of such division is to vest the divided share absolutely in each separate member and in his line after him. Sons may, at their will and irrespective of all circumstances, compel their father to divide with them the ancestral property. Sons who have demised being represented by their sons or grandsons, the latter also may force on such division. Should the father have become a devotee he is considered civilly dead, and the sons may proceed to division without him. His degradation from caste would operate according to Hindoo law in the same way, but the legislature have ruled that this circumstance shall not interfere with an individual's rights in property. The property of Nayar, that is to say Shoodra families on the West coast, who are subject to the Aliya santauna or Maroomakkatoyem laws of inheritance, is in the primitive condition and admits of no partition. The following descriptions of property, besides self-acquired property, are not subject to partition:—Lands endowed for religious purposes, and all things destined to religious uses. Regalities and ancient zemindarries which have vested in the eldest son. Land specially granted so as to maintain the rank and dignity of a family. Zemindarries held under grant from the ruling government and renewed to the eldest son. Self-acquired property created by a father while divided from his sons, should there be sons born after the division this vesting in the latter. Nuptial gifts received by a man with his wife, even although such come out of the joint property. Clothes and jewels habitually worn and which belong exclusively to the wearer. Dues attached to the office of a curnum, notwithstanding that the office itself may be ancestral. For inheritance see Dauyam [maryanday].—"b" Degree. In astronomy an arc equal to the one-three hundred and sixtieth part of the circumference of a circle, or one-thirtieth of a raushy. Fraction; numerator of a fraction. Bhauga anoobandham is an infinite series [jyotisham].—"c" Portion; suffix in place names, as Mettbhaugam, meaning rising ground + portion.——Bhaujak (भाजक - bhájaka, San.). From (bhaj, san. to divide). Divisor in arithmetic. Also called Haram.——Bhaujyam (भाज्य - bhájya, San.). From (bhaj, san. to divide). Dividend in arithmetic.

BHAUNCOTE (బాణకోట - bhánakóta, Tel.). From (bána, san. the asura + kóta, san. fort). Range of hills; Cuddapah dist., Poolivendla and Jummalmudoogoo tals.; lat. 14° 41′; long. 78° 16′; from Cuddapah W.N.W. 41 miles; from Poolivendla N. 18 miles. The village is sacred. Temple, to which pilgrimages are made in Caurtigay [mausam] or November. Ruins of a fort. The range separates Poolivendla from Jummalmudoogoo. It is altogether denuded.

BHAURAM (भार - bhára, San.; பாரம் - páram, Tam.). From (bhri, san to bear). A weight equal to 20 maunds [niray, 2]. Approximate actual value, 1 bhauram = 500 lbs. avoirdupois. Same as Can. bauroo, Hind. candy, Tel. pootty of Ganjam and Vizagapatam. See vol. I, 609; II, 506–520.

BHAURATAM (भारत - bhárata, San.). From (bharata, san. the king so called). Short term for Mahabhaurat. Bhaurata champoo, from (champu, san. work consisting of prose and verse) is the story in prose and verse by Ananta bhattan, modern, but favorite. Bhaurata tautparya nirnayam, from (tátparya, san. purport + nirnaya, san. settlement) is a verse summary by Ananta teertan, with reference to his own doctrines. Bhaurata vilausam, from (vilása, san. play) is a modern drama by Ramachendra cavy royan of Madras.——Bhaurata varsham (भारतवर्ष - b'háratavarsha, San.). From (above + varsha, san. division). Northern india, as having been the kingdom of Bharatan, son of Rishabhan. It was divided into nine khandams; Casheroomat, Coomauricam, Gabhastimat, Gandharvam, Indra dweepam, Nauga dweepam, Sowmyam, Tamravurnam, Vauroonam. Cannot be satisfactorily identified. It did not include the peninsula south of the Vindhya range [aryavartam]. See vol. I (3) [charitram].

BHAURGAM (भार्गी - bhárga, San.; ತಗ್ಗಿಮರ - taggimara, Can.; భారంగి - bhárangi, Tel.). From (bharga, san. radiance); from curing efficacy. I (38) to (61), and the following foot-notes:—dravidian conspectus I (38), morphological stages I (39), comp. with indo european I (40), comp. with turanian I (41), vocabulary I (41), history I (42), written characters I (46), existing languages in plains I (50), existing languages of hills I (51), tamul analysed, I, 52, tamul geographical names I (54), dravidian literature I (56); kolarian conspectus I (38), structure I (59), existing languages I (59); ooriyah particulars I (59); hindostany account I, 60; specimens of characters II, 177, statistics II, 183, anglo-indian spelling II, 185, new spelling II, 187-191, dravidian vocabulary II, 193, kolarian vocabulary II, 203, orthography of tamul II, 205, letter ழ II, 209, tamul topography II, 211-218.——Bhaushicam (பாசிகம் - pásigam, Tam.). Means commentary on Vedas. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name. Common among Madhwas and Veishnavas. Teloogoo form is Bhaushyam [peyar].

BHAUVY (वापि - vápi, San.; ಭಾವಿ - bhávi, Can.; బావి - bávi, Tel.; வாவி - vávi, Tam.). Well with a flight of steps leading down to the water. Suffix in place names, as Cullbhauvy, meaning stone + well. There is a Canarese proverb:—ಪಾಪದ ಕಾರ್ಯಕ್ಕೆ ಮನಸ್ಸೇ ಸಾಕ್ಷಿ, ತೋಡಿದ ಭಾವಿಗೆ ಜಲವೇ ಸಾಕ್ಷಿ—"Conscience is "the witness of sins committed, and water is evidence of "the dug-up well."

BHAVAM (भव - bhava, San.). From (bhú, san. to be). Being. Bhavan is a name of Shiva. Bhavabooty was the dramatist at Court of Bhoja rajah of Oojjein, considered second only to Calidass. See also Bhawauny.——Bhavanty (భవంతి - bhavanti, Tel.). From (bhavana, san. house). A house built square with chamber in each corner; the middle being an area.——Bhavanty roomaul (భవంతిరుమాలు - bhavantirumálu, Tel.). From (above + rúmál, pers. handkerchief). BHAWAUNY (भवानी - bhavání, San. bhaváni *). A name of of Parvaty as wife of Bhavan [bhavam].——(1) ἥρα of Greeks, Juno of Romans, Isis of Egyptians. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name. Common to both sexes [peyer]. Similar is Bhawaunishuncar, Parvaty and Shiva combined [ardhanaury].——(2) Talook, Coimbatore district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 150. Area 715 square miles. In N.E. corner of district. Population 119,869. Languages Tamul and Canarese. Bounded E. and N. by Cauvery; N.W. and W. by Burgoor hills; W. by Suttimungalam talook; S. by Erode talook. Cauverypooram pass, principal route from Mysore, formerly passed through talook. Burgoor ghaut route still takes some portion of foot and bullock traffic. Talook extremely hilly, and practically unexplored. Paulamullay and Burgoor hills are chief ranges, and Oorautchicottah hill is a striking feature from sharp conical shape. Climate feverish and hot in the plains, and the hills are not above fever range. The talook shares in both monsoons, but, except on and near the hills, general rainfall in S.W. monsoon is not so good in the interior as at Bhawauny town. The forests are on an imposing scale, and one object of Burgoor ghaut was opening up of hills for timber. Bison are common on hills, and this talook and Suttimungalam are the special home of the elephant. Rocks are gneissose, intersected by veins of quartz and in places covered by masses of once fluid limestone. Soils that are the product of these rocks are in general poor, much of the clay from the felspathic portion of the gneiss having been washed down to other districts; seven-eighths of the soils are red, above three-fourths being red sand or gravel. Pasture is abundant and cattle numerous and fairly good. The Burgoor breed partakes of Mysore characteristics and is well known. There is a moderate trade in forest produce, and Auvauray bark is largely collected and exported for tanning. Cotton carpets are well woven and dyed at Bhawauny, the Cauvery water being specially valuable in fixing. Other manufactures are gunny, common country cloths and wares. The drainage is to the Cauvery either direct or by the Bhawauny on the south. The Aupacoodal chain of tanks runs from the hills in the north to the Bhawauny on the south. Except one tank in Moogausipoothore, supplied by drainage water from the Attavanaipoothore channel, the whole irrigation is from rain-fed tanks, chiefly in the Aupacoodal series. The tanks receive no supply till N.E. monsoon. Yennamungalam is a large tank. There are several ruined tanks and old anicuts over jungle streams. There has been a project for extending Cauvery irrigation by the Nerinjipett anicut an ancient native structure which used to irrigate land on both sides of the Cauvery, but which breached in the eighteenth century. Places of archæological interest:—Andiyore, Aupacoodal, Bhawauny, Cauverypooram, Jambay, Paulamullay, Shaumpully. Principal trig. stations:—Bodamullay, Oorautchimullay, Paulamullay. The leading places, &c., in the talook are the following.——Andiyore (அந்தியூர் - andiyúr, Tam.). From (andi, tam. the place where three ways meet + úr, tam. village). Trig. station; lat. 11° 28′ 33·80″; long. 77° 43′ 56·90″; height 1,437 feet; from Bhawauny N.N.E. 2¼ miles; from Oorautchicottah village S.W. ¼ mile.——Paulamullay (பாலமலை - pálamalai, Tam.). From (pálai, tam. ironwood tree, mimusops hexandra, roxb. + malai, tam. mountain). Trig. station; lat. 11° 41′ 30·39″; long. 77° 46′ 36·86″; height 4,924 feet; from Bhawauny N.N.E. 17 miles; from Nerinjipett N.N.W. 3 miles.——Shaumpully (சாம்பள்ளி - shámballi, Tam.). From (shámai, tam. millet, panicum miliare, lam. + palli, tam. village). Sanscrit name (sámbapura), meaning shiva + town. Village; pop. 2,698; acres 4,155; lat. 11° 50′; long. 77° 51′; from Bhawauny N.N.E. 28 miles; from Coimbatore N.E. 81 miles. Fort and old Shiva temple. Weekly market.——(3) Town, Talook head-quarters; Coimbatore dist., Bhawauny tal.; pop. 7,341; acres 5,038; lat. 11° 27′; long. 77° 43′; from Coimbatore E.N.E. 58 miles; from Erode N.N.W. 8 miles; from Madras W.S.W. 206 miles; from Ootacamund E. 65 miles; from Pollachy N.E. 71 miles; from Suttimungalam E. 30 miles. Also called Bhawauny coodal, being at junction of the Cauvery and Bhawauny. Chiefly inhabited by Bramins attached to temple. District head-quarters until 1805. Well-sculptured ancient Shiva temple of Sangameshwaran, bathing ghauts occupying extreme point of rock. Pilgrims in November. Ruined fort built by the poligar, who once held it under Madura. Both rivers crossed by fine masonry bridges. The bridge over Cauvery was completed in 1847, and immediately afterwards destroyed by freshes. It was rebuilt with twenty-six spans and again opened for traffic in 1851. Eight roads converge here, viz., the main roads to Salem, Coimbatore, Shunkerrydroog, and Suttimungalam; Hassanore ghaut and Burgoor ghaut roads; and the roads to Erode and Gowndapandy. Good cotton cloths and carpets.——(4) River; Neilgherry, Coimbatore district, Bhawauny, Suttimungalam talooks. Perennial river. Rises in southern spurs of Coondahs about lat. 11° 15′; long. 76° 4′. First skirts S. base of Neilgherry hills, but diverges as it approaches Hoolicull droog, so that it is five miles from the base of the Coonoor ghaut at Mettapolliem, where it is 1,000 feet above sea. It receives Coondah and Coonoor rivers from S. and E. of Neilgherry, as well as from Malabar district. It enters low country in lat. 11° 9′; long. 76° 37′. At the Mailore or Shoondaputty ghaut it receives a considerable tributary and swells into a large stream. After a winding course eastward of 105 miles, during which it traverses Suttimungalam and Bhawauny talooks and receives several affluents, the Moyaur at Danaickencottah and the Noyil being the chief, it joins the Cauvery at Bhawauny town. It yields the channels, Arcancottah and Tadapully for Suttimungalam talook and Calingaroyan for Erode talook. The chief places on or near its banks are Mettapolliem, Danaickencottah, Suttimungalam, Gopichettipolliem, and Bhawauny. Fed principally by S.W. monsoon, and consequently receives its first freshes about the end of May; is at its highest from June to August, and thenceforward, with occasional floods in the north-east monsoon, gradually subsides throughout the hot weather. Fish abound but its waters are not considered wholesome by the natives. Its bed is granitic. The banks are finely wooded in places, and there are many islands in its course. At Mettapolliem it is crossed by a good masonry bridge.

BHOGAM (भोग - bhóga, San.). From (bhuj, san. to enjoy). Enjoyment, use, produce. Teloogoo caste-title; the corresponding terms are:—Tam. devadausy; Can. basavy; the males hold menial appointments about temples or provide music at ceremonies; the females are the dancing girls and professional prostitutes [jauty]. Bhogamma is a female proper name [peyar]. Bhogan was an ancient Tamul sage and author; said to be same as Fohi, who introduced Booddhism into China in latter part of first century of Christian era.——Bhoga jausty (భోగజాస్తి - bhógajásti, Tel.). From (above + jásti, tel. additional). Same as Fusl jausty, but less common. See vol. I, 112. ——Bhoga nashty (भोगनष्टि - bhóganashti, San.). From (above + nashta, san. loss). Remission on double crop land, when there is no water for a second crop. See vol. I, 112.——Bhogaul (భోగాలు - bhógálu, Tel.). Indicating superiority. A paddy of the N. circars. There are several varieties named after Balaraman, Dasharatan, Seeta, &c. [paddy].——Bhogyadar (ಭೋಗ್ಯದಾರ - bhógyadára, Can.). From (above + dhri, san. to hold). A mortgagee.——Bhogyaudy (ಭೋಗ್ಯಾದಿ - bhógyádi, Can.). From (above + ádi, san. beginning). A form of mortgage in Canara. Land and its produce are separately mortgaged in that district. If the land itself is mortgaged for a sum of money, no interest is demanded, and as soon as the bargain is concluded the mortgagee is put in possession of the land. The mortgagor is sometimes permitted to reside upon the estate and allowed one or two moodas of land to cultivate, in the capacity of a tenant, but the mortgagee pays the circar rent and transacts the whole business of the estate as if he were the proper owner. The mortgage bonds always contain a clause that, as soon as the sum borrowed is repaid, the land is immediately to be returned to the mortgagor, the latter agreeing to pay the expenses of all improvements, to be adjusted by the friends of both parties. A certain portion of the produce of estates is frequently mortgaged for the discharge of interest on debts. In this case it is stipulated that, for the interest of the sum borrowed, a certain number of moodas of rice are to be paid annually, but that the person receiving the rice shall have no interference with the estate; and that should the mortgagor fail in his payment, the land itself is to be made over to the mortgagee. The first of these mortgages is termed in Canarese Bhogyaudy or living mortgage, the other Toradavoo or dead mortgage. See vol. I, 112.——Bhogy pandigay (భోగిపండుగ - bhógipanduga, Tel.; போகிப்பண்டிகை - pógippandigai, Tam.). Indran, the god of enjoyment + festival; a feast at the beginning of the harvest. Solar festival [pundigay, 6a]. Immediately precedes Pongal and is generally looked upon as part of that feast. On 11th January the last day of ninth solar month Maurgaly [mausam]. No particular religious ceremonies. A period for relaxation. Presents are interchanged.

From (above + champaka, san. michelia champaca, linn.); from low habit and fragrant flowers. Botanically the Kœmpferia genus, singiberaceæ [vricsham, 144]. Herbs of tropical east indies; flowers appear before leaves from a very short stem and are highly ornamental; roots tuberous. The species best known to the natives are:—galanga [indian galangal], rotunda [false sedoary]. Another is angustifolia.——Bhoo chuckram (भूचक्र - bhúchakra, San.). From (above + chakra, san. circle). The equator, equinoctial line. The ecliptic is craunty mundalam [jyotisham].——Bhoogola shastram (भूगोलशास्त्र - bhúgólashástra, San.). From (above + góla, san. sphere + shástra, san. science). Geography.—"a" Sanscrit Bhoogola shastram begins with celestial geography. There are in the first place the fourteen worlds divided into seven lower stalams or places, and seven upper locams or habitations. Thence eight elephants and eight serpents support the mountain Maha meroo and all the fourteen worlds. The eight elephants are:—Anjanam, Coomoodam, Eiranvautam, Poondareecam, Pooshpadantam, Saurwabhoomam, Soopradeepam, Vaumanam. The eight serpents are:—Anantan, Caurcotacan, Coolican, Dacshan, Mahapudman, Shankhan, Tacshacan, Vausooky. Of the eight serpents some make but one, called Sheshan or Andy sheshan, and said to have thousand heads. The names of the seven stalams are in descending order:—Atalam, Vitalam, Sootalam, Nitalam, Talautalam, Mahautalam, Pautaulam. Of these the last and lowest is hell, and is also called Yamalocam. The seven locams are in ascending order:—Bhoo locam, Bhoovar locam, Swar locam or Deva locam, Maha locam, Jana locam, Tapo locam, Satya locam. The first of these is the earth. The second is the space between the earth and the sun and the residence of the Siddhars and Moonies. The third or the space between the sun and the polar star is the residence of the 330,000,000 minor gods. The fourth is Vishnoo's residence. The fifth is the residence of rishies. The sixth that of Beiraugies or ascetics. The seventh, the Satya locam or true world, originally said to be Bramha's residence, whence called Bramha locam. In the more modern theologies however Sheivas hope to attain to Keilausam, Eeshwaran's paradise, and Veishnavas to attain to Veicoontam, Vishnoo's paradise. These fourteen worlds are each 50,000,000,000,000,000 leagues long and 25,000,000,000,000,000 leagues broad. Mount Maha meroo, which passes through all the fourteen worlds, is 1,600,000,000,000 leagues high and as many broad.—"b" The shastram next treats of mundane geography. On the mundane earth there are seven great islands or continents, otherwise dweepams, which are most of them named from the trees growing in them, as follows:—Coosham, Crowncham, Jamboo on which India is situated, Placsham, Pooshcaram, Shaucam, and Shaulmaly. The seven oceans on the earth with samoodram affixed are as follows:—Lavanam, salt; Ney, ghee; Nullatunneer, fresh water; Paul, milk; Sharcaray, sugar juice; Tain, honey; Tyre, curdled milk. The following is the disposition of the dweepams and samoodrams. The golden mountain, Maha meroo, is surrounded immediately by Jamboo dweepam, extending a hundred thousand leagues, around which flows the salt sea. Beyond this are Shauca dweepam and the sea of milk. Coosha dweepam is next, and the sea of Tyre or curdled milk. Next Crowncha dweepam and the sea of ghee. Next Shaulmaly dweepam and sea of sugar-cane juice. Next Placsha dweepam with the sea of honey. Next Pooshcara dweepam with the fresh water sea. Outside in a circular form around these is Chuckravaulagherry or wheel mountain, and to the east of that is Oodayagherry or sun-rising mountain. As to Jamboo dweepam, Oodayagherry, Astagiry, Himalaya, and Dacshinaurnavam or Saitoo are its boundaries. The former two mountains represent the Eastern and Western ghauts running along the coasts. Dacshinaurnavam is the southern ocean; Saitoo is Rama's bridge. All that is known about Pooranic geography is shown at vol. I (1)—(5).—"c" More recently the geographical works indicate by fifty-six countries the whole known modern world. The countries according to the Chatoor acarauthy of Beschi, are Andhram, Angam, Aroonam, Avanty, Calingam, Cannada, Cannaudam, Caroosham, Cashmere, Caumbojam, Causham, Cheenam, Cholam, Collam, Concanam, Coodagam, Coolindam, Coontalam, Cooroo, Cooroogoo, Cosalam, Dravidam, Gaundhauram, Goorjaram, Ilautam, Kekayam, Keralam, Kirautam, Magadham, Malayalam, Maraudam, Matsyam, Maulavam, Nepaulam, Nishadham, Parparam, Paunchaulam, Paundyam, Podam, Poolindam, Pullavam, Shacam, Shaulavam, Shonacam, Shoorasenam, Sindhoo, Singhalam, Sowveeram, Tenganam, Tooloovam, Vangam, Vangaulam, Vidarbham, Wottiyam, Yavanam, Yoogandham. Of the countries here mentioned, Cashmere, Caumbojam, Nepaulam, Cannaudam are plain; Calingam was an ancient kingdom near the godavery; Dravidam is the southern tamul country; Maulavam is probably malwah; Maraudam the southern marava district; Paundyam is the madura kingdom; Keralam, the travancore and malayalam country; Vangam is supposed to be the province of e. bengal; Yavanam, arabia.—"d" Works on Bhoogola shastram in Tamul are rare. The Dravidians are essentially non-migratory. The pooraunams contain, in special sub-divisions, called Bhoovanacosham and Deshamaulay, geographical treatises, of which the first two chapters of the second book of the Vishnoo pooraunam deserve special notice. Gola deepam or globe lamp, a modern book, translated from the Sanscrit, treats of the geography of the pooraunams [charitram].——Bhoojpattar (भूर्ज - bhúrja, San.; بھوج پتر - bhújpattar, Hind. and Dec.; భుజపత్రి - bhujapatri, Tel.). Landed property.——Bhootam (भूत - bhúta, San.).—"a" Material element in philosophy. There are five, viz., earth, water, fire, air, and ether. Earth has smell or gandham; water, taste or rasam; air, touch or sparsham; fire, color or roopam; and pure ether, sound or shabdam. Besides these the elements have other qualities. Earth, which is the heaviest element, has the qualities of smell, sound, tangibility, visibility and taste; it enters largely into the formation of the body and of all solid and heavy substances. Water possesses sound, tangibility, visibility and taste; bestows the sense of coolness, fluidity, weight, and smoothness on bodies; and has the quality of happiness or satwagoonam, and of inertness or tamogoonam; and is transparent, producing light and weight; it forms the different fluids of the body. Air has sonorousness, tangibility and lightness; and from having the quality of action or rajogoonam in excess, has the moving powers and qualities of bodies. Fire possesses sound, tangibility and visibility, and gives taste; it produces the passions, bodily strength and valour. Ether or aucausham is separated from the others, and possesses the property of sound and form; it predominates in the organ of hearing, and fills up the porosities of living bodies as those of the bones, &c.; and possesses the quality of goodness or satwagoonam; this element is undistinguishable by the senses, and is only made known through the evidence of the understanding.—"b" Matter in the classification of natural history. As follows:—for category, see Padaurtam; for elementary substance, see Dravyam; for matter, see the present heading; for organic and inorganic, see Indriyam and Anindriyam; for organic kingdom, see Ganam [jantoo, vricsham]; for organic class, see Vargam; for organic order, see Santaunam; for organic family, see Coolam; for organic genus, see Jauty; for organic species, see Bhaidam. Oopa prefixed to either of the above means a sub-head. For inorganic minerals, see Dhautoo.—"c" A goblin. These are represented in the arts with small, thick bodies, of a red color, with pig tails round their heads, horrible faces, lion's teeth in their mouths, and various ornaments over their bodies. They were created for the purpose of being the servants of the gods and are content in doing the lowest services, which is not the case with the peygal. In this sense word is a constant prefix to plant names, generally when large.—"d" Also any living being.—"e" Bhoota chatoordashy, meaning spirits of the dead + fourteenth day is the same as deepauvaly. Bhoota nautan, meaning lord of demons is Shiva. Bhootaula pandya, meaning spirit-ruling pandyan, was a ruler in Canara who introduced the aliya santauna law.——Bhoovangherry (புவனக்கிரி - puvanakkiri, Tam. bhuvanigiri*). On Coromandel coast, on the Chittivalsa river. Though an open roadstead, the port is somewhat protected by the Oopada and Sugar-loaf headlands, and good anchorage in 6½ fathoms can be obtained half a mile off shore. The best anchorage in the roads is with the pagoda on Bimlipatam hill from W. to S. to W.S.W.; Sugar-loaf hill from S.W. to S.W. by S.; flagstaff, W. to W. by S. The river does not admit anything but masulah boats and these only during a portion of the year. During the remaining period the bar is silted up and boats load and unload on the beach. The coast between Bimlipatam and Vizagapatam is very bold, having 15 or 16 fathoms within 2 miles off shore. The Dutch east india company built a fort and factory here in the middle of the seventeenth century, about same time as the English company formed a settlement at Vizagapatam. In the war between England and the Batavian republic at close of eighteenth century, the Dutch lost all their possessions in India. The peace of Amiens, dated March 27, 1802, provided for their restoration, but this was precluded by the early renewal of the war. Actual restoration was made in 1819 to the king of Holland, agreeably to the convention of the allied powers in 1814. The Dutch then held their territory at Bimlipatam till the 1st of June 1825, when it was made over by a Dutch commissioner to the Collector, under the operation of the Treaty of March 1824 between His Britannic Majesty and the king of Holland. On the hill near the town is an old Vishnoo temple. In the town is a Shiva temple built by the Cholan. An inscription on the Garooda stambham of the Vishnoo temple records repairs. Tombstones of A.D. 1623 in the old burial-ground. Bimlipatam was for long celebrated for its cotton piece-goods. It is now the port of all the northern part of the district and has a good trade in seeds, hides, and indigo. Till 1846 Bimlipatam was a mere fishing village. About that time, Messrs. Arbuthnot and Company, having obtained the lease of the Palcondah estate, built a factory at Chittivalsa, for the manufacture of jaggery since converted into a gunny factory employing seven hundred hands and the exportation of oil-seeds. This trade is now shared by some half-dozen French and English houses and native firms. Imports are cotton-twist, piece-goods, machinery and liquor. Exports are sugar, indigo and oil-seeds. Principal buildings are the church, school-house, and clock tower. The Madras bank has a branch. Bimlipatam beacon trig. station is in lat. 17° 53′ 25·45″; long. 83° 29′ 12·36″; from Bimlipatam W.N.W. ¼ mile.——(5) River; Vizagapatam district, Bimlipatam and Srungavarapoocote divisions. Also called Gostany or Chittivalsa river.

Pers. from (áftáb, pers. sun + parast, pers. worshipper). Tam. from (óthu, tam. to pray); from motion of head up and down as if in act of prayer. The terms are nearly co-extensive with the family Agamidæ, sauria [godhicay], reptilia [sarpy, 10], of naturalists [jantoo] and to be distinguished from Chameleon [patchonty]. The bloodsuckers have a head covered with numerous, very small, flattish or convex shields; tongue thick, attached to the gullet along its whole base, not, or but slightly, notched in front; scales of the back, sides and belly imbricate, generally rhombic; tail long, tapering, not fragile; eye and eyelids well developed; pupil round; nostrils in a separate plate; teeth implanted on the edge of the bones of the jaws; generally a pair of canine teeth in front of each jaw; limbs well developed. They are land lizards, some living on trees or bushes, others inhabiting rocks or plains. They do not attain any considerable size. Mostly insectivorous, but many feed on vegetables. All are oviparous. The following are representative species in S. india:—"a" Bronchocela jubata; Alias Bronchocela gutturosa. Is called by natives green bloodsucker; insectivorous; more or less developed crest commences on the neck; tail exceedingly long; has some yellow spots on the neck.—"b" Calotes nemoricola. The whole genus Calotes is closely allied to Bronchocela; true tree lizards, some having tail rather compressed at the base, feed on insects, tender leaves and berries.—"c" Calotes ophiomachus. Alias Agama ophiomachus; Calotes viridis; Lacerta calotes. Is called by the natives the red bloodsucker. Dark green, with four or six narrow, vertical white bands on the body; are edged with brown in young specimens; head lighter-colored or red; tail with some white bands anteriorly, brown posteriorly, with darker rings; generally some white streaks or spots on the limbs; when alarmed at the sight of an enemy its head and part of its neck and the crest become of a blood-red color.—"d" Calotes rouxii. Is brownish, uniform or spotted with black.—"e" Calotes versicolor. Alias Agama tiedemanni, versicolor, vultuosa; Calotes rouxii, viridis. Is the bloodsucker proper. Coloration variable, sometimes uniform brownish or greyish-olive or yellowish; generally broad brown bands across the back, interrupted by a yellowish lateral band; black streaks radiate from eye and some are continued over the throat, running obliquely backwards; belly frequently with greyish longitudinal stripes, along the median line being most distinct; young and half-grown specimens have dark, black-edged band across inter-orbital region; ground-color generally light brownish olive. This lizard can change to bright red, to black, and to a mixture of both. Change is sometimes confined to the head, at other times diffused over the whole body and tail. Common state is, with the tail and limbs black, head and neck yellow picked out with red, and the rest of the body red. These bright changeable colors are peculiar to the male during the breeding season, in the months of May and June. One of the most common lizards; found in hedges and trees.—"f" Charasia dorsalis. Alias Agama dorsalis. Is brownish yellow or dusk gray on the back; black band commences behind the eye and another behind the angle of the mouth; former continued on and spreads over the sides of the body; legs dotted with black; male sometimes of a brighter color, red or yellow on the back, black on the sides and on the belly. Rock lizard only found at some elevation above the sea.—"g" Dracones or dragons are tree lizards, jumping from branch to branch; they are supported in the air by their expanded parachutes, which are laid backwards at the sides of the animal while it is sitting or merely running; if the hind extremities of a dragon were cut off, it would lie helpless on the ground, but it would still move with great velocity if it were merely deprived of its wings. Most of the species have a short, low crest along the middle of the neck, more developed in the adult male than in the female and young; trunk rather slender, covered above and below with scales; tail long, slender, tapering to a point, not fragile; variegated colors. Draco dussumerii has the ground color of wings light; blackish violet reticulated lines occupy middle and outer half of wings, enclosing round light spots; only found in Malabar, Cochin, and Travancore.—"h" The genus Salea has the head tetrahedral, covered with small irregular shields; trunk slightly compressed, covered with scales; throat without pouch or fold; tail long, tapering, slightly compressed at the base, uniformly covered with scales; limbs well developed. Salea horsefieldii. Alias Mecolepis hirsutus, sulcatus, trispinosus; Salea jerdonii. Is generally a bright grass-green, marbled with brown, with red marks on the head and nape and with a few white scales on the sides; colors become darker at a low temperature; frequents bushes and hedges.—"i" The genus Sitana has only four toes behind. Head tetrahedral; snout of moderate length; body slightly compressed; tail longish, rounded, tapering; head covered with small, keeled scales; male provided with a very large, subtriangular appendage, which extends on to the belly; can be folded up like a fan, and in this state it is scarcely visible. Sitana minor is brownish, with series of rhomboidal dark spots along back, spot on the neck being the darkest; whitish line along each side of the back; gular appendage tri-colored, blue, black, and red; common in fields and low copses, avoiding wooded districts; the common prey of many raptatorial birds. Sitana ponticeriana is brown, with series of dark spots along the middle of back, spot on the neck being the darkest; whitish band along each side of the back; gular appendage tri-colored, blue, black and red.

BOODDHA (बुद्ध - buddha, San.). From (budh, san. to know). Greek Βούττα. Any sage.—"a" The teacher generally known as Booddha was the son of a ruler, Shooddhodanan, in Capilavast, capital of a country at foot of mountains of Nepaul. Personal name unknown. His mother's name was Mauyay, daughter of Soopraboodhan. His wife was Yashodharay and he had a son Rahoolan and a cousin Anandan. His family name was Shakyan, and his clan name Gowtaman. Common titles given to him are:—Shakya moony, the sage of the shakya tribe; Shakya prabhoo, the shakya lord; Shakya simhan, the shakya lion; Prabhoo gowtaman, the distinguished one of the gowtama family; Bhagavat, the worshipfui one; Siddhaurtan, the one who has obtained perfection; and Tataugatam, the one who has passed away. Very little is really known of his life. His death occurred according to some in 543, and according to others in 477 B.C. The Bramins at first raised Booddha to the dignity of the ninth avatar of Vishnoo, but when Booddhism had acquired strength, and persecuted the old Veishnava creed, they abandoned this position and substituted Balabhadran, nominal elder brother of Krishnan. There have been Booddhists in India who rejected this and worshipped an earlier Booddha, and Booddhists generally hold that one Booddha more, called Meitreyan, is yet to appear.—"b" The historic relations of Booddhism with S. india should be read in the foot-note on the history of the Hindoo religion, at vol. I (74). It no longer exists here as a separate creed. The following is however a summary of the doctrines, being as they are the foundation of the still remaining Jeinism. Strictly a Booddhist should never pray; he should merely contemplate. The only god is what man himself can become. Carmam or act is to be got rid of as soon as possible, for action leads to continual existence, carried on through innumerable bodies till acts are adequately rewarded or punished; and that all existence is an evil is a fundamental dogma of Booddhism. Hence the great end of the system is Nirvaunam, the being blown out or extinction; this is similar to the nivritty or mocsham of the Bramins, and analogous to the ἀπολύτρωσις and ἐξανάστασις of the Bible. Booddhists regard men as divided into two classes:—first, those who are still attached to the world and worldly life; secondly, those who by self-mortification are bent on being delivered from it. The first class are Oopausacans or laymen, the second are Shramanans or ascetics. Ten moral prohibitions are given:—Five are for all; viz., kill not, steal not, commit not adultery, lie not, drink no strong drink. The other five are for the ascetics who have commenced the direct pursuit of nirvaunam; viz., eat no food out of season, abstain from dances, theatres, songs, and music, use no ornaments or perfumes, abstain from luxurious beds, receive no gold nor silver. Besides these prohibitions and injunctions there are six transcendent perfections of conduct called Pauramitays which lead to the other shore of Nirvaunam and which are incumbent on all, viz., Daunam or charity or benevolence; Sheelam or virtue or moral goodness; Cshaunty or patience and forbearance; Veeryam or fortitude; Dhyaunam or meditation; Pranyay or knowledge. Of these, that which especially characterizes Booddhism is the perfection of benevolence and sympathy displayed towards all living beings. Four others are sometimes added, viz., Oopauyam or expediency; Balam or power; Pranidhy or circumspection; Nyaunam or knowledge of universal truth. The Bowddhans agree with the orthodox Hindoos in following three points:—in acknowledging braminical doctrine as foundation of their own, in admitting a trimoorty, in acknowledging transmigration [samsauram]. They differ in the following three points:—in not acknowledging the vedas as revealed, in not recognizing the division of caste, in considering the inferior gods as holy men.—"c" Four great Booddhist councils were held, which are often quoted in history, viz., by Ajauta shatroo, king of Magadham after Shakya moony's death; by Caula ashocan, a century later; by Asoca, 246 or 247 B.C.; by Canishcan, king of Cashmere, 143 B.C. At the first council all the teachings and sayings of Shakya moony, who appears never to have written anything, were collected into three sets of books, called Tripitacam, or the three baskets or collections, which form the Booddhist sacred scriptures. These three collections are:—Sootra pitacam, collected by anandan, shakya moony's disciple, containing all the maxims and discourses of shakya moony and by no means brief like the braminical sootrams; Vinaya pitacam containing books on morals and discipline; Abhidharma pitacam, on metaphysics.—"d" The Booddhists are described in the following fragment of Cleitarchus:—"According "to the relation of cleitarchns, they place in opposition to the "bramins the pramanæ, a contentious and argumentative set of "men who deride the bramins as arrogant and ridiculous on "account of their studies in physiology and astronomy. They are "divided into the mountaineer, the naked, the citizen, and rural "sects."—"e" By the term Booddhist the Jeinas are generally intended among Tamuls. In one instance, in the standard history of Malabar, the name is applied to Mahomedans, showing that it was a strange one.—"f" See the whole of vol. I (70) to (94), and the following foot-notes:—history of religion and philosophy I (70), jeinas I (95) [matam].——Booddha's foot (බුත්සරණ - butsarana, Singh.). Same as Indian shot.——Booddhivantan ([illegible] - buddhivanta, Can.). Wise man; an elder in a village community.——Booddhy (बुद्धि - buddhi, San.). From (budh, san. to know). Greek σοφία. Wisdom; in Saunkhyam cosmogony, the first born from the Divine essence.——Bowddham (बौद्ध - bauddha, San.). Relating to Booddha.

BOODHAN (बुध - budha, San.; புதன் - puthan, Tam.). From (budh, san. to know). Ποσειδῶν of Greeks, Neptune of Romans, Osiris of Egyptians. Wise. Name of the planet Mercury or its regent [graham]; ☿; sidereal period of revolution 87ᵈ 23ʰ 16ᵐ; inclination of orbit [caesham] to ecliptic [craunty mundalam] about 7°. Tamulians deem it fortunate to be born when he is rising. In one of the zodiacs, he is seated on a carpet, holding in his hands a sceptre and a lotus; in another he is shown riding on an eagle; and elsewhere he is described as sitting in a car drawn by lions. The poorаunams give a brief legend that Chundran or the moon was placed in the house of Brihaspaty or Jupiter as his pupil, and that Taurah or the lunar path of twenty-seven asterisms, fell in love with Chundran, and seduced him while Brihaspaty was away at a sacrifice made by Indran or the firmament; and the result was the birth of Boodhan. Boodha vauram is Wednesday [vauram]. Must not be confounded with Booddha, the incarnation of Vishnoo [matam].

BOOGGA (بگا - buggá, Hind.; బుగ్గ - bugga, Tel.). From (bugabuga, tel. the sound of water as it comes out of the earth). Wheat bran is given in veterinary practice instead of gram, a day or two preparatory to physic.——Boosa priyam (बुसप्रिय - busapriya, San.). From (above + priya, san. lover). Chaffinch. Fringillidæ family, conirostres, insessores, aves [pacshy, 27], of naturalists [jantoo]. Finches. Divided into sub-families:—"a" Ploceinæ, weaver-birds [weaver bird].—"b" Estreldinæ; two forms in India, one the munias, with a thick tumid bill; the other the amadavads with a more slender, conic, and waxy red bill [avadavat].—"c" Passerinæ, sparrows [chiriyah].—"d" Emberizinæ, buntings.—"e" Fringillinæ; divided into grosbeaks, bull-finches, cross-bills, rose finches, true finches; only the rose finches are represented in S. india.—"f" Alaudinæ, larks; sub-divided into bush-larks, the true larks, and long-billed or desert larks; the latter are not represented in S. india [aghiyah].

BOOT (بت - but, Hind.). From (bhúta, san. spirit). Idol.—Bootkhana (بتخانه - butkhánah, Hind.). From (above + khánah, pers. house). A temple. By some supposed to be the origin of pagoda [q.v.].

BOOTCHY (బుచ్చి - buççi, Tel.). Small.——Bootchammah ([illegible] - buççamma, Tel.). From (above + amma, tel. mother). Hindoo female proper name [peyar].——Bootchireddipollem ([illegible] - buççireddipálemu, Tel.). From (buççireddi, tel. proper name meaning small reddi + pálemu, tel. fortified village). Colloquially bootchy and polliem. Sanscrit name (rámakshétra), meaning rama, the god + sacred place; from tradition that rama visited place during exile. Village; Nellore district, Nellore tal.; pop. 4,317; acres 7,449; lat. 14° 33′; long. 79° 56′; from Nellore N.W. 9 miles; from the sea W. 20 miles. Near the Canigherry tank, the chief reservoir under the project of the Sungam anicut. Large Vishnoo temple built by Ramy reddy, resorted to in April for nine days. Fine cloths manufactured. Good gneiss building stone. Seat of Veishnava high priest called Addanky tautacharry. The Bootchireddipollem reddies are a well known family.

BORAH (بورا - borá, Hind.). Canvas sack for grain [gunny].

BORAX (بورق - búrak, Hind.). From (baraka, ar. to glisten) [bark]. Title is short for (búrakusságha), meaning polisher + gold or silversmith. Because it polishes silver [vengauram].

BORER (سرفه - surfah, Ar.; ತೊಳೆತುಂಬೆ - toletumbe, Can.; తొలుచుతుమ్మెద - tolutsutummeda, Tel.; [illegible] - tulavantu, Mal.; துளைவண்டு - tulaivandu, Tam.). Title from boring into coffee trees to deposit eggs. Ar. from (sarafa, ar. to eat wood). Can. from (tole, can. hole + tumbe, can. carpenter bee). Tel. from (tolutsu, tel. to bore + tummeda, tel. beetle). Tam. from (tulai, tam. to bore + vandu, tam. beetle). Anglo-indian name. Xylotrechus quadrupes, cerambycidæ, coleoptera, holometabola, insecta [poochy], of naturalists [jantoo]. The larva is called the borer, the white borer, or the worm. The insect is called the coffee-fly or borer beetle. In the latter stage the insect appears as a fly or winged beetle from six to nine lines in length, with a hard slimy coat, in color red and black, or yellow and black, in alternate transverse lines. It bores a passage into the stem of the coffee tree, generally a few inches above the ground. This passage, at first horizontal, afterwards takes an upward or spiral direction, and after a little a retreat is formed in which to deposit its larva. The tree soon begins to droop, and in a short time dies down to the point where the entry was effected.

BORIYAH (कट - kata, San.; بوریا - boriyá, Hind.; ಚಾಪೆ - chápe, Can.; చాప - tsápa, Tel.; പായ - páya, Mal.; பாய் - páy, Tam.). Mat. The following are two key-lists in the briefest possible terms of the articles used here for making mats; further information must be traced in the glossary paragraphs through the small-type cross-references at end of this volume; see also vricsham, 7, for the method of expressing the products, &c., of plants in the dravidian languages.—"a" Andropogon muricatus, cuscus, root; Borassus flabelliformis, palmyra, leaf in strips; Cocos nucifera, cocoanut, split leaf or cadjan; Corypha umbraculifera, talipot, leaf; Cyperus corymbosus, indian matting sedge, culms; Dendrocalamus tulda, bengal bamboo, bamboo chip; Hibiscus tiliaceus, corkwood bendy, fibre of bark; Maranta dichotoma, seetalpaty, split stem; Moringa pterygosperma, indian horse radish, fibre of bark; Pandanus odoratissimus, screw-pine, leaf; Phœnix farinifera, small date, leaf; Phœnix sylvestris, wild date, leaf; Phragmites roxburghii, large naunal, split stalk; Saccharum munja, moonj grass, leaf; Saccharum sara, moonshee grass, leaf; Saccharum spontaneum, naunal, culm; Typha angustifolia, small bulrush, leaf; Typha elephantina, bulrush, leaf.—"b" Bamboo, dendrocalamus; Bendy, hibiscus; Bulrush, typha; Cocoanut, cocos; Cuscus, andropogon; Date, phœnix; Horse radish, moringa; Moonj grass, saccharum; Moonshee grass, saccharum; Naunál, phragmites, saccharum; Palmyra, borassus; Screw-pine, pandanus; Sedge; cyperus; Seetalpaty, maranta; Talipot, corypha.

BORNEO (بورنیو - borneo, Hind.). The largest of the Oceanic islands. Cf.:—Dipterocarpus turbinatus, borneo tallow; Dryobalanops aromatica, borneo camphor; Metroxylon sagu, borneo sago.

BORREL (വിരൽ - viral, Mal.). Old term for Malabar inch.

BO TREE (බෝ - bó, Singh.). Knowledge tree. Plant name common to Ficus bengalensis, Ficus religiosa [bodhy].

BOTTELL (बतेला - batélá, Mahr.; ബൊത്തെല്ല - bottella, Mal.). From Portuguese batella. A boat used on the west coast. Single-masted, 30 to 85 tons.

BOY (بھوئی - bhoí, Hind.; బోయ - bóya, Tel.). Word is Dravidian; but cf. Bhaee.—"a" Caste-title; personal forms, Boy, sing., Boyies, pl. Called Beydar in Canarese. The same caste is found in Central india and Berar. The Madras boyies belong to Nellore and the Northern circars. Primarily fishermen; but employed in carrying letters and palankeens, and also as domestic servants; hence familiar call. The old native armies largely recruited from this caste, and some rose to power. The Poligars of Hurpanhully and Royadroog were boyies. Have several divisions, the chief of which are the Moolky boyies meaning arrow boyies, and the Paul boyies meaning milk boyies, who cannot intermarry. Their most peculiar custom relates to marriages, in which the bride besides having a golden talee tied to her neck has an iron ring fastened to her wrist with a black string and the bridegroom has the same. Widows may not remarry or wear black bangles, but they may wear silver bangles. The boyies bury their dead and use Maudigas as their messengers on such occasions. They mostly profess to be of the Veishnava sect. See vol. I (109); II, 231. Bestas are nearly the same [jauty].—"b" Also head of a Gond village.

BRAB (براب - bráb, Hind.). From Portuguese brava, wild. The palmyra [q.v.].

BRAHOOI (ब्रहुयि - brahúyi, San.). A tribe of mountaineers in khanship of Khelaut in Beloochistaun. Language has a Dravidian appearance, which may argue remote affinity [bhaushay].

BRAMH (ब्रह्म - bramha, San.; பிரமம் - piramam, Tam.). From (brih, san. to increase). Neuter gender. The supreme soul of the universe, self-existent, absolute, and eternal, from which all things emanate and to which all return. It receives no worship, but is the object of that abstract meditation which sages practise in order to obtain absorption into it. It is exactly the τὸ πλήρωμα, τὸ ἕν of the Greek philosophy. Cf. anima mundi. The following is a passage from a tamul shastram:—காலத்திரயத் திலும் ஆகாயம்போலும் ஒருபடித்தா யெங்கும் நிறைந்திருக்கின்ற நித்தியசுத்தாதி இலட்சணங்களுடனே கூடினவர் பிரமத்தின்பெயர்.—அந்தரியாமிமுதலான மூவகை அதிஷ்டானன்; ஒன்றான பிரமம், பரத்துவம், பரமான்மா, விசுத்தசித்து, தத்பதலட்சியார்த்தம், சருவாதிஷ்டானத்துரு. பிரமத்தின் சப்தாவஸ்தையின் இலக்கணம்; சைதன்னியம், சுயம்பிரகாசமா யிருக்கின்றபோது பிரமம்; மாயையுடனே கூடில் ஈச்வரன்; அவித்தையிற் கூடில் சீவன்; அந்தக்கரணத்துடன் கூடில் பிரமாதா; இந்திரியங்களுடன் கூடில் பிரமாணம்; பரோட்சவிஷயத்துடன் கூடில் பிரமேயம்; பிரத்தியட்சவிஷயத்துடன் கூடில் பலம்—"He is "called bramh who combines the properties of the first cause, of "eternity and purity uniformly filling and pervading everywhere "like aucausham in all the three times past, present and future; "he is three vehicles of spirit called antaryaumy and he is "the one bramh, the supreme one, the paramautman, the pure "intelligence, the designated of the syllable tat and the sole vehi-"cle of whatever form, through which the state of bramh can be "realized. The characteristics of bramh in its revealed state:—"Cheitanyam is bramh when self-enlightened; Eeshwaran when "united to mauyay or illusion; Jeevan when joined to avidyay or "ignorance; Pramautah or the judge when connected with antah-"caranam or internal sense; Pramaunam or the measure or "standard when related to indriyam or sense; Prameyam or the "thing to be measured when united to an invisible object; Palam "or fruit when united to a visible object." The doctrine of Bramh is held only as a philosophical speculation, and has no influence on the exoteric religion of the country. There is a Tamul proverb:—பார்ப்பதற்கு அரிய பரப் பிரமம்—"It is impossible "to comprehend the supreme Bramh." The Veda is sometimes called Shabda bramh, spirit to be attained through the word, as opposed to Parabramh [q.v.] spirit to be attained through reflection. See vol. I (70) to (94), and the following footnotes:—history of religion and philosophy I (70), conspectus of pantheon I (77), existing hindoo sects I (88).—Brámha (ब्रह्मा - bramhá, San.; பிரமன் - piraman, Tam.). From (brih, san. to increase). Masculine gender. The son or creature of Bramh; sometimes styled Curta bramha, the creator Bramha. Ζεύς of Greeks, Saturn or Jupiter of Romans, Osiris of Egyptians.—"a" The first member of the Trimoorty. The supreme spirit manifested as the active creator of the universe. Probably the oldest of the Aryan non-elemental gods, and closely connected with the rise of the Bramins. The acceptance of three gods simultaneously in one, in the Trimoorty, is a late conception and not improbably developed in S. india. By a modern legend the four classes, Bramin, Cshatriya, Veisya, Shoodra, are symbolically stated to have proceeded from different parts of Bramha's body; the Bramin class from his head, and thence claiming pre-eminence.—"b" For Bramha as giving periods to the Braminical chronology, see Calpam and Caulam. In the pooraunams of the Veishnava class, it is stated that after the last great pralayam or destruction by a flood, the supreme being as Narayanan floated on the abyss of waters on a leaf of the banyan tree, which leaf has a symbolical meaning. From his navel the stalk of a lotus arose, in the flower of which Bramha was born as the creator. The Sheiva pooraunams ignore the above view. They state Vishwacarman to be the former of all things. Bramha is treated with contempt and obloquy. Thus Shiva cut off one of the heads of Bramha for his pride. Bramha suborned a ketaky flower to tell a lie with reference to the immensity of Shiva; and was sentenced by Shiva to be without temples and worshippers. Soobramanyan asked Bramha the meaning of the mystic syllable, om; and as Bramha could not tell it, Soobramanyan put Bramha in prison, and himself assumed the work of creation. These two last legends from the Scandapooraunam are repeated in many of the local legends of Sheiva temples in the Peninsula; in that of the Yecaumbareshwaran fane at Conjeeveram with great prominence.—"c" As creator Bramha's shacty is mauyay or matter; as the author of the vedams his shacty is Saraswaty. He is represented in the arts in S. india as having four heads and four faces. On each one he wears a crown; in his locks he has a string of pearls; on his forehead he has a spot of custoory. Two of his hands are empty, and the other two he raises, holding in the left a waterpot and in the right a rosary of Roodraucsham. The color of his body is tawny. He stands on a flower, and near him is his vehicle, the Annam or swan. There are no pagodas sacred to him; nor does his image stand in any other pagoda. Bramins occasionally chant a hymn in his honor, and mention his name at their offerings. No feast or fast is observed in his honor, but the term Bramhotsavam [q.v.] possibly retains traces of such in very ancient days.—"d" There are numerous stories related of Bramha in the Pooraunams, all more or less lewd. The following are some of his names:—Ajan or the unborn; Anantan or the endless; Anna voorty or the swan-rider; Bodhan or teacher; Gooravan or the old one; Hiranya garbhan or the gold-wombed; Malarone or the lotus-one; Marayavan or having vedam; Mauloondivandone or he who sprung from maul's or vishnoo's navel [pralayam]; Mediny padeittone or creator of the earth; Naul mookhan or the four-faced; Nyauny or the wise; Pitaumahan or grandfather; Swayambhh or the self-existent; Varan or giver; Vauny kelvan or saraswaty's husband; Vaunore moothalvan or the first of the celestials; Vedan or author of hindoo vedas; Vidhy or fate, &c. Of the books specially written regarding him may be mentioned Bramhaustrapatalam so called from the miracle-working arrow which he grants to ascetics, and Bramhottara khandam or the last chapter of the Bramhapooraunam.—"e" The pre-ordinations of Bramha, regulated by the actions of former births, are written on men's skulls. Hence the two following proverbs:—எண்ணெய்போக முழுகினாலும் எழுத்துப்போகத் தேய்ப்பார் உண்டா—

"Although one bathe till the oil is washed out, can the writing "of Bramha be rubbed off?"—தலையெழுத்தைத் தலையைச் சிரைத்தாற் போகுமா?—"Can you efface the writing on the "skull, by shaving the head?" See vol. I (70) to (94), and the following foot-notes:—history of religion and philosophy I (70), conspectus of pantheon I (77).——Bramhacharry (ब्रह्मचारी - brahmachárí, San.). From (above + áchárí, san. observer), one who practises study and devotion. A young Bramin in a state of pupilage and not married.——Bramhadand (ब्रह्मदण्ड - brahmadanda, San.; फिरंगीधोतरा - p'hirangídhótará, Mahr.; شیال کانٹا - shiyalkánta, Hind.; بہرم دنڈی - bharamdandí, Dec.; ಅರಸಿನವುಮ್ಮೆತ್ತ - arasinavummetta, Can.; బ్రహ్మదండి - brahmadandi, Tel.; କଣ୍ଟାକୁଶଂ - kantákusham, Oor.; ബ്രഹ്മദന്തി - brahmadanti, Mal.; பிரமதண்டு - piramathandu, Tam.). San. from (brahma, san. bramin + danda, san. staff); from white color of stem. Mahr. from (p'hirangí, mahr. frank + dhótará, mahr. datura fastuosa, linn.). Hind. means jackal thorn. Can. from (arasína, can. saffron, crocus sativus, linn. + ummetta, can. thorn apple, datura fastuosa, linn.). San. also (shrigálakantaka), meaning jackal thorn; (brahmí), meaning pertaining to a bramin; (brahmarákshasa), meaning bramin + demon. Hind. also (farangídhatúrá), meaning english or foreign datura; (píládhatúrá), meaning yellow datura. Can. also (balurakkisa), meaning great demon. Mal. also (ponnummattam), meaning gold + datura fastuosa, linn. Tam. also (kudiyóttippúndu), meaning family + expel + plant; (kurukku), meaning white plant. Title otherwise Bramin devil plant, Bramin's staff, Cardo santo, Coorook, Devil's fig, Fico del' inferno, Foreign datura, Gamboge thistle, Horned poppy, Infernal fig, Jackal thorn, Jamaica yellow thistle, Mexican poppy, Prickly argemone, Prickly poppy, Thistle oil plant, Yellow datura, Yellow thistle. Botanically Argemone mexicana, linn., papaveraceæ [vricsham, 8]. Alias Argemone mucronata, spinosa. Annual, herbaceous; variegated thistle-like leaves alternate, sessile, repand-sinuate, sharply toothed; sepals two to three; calyx prickly, glabrous; petals four to six; stem bristly; flowers solitary on erect peduncles; capsules prickly; seeds roundish, corrugated; flowers bright yellow. An introduction of not very remote date from south america and one of the most common weeds throughout south india; it springs up everywhere when the soil is left uncultivated. The seeds are small, round, hard, striated, dark brown and about the size of a small mustard-seed; they are full of oil, and if crushed on paper break with a noise and leave on it an oily stain; their kernel is white, minute and albuminous; the fixed oil yielded by these seeds on expression is quite tasteless with little or no smell, and its color is pale amber, or yellowish or reddish brown; the oil gives an orange red color with nitric acid; the root is small, fusiform, brown externally, pale-white internally and odourless with a slight bitterish taste; the stalks and leaves abound with a bitter yellow juice-like gamboge, which on drying forms a substance resembling opium. Medicinally; seeds are laxative, emetic, nauseant, expectorant and demulcent; oil a drastic purgative, nauseant and expectorant; root, an alterative tonic; seeds and oil have good effect in asthma; oil used externally in cutaneous diseases and muscular pains. Preparations:—as seeds abound in oil they cannot be reduced to fine powder, and the best way of using them is in emulsion, by bruising and rubbing with water and straining through cloth, resulting draught is whitish, quite tasteless, and is rendered palatable by adding sugar or honey; the oil may be taken floating in water, in emulsion with mucilage or with sugar; the root is used in decoction by boiling three ounces with one and a-half pint of water till reduced to one pint. Doses:—of the seeds, as a laxative and emetic from one drachm and a-half to two drachms and a-half, as a nauseant expectorant and demulcent and for asthma from forty grains to one drachm, three or four times in the twenty-four hours; of the oil, as a purgative from twenty to thirty-five minims, as a nauseant and expectorant and for asthma from ten to fifteen minims three or four times in the twenty-four hours; of decoction, from two to three ounces, three times a day. The seeds substituted for squill, senega root, ammoniacum, balsamum tolutanum and ether; the oil for jalap, rhubarb, castor-oil and squill; the root for jamaica sarsaparilla. Seeds narcotic, especially when smoked with tobacco. Oil used in lamps and is cheap; also used by painters and for giving a shining appearance to wood; also employed in the process of dyeing red thread. There is a variety with white flowers. No other common species here.——Bramhadauyam (ब्रह्मदाय - brahmadáya, San.). From (above + dá, san. to give). Lands held by Bramins free of assessment [inam].——Bramhagherry (ബ്രഹ്മഗിരി - brahmagiri, Mal.). From (above + giri, san. hill). Can. name (marenádu), meaning shelter + country. Mountains; Malabar dist., Cottayam, Wynaud tals.; lat. of trig. station 11° 55′ 53·5″; long. 76° 02′ 09·8″; height 5,276; from Calicut N.N.E. 48 miles; from Cannanore E.N.E. 42 miles; from Madras W.S.W. 305 miles; from Malapooram N. 60 miles; from Manantoddy N. 9 miles; from Palghaut N.N.W. 90 miles; from Ponnany N.N.E. 77 miles; from Tellicherry E.N.E. 36 miles. On the edge of an elevated miniature plateau of grass and sholah land, the greater portion of which lies in Coorg. Forms the southern section of the chain of the Western ghauts, which constitutes a natural barrier for several miles between Coorg and Wynaud talooks. The sides are clothed with heavy forest, and in some places with coffee plantations. Among these hills are the sources of the principal tributaries of the Cauvery, the Lutchmana teertam, Paupnaushy, and Belliapatam which flows westwards; on the precipitous western face, the Barapoley and other cataracts leap down to the sea. Highest peak, Davasy betta, 5,276 feet.——Bramhanacrauka (బ్రాహ్మణక్రాక - bráhmanakráka, Tel.). From (bráhmana, san. bramin + kráka, tel. anger). Village; Nellore dist., Cauvaly tal.; pop. 3,213; acres 15,369; lat. 14° 50′; long. 79° 57′; from Cauvaly S.W. 8½ miles; from Nellore N.N.W. 27 miles; from the sea W. 13 miles. Up to A.D. 1790 gave its name to a talook. Large wet village being entirely flat. Two tanks. Two old temples. Trig. station in lat. 14° 49′ 37·44″; long. 79° 59′ 8·60″; height 38 feet; from Cauvaly S.S.W. 7¼ miles; from Jaldanky S.S.E. 4½ miles; from the sea W. 10 miles. ——Bramhanam (ब्राह्मण - bráhmana, San.). From (brahma, san. sacred text). One of the two dual parts of each of the four old Vedams. Precept and illustration as against original dogma. Cf. the Talmud as against the Mosaic code, and the Hadees or Soonnat as against the Koran. However the Bramhanams are as much Shrooty or revelation as the Muntrams. In relation to caste Bramhanams are more important than the hymns. They are unsystematic prose compositions, intended to serve as ceremonial directories for the use of the priests, prescribing rules for the employment of the Muntrams at sacrifices, speculating as to the meaning and effect of certain verses and metres, and giving detailed explanations of the origin, import, and conduct of the sacrifices, with the occasional addition of controversial remarks and illustrations in the shape of legends. Each of the Samhitays or collections of Muntrams has its own one or more Bramhanams. Thus Rig vedam has the Eitareya bramhanam and the Cowsheetaky bramhanam. The two collections of the Yajoor vedam have the Teittireeya bramhanam and the Shatapata bramhanam. The Sauma vedam has eight Bramhanams, of which the best known are the Prowdham or Puncha vimsham, the Taundyam, and the Shadvimsham. The Atarva vedam has a Bramhanam, called Gopatam [matam].——Bramha rautry (ब्रह्मरात्रि - brahmarátri, San.). The night of Bramha, the calpam [q.v.] being his day light.——Bramha samauj (ब्रह्मसमाज - brahmasamája, San.). From (above + samája, san. assembly). A reform of Hindooism begun by Ram mohun roy in Bengal in 1830. A branch called Veda samauj was established in Madras in 1864. See vol. I (77) [matam].——Bramha sampradayee (ब्रह्मसम्प्रदायी - brahmasampradáyí, San.). From (above + sampradáyí, san. holder of any traditional doctrine). Another name for the Madhwacharry [q.v.] sect of Veishnavas. See vol. I (90).——Bramhasom (ബ്രഹ്മസ്വം - brahmasvam, Mal.). Means Bramins' property. Inam lands of Bramins. See vol. II, 105, 289.——Bramha staupyam (ब्रह्मस्थाप्य - brahmast'hápya, San.). From (above + st'hápya, san. established). Performance of the sacred thread ceremonial in favor of a Bramin. One of the seven meritorious acts.——Bramhaudicam (ब्रह्मादिक - brahmádika, San.). From (above + ádi, san. beginning). Incarnation of Bramha [avatar]. There is a very ancient tradition that there were nine such; and that they, as heads of families, became the progenitors of the human race. There is a frequent interchange of names between these, the seven great rishies, and the prajaupaties or patriarchs.——Bramhaundam (ब्रह्माण्ड - brahmánda, San.). From (above + anda, san. egg). The egg of the world, created by Bramha; also the visible sky, the shell of this egg. Also one of the eighteen pooraunams. Colloquially anything huge and collossal.——Bramhotsavam (బ్రహ్మోత్సవం - brahmótsavam, Tel.; பிரமோற்சவம் - piramórchavam, Tam.). From (brahma, san. sacred rite + utsava, san. festival); principal festival done with all pomp and ceremonies [pundigy, 6a]. Not now connected with Bramha the god. Annual festival at a pagoda in the early part of the year, lasting nine or ten days, in the bright fortnight of the month. It begins with hoisting a flag on a high pole in the first courtyard of the temple. After this, the morning and evening ceremonies are performed with more pomp and details than usual and the idol is taken in state through the principal streets both morning and evening, every day. Each day a separate vehicle is exhibited [tircalyaunam]. ——Bramhya maunam (ब्राह्म्यमान - bráhmyamána, San.). Reckoning of Bramha's time [calpam, maunam, yoog].

BRAMIN (ब्राह्मण - bráhmana, San.; برهمن - brahman, Hind.; باہمن - báman, Dec.; ಬ್ರಾಹ್ಮಣನು - bráhmananu, Can.; బ్రాహ్మణుడు - bráhmanudu, Tel.; ബ്രാഹ്മണൻ - bráhmanan, Mal.; பிராமணன் - pirámanan, Tam.). From (brahma, san. religious devotion). The older English form is Brachman, which comes through the Greek and Latin authors. The caste is sufficiently described at vol. II, 225. For Bramin high priests see Acharry and Jiyyangar. For W. coast Bramins see Numboory. For the Gowda and Dravida distinction, see Dravida [janty].——(1) Braminy (ब्राह्मणी - bráhmaní, San.). A Bramin woman.——Braminy bead (रुद्राक्ष - rudráksha, San.). San. means roodran's eye. Same as roodrauck.——Braminy bull (ककुद्मान - kakudmán, San.; ಗೂಳಿಯೆತ್ತು - gúliyettu, Can.; ఆబోతు - ábótu, Tel.; കൂറ്റൻ - kúttan, Mal.; இமிலெருது - imileruthu, Tam.). San. from (kakud, san. hump of a bull + mat, san. suffix of possession). Tel. from (ávu, tel. cow + pótu, tel. mate). Tam. from (imil, tam. hump + eruthu, tam. ox). The humped Indian ox.——Braminy butter (நெய் - ney, Tam.). An old name for ghee.——Braminy duck (بہمنی بطق - bahmaní-badak, Dec.). Casarca rutila, from marks on forehead resembling caste-mark.——Braminy kite (بہمنی چیل - bahmaníchíl, Dec.; బాపనచిలువ - bápanachiluva, Tel.). Haliastur indicus, from being sacred.——Braminy kite creeper (கருடக்கொடி - karudakkodi, Tam.). From being cure against snake-bites. Same as Isharmool.——Braminy myna (بہمنی مینا - bahmaní-mainá, Hind.; பாப்பாத்திமைனா - páppáttimainá, Tam.). Temenuchus pagodarum, from bright yellow legs as if by turmeric which bramin females use in daily bathing.——(2) Ardha bramin (അർദ്ധബ്രാഹ്മണ - arddhabráhmana, Mal.). From (ardha, san. half + above). Half bramins. The fishermen appointed by Parshooraman to officiate as Bramins to the people, and subsequently superseded by a colony of pure Bramins. The former were evidently an indigenous and native priesthood.——Arya bramin (ആര്യബ്രാഹ്മണ - áryabráhmana, Mal.). The Bramins brought by Parshooraman to the West coast from Ahichatram, in the north of India, in Aryabhoomy to replace the Ardha bramins.——Odra bramin (ఓఢ్రబ్రాహ్మడు - ódhrabráhmadu, Tel.). Orissa bramin.——Vishwa bramin (விசுவப்பிராமணன் - visuvappirámanan, Tam.). From Vishwacarman, the divine architect. Epithet taken by artisans as his alleged descendants.

BRIHASPATY (बृहस्पति - brihaspati, San.). From (brih, san. prayer + pati, san. lord).—"a" Son of Angiran, and gooroo to the devatays; represented in the arts as a yellow man, seated on a water-lily; he is regent of the planet jupiter; considered to be of benevolent influence; hence brihaspaty vauram or thursday. In vedas identical with Agny, as almost the same epithets are applied. The saying is:—if a person be born under this planet, he will be endowed with an amiable disposition, possess palaces, gardens and lands, and be rich in money and corn; he will possess much religious merit, and have all his wishes gratified; bramins however will not be so fortunate as those of other castes, for brihaspaty being a bramin does not wish to exalt those of his own caste.—"b" Name stands also for the planet itself in common usage, ♃; sidereal period of revolution 4332[d] 14[h] 2[m], or rather under twelve terrestrial years; inclination of orbit 1° 19′.—"c" Brihaspaty maunam, from (above + mána, san. measure) is the year for this earth according to Jupiter reckoning; founded on the period during which he describes one sign or a twelfth part of his orbit. This period is not identical with the common solar year though near it. See below under vatsaram.—"d" Twelve approximate years is one full revolution of Jupiter. This is a terrestrial very familiar Dravidian period. Compare mahamagham feast. The following is a Hindostany proverb:—بارہ برس پیچھے گھورے کے بھی دن پھرتے ہیں—"after twelve years, even a dunghill "begins to prosper;" the theory being that the fortune of everything changes each twelve years.—"e" Five revolutions again of Jupiter make up the cycle of sixty years called in Tamul Vyauzhachuckram. The names of the five vatsarams or periods or revolutions are as follows:—Samvatsaram meaning dwelling together presided over by agny; Parivatsaram meaning full year by arcan; Idvatsaram by chundran; Anoovatsaram meaning after year, by bramha; Oottara vatsaram meaning latter year, by shiva. The name of each individual year of the Vatsaram, that is to say of each Brihaspaty maunam year, sometimes called Jupiter months, is determined from the Nacshatram in which Brihaspaty rises and sets heliacally; and they follow in the order of the lunar months. They are as follows:—Caurteecam, Agrahayanam, Pooshyam, Maugham, Phaulgoonam, Cheitram, Veishaukham, Jyeshtam, Ashaudham, Shrauvanam, Bhaudrapadam, Aushweejam. On the W. coast, the zodiacal names are applied to these Jupiter months, but the word Vyauzham meaning jupiter is always appended; ex. Meena vyauzham. Caurteecam is placed the first in the cycle of 12. It may therefore be inferred that there was a time when the Hindoo solar year, as well as the Brihaspaty cycle of 12, began with the sun's entrance in or near the Nacshatram kritticay.—"f" The whole cycle of 60 terrestrial years is explained in vol. I, 612, para. 17 of foot-note, and a list of the years in the order of their appearance is given at appendix XXXVI of vol. II. BRITASTAUN (व्रतस्थान - vratast'hána, San.). From (vrata, san. religious duty + st'hána, san. place). Mentioned in the Bramhaunda pooraunam as the place of religious duty. Is supposed by some to be the island of Great britain. It is also called Shwetadweepam or the White island. Swarna dweepam or the Golden island is conjectured to be Ireland. The British islands are sometimes identified with the Chundra dweepam of pooraunams; likewise with Tricalasham, or the island with three peaks, viz., Rajatacootam, Ayacootam, and Swarnacootam. If the original Aryan stock had a more northerly origin than is generally supposed, there is nothing very improbable in these identifications.

BROOM GRASS (جھاڑو - jhárú, Hind. and Dec.; ಹಂಚಿಹುಲ್ಲು - hanchihullu, Can.; చీపురుగడ్డి - chípurugaddi, Tel.; துடைப்பபுல் - tudaippappul, Tam.). Title from use by sweepers. Hind. from (jhárná, hind. to sweep). Tel. from (chípuru, tel. broom + gaddi, tel. grass). Tam. from (tudaippam, tam. broom + pul, tam. grass). Tel. also (puchikagaddi). Title otherwise Jhauroo, Sweeper grass. Botanically Aristida setacea, retz., graminaceæ [vricsham, 156]. Alias Chætaria setacea. Grass found on dry, barren soil. Cattle will scarcely eat it. Stalks are tied into bundles and used as brooms by sweepers; serves for tooth-picks; used for making tatties. No other common species here.

BRUCEPETTAH (ಬ್ರೂಸುಪೇಟ - brúsupéta, Tel.). Town; pop. 27,473. Suburb of Bellary. Commenced in 1815 by Mr. Bruce, the judge, to shelter a number of people who were ejected from the fort.

BUCKAUL (بقال - bakkál, Hind.). From (bakala, ar. herb); seller of greens. Hence shop-keeper generally [bunniah].

BUCKINGHAM CANAL (உப்புவாய்க்கால் - uppuváykkál, Tam.). Title from the Duke of Buckingham, Governor of Madras. Tam. from (uppu, tam. salt + váykkál, tam. canal). Otherwise called the East coast canal. In the early part of this century, two canals, known as Cochrane's canal and the South coast canal, existed. The former led from the Cooum northwards as far as Doogarauzpatam, and the latter from Paupanchauvady in Chingleput district southwards to the mouth of the Palaur, near Sadras. Passengers and light cargoes of firewood, fish, &c., were carried by these canals. Cochrane's canal has been from time to time extended north so as to reach Pedda ganjam in Kistna district, where through the local Commamore canal it joins with the Kistna delta high level canals. The S. coast canal has similarly been extended south to Mercaunam in S. arcot district. During the administration of the Duke of Buckingham as Governor of Madras, these canals were connected by a fresh excavation, five miles in length, running through the heart of Madras from the mouth of the Cooum to Adyar river. This was one of the famine relief works of 1877-78. The whole canal, including the new central excavation, is sometimes called the Buckingham canal; otherwise only the northern section. Through communication now existing between the Godavery delta, the Kistna delta, and the Buckingham canal system, passengers can go by canal from Mercaunam to Cocanada, distance 462 miles. The bottom breadth of the canal is 30 feet and the depth varies from 2½ to 3¼ feet; but in the Poolicat lake there is from 5 to 6 feet of water. All boats sail when the wind suits, otherwise they are towed or poled; the crew consist of two to three men. Passenger boats ordinarily accomplish 25 miles per diem, but with extra trackers and moving day and night 50 miles could be attained. Boats ply both by day and night, but in very dark nights navigation is tedious and difficult in the Poolicat lake. There is no stream beyond that which is due to ebb and flow of tide, except at a point 7 miles north of Doogarauzpatam, where the canal runs for a mile through the stream of the Swarnamookhy river, which when in floods flows from two to three miles per hour; this velocity only lasts for a few days in each year during October and November. Navigation is seldom entirely interrupted, but it is difficult during high floods in October and November, and at low tides afterwards until the silt deposited in the canal by freshes is removed. In May and June, when the water is low, the transit of heavily laden cargo boats may be impeded at times. Cargoes carried to the south consist principally of grains, condiments, salt, fish, firewood, choonam shells and charcoal; while those taken northwards are chiefly cocoanuts, coir, palmyra rafters, fish, salt, jaggery and young plantain trees. See vol. I, 405. The following is the itinerary from the Palaur to Santaravore on the Commamore canal :—

On route from Bellary to Guntoor in a plain near the entrance to a broad defile formed by two parallel ranges of low hills branching to N.E. and S.E. Divided by the Zoorrair, into two parts, which are again sub-divided into Condapettah and Santapett on the right bank, and Cangarauzpett and Cusbah pettah on the left. Fort, on left bank, of lime stone with mud. The walls enclose Nawaub's zenana and his residence. In the pettah, N. of fort, are strong stone houses. Diamond mines near a low range of hills half mile from town. The matrix of the gems is a sandstone breccia lying under compact sandstone, of which the hills in the neighbourhood are composed. This breccia is composed of a mixture of colored jasper, quartz, and hornstone, cemented by a silicious paste. It passes into a pudding-stone of rounded pebbles of the above materials, cemented by an argillo-calcareous earth of a loose friable texture, in which the diamonds are found. This is also the case with the diamond alluvium found at the base of the hills washed by the pennair, near Chennore and Condapettah in Cuddapah. The process of mining is simply digging out the graves, breaking up the larger pieces of the breccia, washing and sifting the fragments, and spreading them out on the ground. The diamonds are easily detected by the practised eye of the native. No diamonds [vajram] of greater value than 300 or 400 rupees have been discovered here for many years.

BUNGAUR (سنہری سانپ - sunehrísámp, Dec.; [illegible] - chattekandmude, Can.; బంగారుపాము - bangárupámu, Tel.; மஞ்சட்சாரை - manjadchárai, Tam.). Dec. from (sunehrí, hind. golden + sámp, hind. snake). Tel. from (bangáru, tel. gold + pámu, tel. snake). Tam. from (manjal, tam. turmeric + shárai, tam. striped or rat snake). Title otherwise Banded bungaur, Rock-snake. Bungarus fasciatus, elapidæ [naug], ophidii colubriformes venenosi, ophidia [sarpam], reptilia [sarpy, 27], of naturalists [jantoo]. Alias Bungarus annularis; Pseudoboa fasciata. It varies in size from four to six or eight feet. Body with alternate broad black and yellowish rings, extending across the belly; there are from twenty-five to thirty-three of these black rings round the trunk; the first is the broadest and produced into a triangular process, the point of which rests on the vertical shield. Head black anteriorly and on the sides separated from the triangular process by a yellow V-like mark. Lower parts and throat uniform yellow. The hexagonal vertebral shield, and hard, blunt and almost bony end of tail, are very strongly marked. These are diurnal terrestrial snakes, but like others they generally prefer the shade to the sunshine. They are found in the open country, in grass and low jungle, and in fields. They live in holes in the ground, sometimes down among the roots of trees at a considerable depth. They are not frequently seen in inhabited places, though they at times find their way into huts and houses. Their bite is very dangerous, but does not cause many deaths, probably because it is not so much in the way of being met with as the cobra [q.v.] or krait [q.v.]. Its fangs are relatively to those of the cobra very small, and its bite in dogs causes death much slower than the cobra's bite. It is less valued by snake-charmers than the cobra, as it does not erect its head, nor is it amenable to tuition. The bungaur is not aggressive and tries to escape when discovered, but if attacked it retaliates fiercely. It lies coiled in curves, and when disturbed jerks itself out like a spring, but without extending its whole length of body. See Krait, which is Bungarus cæruleus.——Sea bungaur (கடற்பாம்பு - kadarbámbu, Tam.). Not unlike Bungaur fasciatus [bungaur], from the black and yellow-ringed markings. The Platurus genus of naturalists [jantoo]. One of the genera of Hydrophidæ or sea-snakes [chittal, tuttapaumb]. Are poisonous snakes inhabiting the sea, but transitional between land and sea forms. Has several characters like land snakes. Tail not prehensile. Ventral shields like those of land snakes. Body sub-cylindrical and not compressed. The eye is small. Tail longer and thicker in males than in females. Poison fang short.—"a" Platurus fischeri. Has trunk surrounded by thirty-six black rings; black band crosses the occiput; upper part of the snout yellow; upper labials black; 30 inches long.—"b" Platurus scutatus. Alias Coluber laticaudatus; Hydrophis colubrinus; Hydrus colubrinus; Laticauda scutata; Platurus fasciatus. Has crown of the head black; first and second black mark of the head and neck are joined below by a black longitudinal band, commencing from the chin; snout and side of the head yellow, with a black band running through the eye. The number and width of the black cross bands do not constitute specific characters in these snakes. Length of the tail varies with the sex. A common species. 5 feet long.

To the north of Bramhahwar they are called Naudavar and speak Canarese [jauty].——Buntrote (బంట్రోతు - bantrótu, Tel.). From (above + rautu, tel. horseman). A peon, originally mounted. ——Buntwaul (ಬಂಟ್ವಾಳ - bantvála, Can. bantvál*).—"a" Deputy tahsildarry, South canara district. Pay Rs. 70.—"b" Town, Deputy tahsildar's station; South canara dist., Mangalore tal.; pop. 3,551; lat. 12° 53′; long. 75° 05′; from Bangalore W. 172 miles; from Bombay S.S.E. 442 miles; from Coondapore S.S.E. 56 miles; from Madras W. 335 miles; from Mangalore E. 14 miles; from Oodipy S.S.E. 37 miles; from Poottore N.W. 14 miles; from the sea E. 15 miles; from Soobramanyam W.N.W. 41 miles. On N. bank of Netrauvaty, so far navigable by boats. During war with Tippoo sultan town was partially destroyed by rajah of Coorg, who carried off half the inhabitants as prisoners. Formerly of importance as head-quarters of talook of same name. The talook was dismembered in 1852 and merged in present Mangalore talook. Possesses considerable traffic, being an entrepôt for the produce of Mysore on its way to the coast and vice versâ. Has a wealthy temple of Vencatramanan owned by Concany bramins, in which a car festival is celebrated annually in the month of March.

BURGHER (බර්ගර් - bargar, Singh.). From Dutch, meaning citizen. Ceylon term, but some Burghers are to be found in this Presidency. The Dutch admitted people of mixed descent to a kind of citizenship, and such people were distinguished by this name from pure natives. The word now used in same sense as half-caste, and Eurasian in India. The Badagas of the Neilgherries are sometimes called Burghers by confusion with the above [jauty].

BURGOOR (ಬರಗೂರು - bargúru, Can. bargúr*). From (baragu, can. millet, panicum miliaceum, linn. + úru, can. village). Village, Hill range, Ghaut; Coimbatore dist., Bhawanny tal.; pop. 4,059; lat. of village 11° 48′; long. 77° 35′; from Bhawanny N.N.W. 26 miles; from Coimbatore N.E. 68 miles. The range lies between Bhawanny and Collegaul talooks, and is connected on the north and west with the Collegaul hills. It is a long narrow plateau watered by the river of the same name, ending in the Burgoor pass leading into Mysore. 30 miles in length. About 3,000 feet in height, with peaks rising to above 4,000 feet. Contains twenty-eight villages. The climate is dry, but water is got freely by digging wells. The hills are not much affected by either monsoon and are healthy. Inhabitants are chiefly Canarese lingayets. Their deity is Mautheshwaran, whose temple is on a hill of that name in Collegaul; they have also the usual village gods. The sholagar are a servile tribe. The Burgoor cattle are well known. Small game, deer, panthers, tigers and bison are to be met with. The ghaut, along which passes the road from Erode to Collegaul, is passable by carts, the gradient being one in sixteen. Burgoor village is five miles further on and at the north edge of the plateau in a depression in the hills. Connected with the railway at Erode by a good road about 45 miles in length.

Unsafe anchorage between the shore and two rocky islets. At the adjoining village of Moottam, a bay affords some shelter from N.W. winds. There is a lighthouse here.

CADIRY (కదిరి - kaðiri,* Tel.). From (khadira, san. acacia catechu, willd.); tree under which a local idol of narsimhan [q.v.] was found.——(1) Talook, Cuddapah district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. Area 1,158 square miles. Population 134,715. Language Teloogoo. Most western and largest talook in Cuddapah district. Irregular in shape. Extreme length 45 miles, extreme breadth 35 miles. Bounded north by Poolivendla talook, from which it is separated by a rocky range of hills; west by Hindoopore and Penoocondah talooks of Anantapore district; south by Madanapully talook; east by Royachoty talook. Very rocky and barren, and cut up by detached rocky hills perfectly destitute of vegetation. It is hot, though from 1,500 to 2,000 feet above the sea, and has the reputation of being unhealthy. Soil very poor, chiefly coarse red sand mixed with disintegrated granite [caroom cull] or soda [munn cauram]. Regar [q.v.] or black soil is met with in patches here and there. Towards Anantapore and Poolivendla frontiers extensive jungles, but wood small and ordinary. The hills are unproductive. Ordinary jungle products of lac [q.v.], honey [shahad], bees [tainee], wax [mom], and dyeing roots collected by jungle tribes. Iron-stone found and roughly smelted. Limestone [choonam] procurable, and granite for building purposes. Chief products, beyond the local requirements of rice [paddy] and sadza [bajrah], are horse-gram, cholum [q.v.], sugar-cane [q.v.], and cotton [q.v.]; scarcely any indigo is cultivated. A good deal of jaggery [q.v.] is produced, and there is a considerable trade in this article by importation from Madanapully talook; it is then exported to the northern talooks of the district and elsewhere. Formerly silk used to be manufactured, and much care was devoted to the cultivation of mulberry trees, which were grown under wells from cuttings. Rivers are the Maddoolair, and the Paupughny. The latter passes through the south and south-western portions. But they are of little advantage for irrigation. The five largest tanks are those of Cadiry, Moottiaulcheroo, Puntoolacheroo, Putnam, and Wonkamuddy. The principal channels are the Cadiry, Codavandlapully caulwa, and the Tippamuddy caulwa. In addition to Government wells there are 7,980 private wells. Upon these the ryots chiefly depend for their water-supply during the hot months. The wells are constructed at great cost and with considerable labor. They are often from 30–40 feet in depth, and four pairs of bullocks are freqnently used during the day for drawing the water. Places of archæological interest:—Cadiry, Doragull, Putnam. Principal trig. stations:—Eeshwaramala, Ingalore, Palcondah, Peipaud droog. The leading places, &c., in the talook are the following.——Cadiry (కదిరి - kadiri, Tel.). See below.——Chitrauvaty (చిత్రావతి - chitrávati, Tel.). Latin regio calingarum.—"a" One of the fifty-six countries of Tamul geography [bhoogolashastram]. Was one of the five out-lying kingdoms of ancient Pooranic india; on the northern part of east coast, with its capital about half way down the coast. Mentioned by Mahabhaurat, Megasthenes, Pliny, Booddhist legends, Hwen thsang, &c. All that is known of this kingdom is fully stated in volume I (13) and (130)—(132) [charitram]. Calinganagaram was modern Rajahmundry. Modern Calingas are a quasi Braminical agricultural class in Vizagapatam; branch of Gowda [q.v.] bramins; have almost abandoned Braminical achauram [q.v.]; support themselves by agricultural operations; speak Ooriya. Calingaroya or kings of Calingam are a division of the Tamul cullar [q v.]. Kintaly calingas are Calingas from Coontalam or the Canarese uplands. Calingam is also plant name common to Dillenia indica and Holarrhena antidysenterica; see gloss. paragraphs.——Calingapatam • (కళింగపట్నము - kalingapatnamu, Tel.). From (kalinga, san. the country + pattana, san. town). Greek Δανδάγυλα. Town, Port, Light-house; Ganjam dist., Chicacole tal.; pop. 4,844; acres 1,626; lat. 18° 21′; long. 84° 09′; from Bapanapaud S.W. 22 miles; from Chetterpore S.S.W. 91 miles; from Chicacole E.N.E. 15 miles; from Madras N.E. 437 miles; from Maufooz bunder E.N.E. 14 miles viâ Chicacole. Presumed to be an ancient capital of the kingdom of Calingam. On the Orissa coast [q.v.], at the mouth of the Vamshadhaura, and at the southern extremity of Ganjam district. Light on the point in lat. 18° 19′ 0″; long. 84° 07′ 30″; white; fixed; 8 miles range; visible from all directions seaward; obelisk of cut stone, column white, capital dark blue; to warn vessels off a small reef. The reef extends from the shore half a mile seawards. In passing vessels ought not to approach nearer than 8 fathoms. Best anchorage is in 6½ to 7 fathoms. Town is situated between S. bank of river and the point. The only port [toray] with any shelter and which is not a perfectly open roadstead between Coringa 150 miles south, and Dhaumrah in Orissa 250 miles north. Greatest depth of water over the bar is 14 feet 6 inches, and for 220 yards there is a depth of 12 feet. Rising in importance as a harbour [toray] and a regular port of call for steamers. Communication between the shore and shipping is rarely interrupted. During the monsoons [q.v.] a large number of native vessels lie up in the river. Connected by roads with Chicacole and the interior. Country around is barren. Five stone images in a shed in a field worshipped by Sheiveites, reputed of great age. Considerable mosque [q.v.] called the Durgah [q.v.] of Syed mahomed madany owlia, who was martyred here. The villages of Hoosompolavalsa, Jalloovalsa, Mooppidy, Narayanavalsa and Raullapaud, were granted by the Nawaub [q. v.] for the support of the durgah. Syed ishauk madany, another celebrated Mussalman warrior of the same period, is also buried here. A mound near the present town was plainly the site of the ancient city and small gold coins are sometimes found. Salt factory. Exports are rice, seeds, hides [chamrah], &c.——Calingaroyan (கலிங்கராயன் - kalingaráyan, Tam.). Means Calinga king. Village; Hamlet attached to Maitt nausoovanpolliem village; Coimbatore dist., Erode tal.; lat. 11° 26′; long. 77° 43′; from Coimbatore E.N.E. 58 miles; from Erode N.N.W. 8 miles. Gives name to channel fed by Bhawauny, across which there is an anicut [q.v.] close to the town of that name and running adjacent to the South indian railway and the Cauvery throughout the whole length of Erode talook. It used to run on into Caroor across the Noyil by an aqueduct and into the Amravatty near Caroor. Traces of this are still to be met. For a large part of the year there is a considerable surplus into the Noyil, benefiting the Poogalore channel. The left bank is artificial up to the tail, the other natural. The total length of the channel is 60 miles and the total fall about 122 feet, giving an average fall of 2 feet per mile. Crossed by forty-two natural drainages which are sources of danger, owing to suddenness of floods and quantity of sand brought down. The left bank is planted with palmyras [q.v.]. On the right bank the land is generally used for gardens irrigated by baling.——Calingyah (కళింగియా - kalingiyá, Tel.). From (kalinga, san. the kingdom so called). Hill, Ghaut; Ganjam dist., Goomsoor tal., Maliahs division; lat. 20° 04′; long. 84° 20′. The ghaut [q.v.] is the only good road from Goomsoor into the Maliahs [q.v.]. The ascent is five miles long; gradient severe for heavy loaded cart [bandy].——Calky (कल्कि - kalki, San.). From (kalka, san. sin). The great white horse of Vishnoo's coming incarnation, which will stamp with its right foreleg as the sign of the end of all things [avatar]. Its appearance closes the Kalyoog [q.v.]. Compare Revelations, chapter 19, v. 11—31. The divinity will then begin a new exercise in creating other worlds and other creatures. The Vishnoo pooraunam predicates as follows:—"Towards the end "of the Kaly [q.v.] age there will be reigning over the earth "kings of a churlish spirit and a violent temper, and ever "addicted to falsehood and wickedness. They will inflict death "on women, children, and cows; they will seize upon the "property of their subjects. They will be of limited power, "and will for the most part rapidly rise and fall; their lives will "be short, their desires insatiable, and they will display but "little piety. The people of the various countries intermingling "with them will follow their example, and the barbarians being "powerful in the patronage of the princes, whilst purer tribes "are neglected, the people will perish. Wealth and piety will "decrease day by day, until the world be wholly depraved. "Then property alone will confer rank; wealth will be the only "source of devotion; passion will be the sole bond of union "between the sexes; falsehood will be the only means of "success in litigation; and women will be objects merely of "sensual gratification. The earth will be venerated but for its "mineral treasures; the Braminical thread will constitute a "Bramin; external types will be the only distinctions of the "several orders of life; dishonesty, will be the universal means "of subsistence; weakness will be the cause of dependence; "menace and presumption will be substituted for learning; "liberality will be devotion; simple ablution will be purifica- "tion; mutual assent will be marriage; fine clothes will be "dignity; and water afar off will be esteemed a holy spring "[teertam]. Amidst all castes he who is the strongest will "reign over a principality thus vitiated by many faults. The "people, unable to bear the heavy burdens imposed upon them "by their avaricious sovereigns will take refuge amongst the "valleys of the mountains, and will be glad to feed upon wild "honey [shahad], herbs, roots, fruits, flowers, and leaves; their "only covering will be the bark of trees, and they will be "exposed to the cold and wind and sun and rain. No man's "life will exceed three and twenty years. Thus in the Kaly age "shall decay constantly proceed until the human race ap- "proaches its annihilation. Then when the practices taught by "the Vedams [q.v.] and the institutes of law shall nearly have "ceased, and the close of the Kaly age shall be nigh, a portion "of that divine being who exists of his own spiritual nature in "the character of Bramha [q.v.], and who is the beginning and "the end, and who comprehends all things, shall descend upon "the earth. He will be born in the family of Vishnoo yashas, "an eminent Bramin of Shambhalam village, as Calky, and be "endowed with the eight super-human faculties. By his irresis- "tible might he will destroy all the Mlechas [q.v.] and thieves, "and all whose minds are devoted to iniquity. He will then "re-establish righteousness [dharmam] upon earth; and the "minds of those who live at the end of the Kaly age will be "awakened and will be as pellucid as crystal. The men who "are thus changed by virtue of that peculiar time shall be as "the seeds of human beings, and shall give birth to a race "who shall follow the laws of the Kritam [q.v.], age, or age of "purity. As it is said; when the sun and moon, and the lunar "asterism [nacshatram] Tishyam and the planet Jupiter [brihas- "paty] are in one mansion, the Kritam age shall return [calpam, "matam]."——Caly (कलि - kali, San.). Evil [kalyoog].—— Calyam (कल्य - kalya, San.). From (kal, san. to do). Accomplished, sound, healthy, auspicious.——Calyaun (कल्याण - kalyána, San.). Means beautiful, propitious. Common ancient geographical name. One town still known by that name 33 miles N.E. of Bombay. Another was capital of Chalookyas of Deccan in the ninth to twelfth centuries; this is in the Nizam's district of Nuldroog, about 40 miles E.N.E. of the fortress called by that name. A third was a port of Canara between Mangalore and Coondapore, in lat. 13° 24′, on the same river as Barcore; see Calyaunapooram. See vol. I (138) [charitram]. ——Calyaunam (कल्याण - kalyána, San.). Marriage. For ceremonies see vol. I (108), and II, 235. Calyaunacoory, from (kuri, mal. lottery), is a marriage entertainment, and so other entertainment to which the guests invited are expected to subscribe according to their means [maryauday]. Calyauna mantapam, from (mandapa, san. hall), is the hall of temple in which the idol is placed when its marriage is yearly celebrated [coil, pagoda]. Calyaunam is also Hindoo 2nd or pers. name. Calyaunaraman similarly the auspicious Raman; Calyaunasoondram, the auspicious Shiva, &c. Feminine Calyauny [peyar]. Calyaunam, from use on festive occasions, is also plant first term often joining two genera. Ex., where transl. is of second term:— Cucumis melo, var. utilissimus (kaliyánappúsani), cucurbita maxima; Erythrina indica (kaliyánamurukkam), butea frondosa. See gloss. paragraphs.——Calyaunapooram (ಕಲ್ಯಾಣಪುರ - kalyánapura, Can.). From (kalyána, san. auspicious + pura, san. town). Sanscrit also (shilpagiri), meaning architecture + hill. καλλιένα of Cosmas.—"a" Village; South canara dist., Oodipy tal.; pop. 5,582; lat. 13° 24′; long. 74° 46′; from Mangalore N. 38 miles; from Oodipy N. 4½ miles; from the sea E. 3 miles. Former capital of the Calachoorya king Bijjala. First place in which the Portuguese built a church in South canara. There is now a large colony of Native christians.—"b" Village; Tinnevelly district. Ancient town once near Korkay; same as Manapaday veed.——Calyaundroog (కల్యాణదుర్గము - kalyánadurgamu, Tel. kalyándrúg *). From (kalyána, san. felicity + durga, san. fort).—"a" Deputy tahsildarry, Anantapore district, situated in the west of Dharmavaram talook. Pay Rs. 100.—"b" Village, Deputy tahsildar's station, Fort; Anantapore dist., Dharmavaram tal.; pop. 4,205; lat. 14° 33′; long. 77° 09′; from Anantapore W.S.W. 35½ miles; from Bellary S.S.E. 42¾ miles; from Dharmavaram W.N.W. 42¾ miles; from Gooty S.W. 53½ miles; from Madras W.N.W. 235 miles; from Penoocondah N.W. 46½ miles. Six miles west of the route from Madras to Bellary. Has diminished in importance. Fortified hill close to town. District moonsif's court formerly.——Caly's foe (कलिमारक - kalimáraka, San.). From (kali, san. evil + máraka, san. destroyer). Title as being a charm against abortion. Same as Bonduc.——Tricalingam (త్రికలింగము - trikalingamu, Tel.). From (tri, san. three). Ancient name for the total of the three separate communities into which the Calingas were divided. See vol. I (130). Compare the three great Tamul countries of the south, Paundyam, Cholam, Cheram. Pliny says, "Insula "in Gange est magnæ magnitudinis gentem continens unam, "Modgalingam nomine." This is pure Teloogoo for three Calingams (múdukalingam). Tricalingam is the name of a ruined city between Dharanicottah and Amravatty [q.v.], containing the ruins of a very fine dagoba [q.v.].

CALABASH (قرع يابس - karaiyábis, Ar.). Title through the Portuguese calabaça, from the Arabic (karah) a gourd, and (aibasah) dry. The dry rind of a gourd used as a bottle or float. They are of two kinds the long and the round, the long make lutes and the round make sounding drums for the Sitaur [q.v.] and Veenay [q.v.].

CALACHOORYA (कलत्सुरि - kalatsúri, San.). Title otherwise Calabhoorya. Dynasty from Bundelcund that moved south and ruled in Calyaunapooram in Deccan [q.v.]. Reduced by Chalookyas, but again subverted the latter. Their restoration was for but a short time, and their territories were absorbed by the Hoysala ballaulas [q.v.] and the Yaudavas [q.v.] as those dynasties became powerful. See vol. I (138) [charitram].

CALAM (قلم - kalam, Hind.). From (kalama, san. reed). Cf. Latin calamus. A pen, or a reed used as one. Especially pen with which God pre-recorded the actions of men. It was the first thing created; and it wrote down the quantity of every individual thing to be created and all that was, and all that will be to all eternity.——Calama (കഴമ - kazhama, Mal.). From sanscrit. A superior Malabar paddy growing in deep water. Growth six months. Varieties black and white, from color of ear growing [paddy].——Calam caury (قلم كارى - kalamkári, Hind.). From (above + kári, hind. workmanship). Hand-painted, as opposed to stamped.

CALAM (കളം - kalam, Mal.; களம் - kalam, Tam.). Threshing floor; suffix in place names, as Nadoovacalam, meaning middle + threshing floor.——Cala cooripp (களக்குறிப்பு - kalakkurippu, Tam.). CALASTRY (కాళహస్తి - kálahasti, * Tel.; காளத்தி - kálátti, Tam.). From (kála, san. serpent + hasti, san. elephant); from tradition that a serpent [cobra] and an elephant [q.v.] worshipped shiva here. Tel. also (pottappinádu), means country of pottapy naick. Sanscrit name (dakshinakailása), meaning southern paradise; also (shrípura), means city of lutchmy; or else spider town, from tradition that a spider [shilandy poochy] worshipped shiva here; also (náráyanavana), meaning vishnoo, the mover on the waters + forest.——(1) Zemindarry, North arcot. Area 874 square miles. Population 70,566. Language Teloogoo. Only portion lies in N. arcot, the rest being in Nellore. The N. arcot portion lies at extreme N.E. corner of district. Bounded on W. by Chundragherry talook and Carvetnugger zemindarry, N. and N.E. by Nellore, S.E. by Trivellore talook of Chingleput, and S. by Carvetnugger and Chingleput district. Its outline is very irregular. Suttivaid division of Chingleput divides it into two portions. The Zemindar divides his estate into the talooks of Calastry, Cutchinaud, and Pamoor, which are again sub-divided into several maugaunams [q.v.].

For Government administrative purposes, the N. arcot portion is divided into two divisions, Calastry on the north-west and Maderpauk on the south-east, each in charge of a Deputy tahsil-dar. The Pamoor talook has its villages scattered in five revenue talooks in Nellore district:—in Atmacore, 7; in Cauvaly, 24; in Oodayagherry, 81; in Cundoocore, 7; in Canigherry, 71;
total, 190. The peshcush [q.v.] of Calastry is Rs. 1,73,812, paid in North arcot on the whole estate. A further account will be found at vol. I, 58. Places of archæological interest:—Akkoorty, Amarambaud, Calastry, Cullivaid droog, Cunnaly, Cunnambaukam, Cutchore, Goodimallam, Ingavaurpollem, Maderpauk, Moderimbaid, Nambaukam, Oorandore, Penoobauca, Pillacore, Pulloor, Santapett, Singamala, Sooratipully, Tondamanaud, Tripooraantacapooram, Veeraraghavapooram, Vellauttcottay, Yerpett. Principal trig. stations:—Pillamode, Yerpett. The leading places in the zemindarry are the following.——Calastry (కాళహస్తి - kálahasti, Tel.). See below.——Caushy boogga (కాశిబుగ్గ - káshibugga, Tel.). From (káshí, san. benares + bugga, tel. spring). River; Perennial stream which issues near Yerpett. Believed to flow underground from Benares.—— Cutchore (కచ్చూరు - kaççúru, Tel.). From (kaççi, tel. weaver +

Trig. station; lat. 13° 58′ 28·77″; long. 79° 30′ 34·69″; height
3,080 feet; from Calastry N.W. 22 miles; from Chittore N.N.E.
59 miles.——Yerpett (ఏర్పేట - yérpéta, Tel.). From (éru, tel.
river + péta, tel. suburb); from source of the Caushy boogga.
Village, C.N.S. Railway station; pop. 500; lat. 13° 41′; long. 79°
38′; from Calastry W.S.W. 8½ miles; from Chittore N.E. 47 miles. At the junction of the Vencatagherry and Naidoopett roads. Favorite halting place. At the foot of a hill west of the village is a small temple of Oottaleshwaran. Here the Caushy boogga issues. Trig. station in lat. 13° 42′ 59·75″; long. 79° 36′ 28·01″; height 2,235 feet; from Calastry W. 9¼ miles; from Yerpett N.W. 2¼ miles.——(2) Deputy tahsildarry, Calastry zemindarry, North arcot. Pay Rs. 100.——(3) Town, Zemin-dar's and Deputy tahsildar's head-quarters. Place of pilgrimage;
North arcot dist., Calastry zemindarry; pop. 11,754; lat. 13° 45′;
long. 79° 45′; height 368 feet; from Arnee N.N.E. 80 miles; from Chittore N.E. 55 miles; from Madras N.W. 61 miles; from Ranipett N.N.E. 62 miles; from Tripatty E.N.E. 21 miles; from Vellore N.N.E. 69 miles. On the right bank of the Swarnamookhy, at the extremity of the Nagary hills. These hills are considered so holy in the neighbourhood that it is not permitted to quarry stone or gravel from them. A large proportion of the residents are in the employ of the Zemindar. In the Shiva temple Shiva manifests himself in the form of a mysterious and imperceptible current of air. Hence the lingam [q.v.] is called Vayoo lingam. The sacred lamp over the idol however always sways. Europeans are not allowed to enter. South-east of the temple is a rock-cut mantapam [q.v.], the Manicarnica ghaut, with sculptures. The Shivarantry [pundigay, 6a] festival takes place during ten days in Maushy [mausam] or February. Chief days from fifth to eighth. Trade in grain, bangles [gauzoo], glass-beads and other articles. Cloth is woven.

CALAUBAT (کلابتون - kalábatún, Hind.). From (kal, hind. instrument + bátná, hind. to twist); plate drawn. Gold thread.
The following is the method of making it. A piece of silver [velly] about the length and thickness of a man's forefinger is gilded at least three times heavily with the purest gold, all alloy being previously carefully discharged from the silver.
This piece of gilt-silver is beaten out to the size of a stout wire, and is then drawn through successive holes in a steel plate until the wire is as fine as a hair. The gilding is not disturbed by this process, and the wire finally appears as if of fine gold [pon].
It is then flattened in a skilful manner on a highly polished steel anvil, with a steel hammer, also polished. The metal wire is then wound upon silk thread, as follows. The silk [puttoo] is very slightly twisted, and is rolled upon a winder. The end is then passed over a polished steel hook fixed to a beam in the ceiling of the workshop; and to it is suspended a spindle [cathir] with a long thin bamboo shank, slightly weighted to keep it steady, which nearly touches the floor. The workman gives the shank of the spindle a sharp turn upon his thigh, which sets it spinning with great rapidity. The gold wire, which has been wound on a reel as it passes behind the maker, is then applied to the bottom of the silk thread near the spindle, and twists itself upwards, being guided by the workman as high as he can conveniently reach, or nearly his own height, upon the thread.
The spindle is then stopped. The thread now covered with wire is wound upon the spindle and fastened in a notch of the shank, when the silk thread is drawn down and the spindle is again set spinning with the same result as before. Certain lengths of the gold thread are made into skeins, and so sold or used by weavers.
Indian brocades, whether gold or silver, never tarnish. This is the result of the absolute purity of the metals [loham] employed [nesavoo].

CALAVOY (కలువాయ - kaluváya, Tel.). From (kaluva, tel. water-lily, nymphæa stellata, willd. + páya, tel. stream). Village; Nellore dist., Atmacore tal.; pop. 3,518; acres 7,804;
lat. 14° 31′; long. 79° 27′; from Atmacore W.S.W. 16¾ miles;

CALAVYE (கலவாய் - kalaváy, Tam.). Means black-lipped.
The genus Serranus, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei, pisces [matsyam, 1], of naturalists [jantoo]. The species best known to the natives are shown below.——Red perch (சிகப்புக்கலவாய் - shigappukkalaváy, Tam.). Title from dull lake color. Tam. from (shivappu, tam. redness).
Serranus [calavye] sonnerati, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei [matsyam, 1], of naturalists. Alias Epinephelus nigripinnis; Perca rubra; Serranus erythræus, pachycentron, pachycentrum. Scales on head, body; badly marked line, much similar to lateral-line, along scales near bases of dorsal and anal fins; dull lake, head and body to below first half of spinous dorsal fin covered with net-work of blue lines enclosing spots from one-sixth diameter of eye to spaces larger than it. Indistinct spots over whole body. Fins of darker color than body, especially at edges, caudal with dull blue or white spots. Sea;
common at Madras, attains at least 3 feet.——Sore-headed perch (పాముమీను - pámumínu, Tel.; കറുപ്പ് - karúppu, Mal.; வடுத் தலைக்கலவாய் - vaduttalaikkalaváy, Tam.). Title from appearance. Tel. from (pámu, tel. snake + mínu, tel. fish). Mal. from (karuppu, mal. black). Tam. from (vadu, tam. mole + talai, tam. head). Tel. also (pillipunni), meaning cat + small; (saka-látubonta), meaning broad cloth + mullus genus, from yellow color. Serranus [calavye] lanceolatus, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei [matsyam, 1], of naturalists. Alias Epinephelus lanceolatus; Holocentrus lanceolatus; Perca suggalathoo bontoo; Serranus horridus. Suggalathoo bontoo from teloogoo. Scales usually with raised circular lines upon them, especially in forepart of body, about fifteen rows between sixth dorsal spine and lateral-line. Colors vary with age, very young being of fine citron or sulphur ground-color, having irregular vertical bands and markings, which become more distinct as the age advances. About to a foot or over 18 inches in length, ground-color continues bright yellow, with five vertical, blackish-blue bands, first from orbit over opercle: second from nape to opercle joins first band in its posterior margin, and coalesces with third behind or above pectoral fin; third proceeding from bases of seven dorsal spines, passes downwards to abdomen;
fourth passes from fifth to last dorsal ray, and descends to base of anal fin; last surrounds free portion of tail. Fins yellow with black spots or blotches, forming confluent bars at bases, which on pectoral are disposed in undulating arched bands. In adult black bands disappear, ground-color becomes greyish-brown, whole being reticulated with greyish-black lines. Fins retain most of their original yellow color but amount of black decreases.
Sea to Malay archipelago, attaining a large size. About 51 inches long.——Spotted perch (புள்ளிக்கலவாய் - pullikkaláváy, Tam.). Title from spots on fins. Tam. from (pulli, tam. spot).

Serranus [calavye] hexagonatus, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei [matsyam, 1], of naturalists. Alias Epinephelus hexagonatus, merra; Holocentrus hexagonatus, merra; Perca hexagonata; Serranus confertus, merra et faveatus, nigriceps. Reddish brown with light reticulation; body, pectoral, soft dorsal, and caudal fins covered with hexagonal, or rounded markings. In some the dark blotches become more confluent, light reticulations being indistinct. Sea; over 8 inches in length.——Striped perch (రాతిబొంత - rátibonta, Tel.; வரிக்கலவாய் - varikkalaváy, Tam.). Title from stripes. Tel. from (ráyi, tel. stone + bonta, tel. mullus genus); from brown color. Tam. from (vari, tam. stripe). Serranus [calavye] boenack, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei [matsyam, 1], of naturalists. Alias Bodianus boenack; Epinephelus boenach, formosus; Perca rahtee bontoo; Sciæna formosa; Serranus boenach, formosus. Rahtee bontoo from teloogoo. Scales covering forehead and preorbital. Colors when alive brilliant, but fading after death. Generally yellowish-brown, snout pale blue, lips and throat spotted with deeper blue, about five fillets of the same color diverge from orbit and cross opercles and branchial membranes. Blue and tortuous horizontal lines pass from head towards tail below lateral-line, above it are about eight more directed backwards, upwards, and continued to dorsal fin; these blue lines are likewise continued on to the other fins, except occasionally on the ventrals, which become nearly black at their extremities. Some blue spots exist anterior to base of ventral fin of male, also occasionally on jaws. Sea.——Yellow perch (කහලවෙයා - kahalaveyá, Singh.; மஞ்சக்கலவாய் - mañjakkalaváy, Tam.). Title from color of fins. Tam. from (mañjal, tam. country saffron). Serranus [calavye] flava-cæruleus, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei [matsyam, 1], of naturalists. Alias Bodianus macrocephalus; Cynichthys flavo-purpuratus; Epinephelus flavo-cæruleus; Holocentrus flavo-cæruleus, gymnosus; Perca flava-purpurea; Serranus borbonicus. Scales thickly covering snout, pre- and sub- orbitals, and posterior half of the maxilla; about eighteen rows between lateral-line and sixth dorsal spine; those on chest and abdomen very small, about sixty-five rows between lateral-line and median line of abdomen. Head and body deep purplish blue; free portion of tail and all fins gamboge [q.v.] yellow; yellow on snout, maxilla, chest, and opercular spines; indistinct darkish band along base of spinous and first third of rayed portion of dorsal fin; ventral and caudal with fine black tips. Sea; nearly 10½ inches in length.

CALAY (கலை - kalai, Tam.). To break up, disperse, mix.——Calagary (కలగరి - kalagari, Tel.). From (kaliyu, tel. to mix + ari, tel. suffix of agency). Water let into the field immediately after sowing, in order to make the seed sprout.——Calappay (हल - hala, San.; هل - hal, Hind.; ಹಲ - hala, Can.; నాగలి - nágali, Tel.; കരി - kari, Mal.; கலப்பை - kalappai, Tam.). San. from (hal, san. to plough). Tam. from (kalai, tam. to break up). A plough without the yoke [yair]. There are two main varieties, the wet and the dry plough; the former is a light implement. The instrument consists of a simple stick, with a natural crook at the end, and with a handle fastened to it. This plough does not turn up the soil [munn], for there is nothing to answer the purpose of a coulter or mould-board. According as the angle formed by the head with the share [caur] is acute or obtuse, the plough is known by different names. The latter is usually preferred. The plough is drawn by a pair of bullocks or buffaloes [q.v.] in a yoke which are guided by the ploughman himself with a goad. The light plough with three shares is used as a harrow also [gorroo]. To convert this into a drill, the zaddigam [q.v.] or drill head, with three bamboo [q.v.] tubes fitted into it, can also be affixed.——Calathy (கலதி - kalathi, Tam.). From (kalathai, tam. confusion). Moodevy, the goddess of ruin [kettay]. This is a Dravidian conception.

CALEEM (كليم - kalím, Ar.). From (kalama, ar. to say). Eloquent speaker. Part of lacab, as Caleem ool lah, speaker with God, lacab of Moses [moosa]. Now an ordinary alam [ism].

CALF'S GRASS (वत्सप्रिय - vatsapriya, San.; کانسورا - kánshurá, Hind.; ಕನ್ನೆಸೊಪ್ಪು - kannesoppu, Can.; వెన్నవెదురు - vennaveduru, Tel.; දියමනේරිය - diyamanériya, Singh.; கானவாழை - kánávazhai, Tam.). Title from leaves used to feed calves. San. from (vatsa, san. calf + priya, san. dear). Can. from (kanna, can. beloved + soppu, can. leaf). Tel. means butter bamboo. Tam. from (kánam, tam. forest + vázhai, tam. plantain, musa paradisica, linn.). San. also (lángalí), meaning sticky, from leaf [cocoanut, wild bachnang]; (jalapippalí), meaning water + long pepper, piper longum, linn.; (kañchata), meaning to shine, from glossy leaves. Hind. also (kána). Tel. also (vennamudda), meaning butter + lump, from leaf; (nírukasuvu), meaning water + grass; (vennadévikúra); (ganjigadda), meaning gruel + root. Tam. also (kanrukkuttippul), meaning calf + grass; (kánángirai), meaning forest + vegetable; (kózhikkánángirai), meaning fowl + forest + vegetable; (kánángózhai), by corruption. Title otherwise Blue spiderwort. Botanically Commelyna communis, linn., commelynaceæ [vricsham, 139]. Root fibrous, stems branched, creeping, branchlets marked with a line of hairs, leaves sessile, ovate-lanceolate, acuminate, rounded at the base, margin waved, spathes opposite the leaves, rounded cordate, acute, folded, smooth, with roughish margins, peduncles in the spathe two, the longer one one-flowered, the shorter three-flowered; flowers bright blue; flowering in rains. Weed on banks of water-courses; sending suckers into the ground; improperly called a grass. Leaves used by natives for feeding young calves, when they wish to wean them from their milk; also as human food mixed with other greens [keeray]. Other common species are:—Benghalensis or common spiderwort; flowers bright blue; common everywhere; flowering in rains; leaves eaten as greens during famine [cahaumam]; seeds eaten plain or prepared by heating when they swell. Obliqua; the root useful in vertigo, fevers, and bilious affections, and as an antidote to snake-bites. Polyspatha; flowers light blue; mountains near coimbatore at 3,000 feet.

CALICO (कार्पास - kárpása, San.; کپڑا - kaprá, Hind.; ಶಲ್ಲೆ - shallá, Can. and Tel.; വെള്ളശ്ശീല - vellashshíla, Mal.; காரிக்கம் - kárikkam, Tam.). For title see below. San. from (karpása, san. cotton tree, gossypium herbaceum, linn.). Mal. from (vella, mal. white + shíla, mal. cloth). Tam. from (kári, tam. blackness), as generally applied to unbleached calico. White plain cotton cloth, originally manufactured at Calicut, whence the title through the French calicot. Calico manufacture is one of the oldest known institutions of this country. Most so-called calico however now comes from England. Sold as bleached and unbleached. For colored calico, see Chintz.

CALICUT* (കോഴിക്കോട് - kózhikkótu, Mal.; கள்ளிக்கோட்டை - kallikkóttai, Tam.). Title from arabic corruption. Mal. from (kózhi, mal. cock + kótu, mal. fort); the land within range of cock-crow is said to have been given to the zamorin [q.v.]. Tam. means milk-hedge, euphorbia genus + fort. Sanscrit name (kukkutapura), meaning cock + town; also (gópakútapurí), meaning shepherd + crowd + town; from the zamorin, the head of the yerandies or shepherds. Calicut has given its name to Calico cloth, through the Portuguese.——(1) Talook, Malabar district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. Area 339 square miles. Occupies a central position in the district. Situated in lat. 11° 10′ and 11° 32′ and long. 75° 47′ and 76° 11′. Form is an irregular quadrilateral. Length 30 miles, breadth from 7 to 17 miles. Central coast of district. Bounded north and north-east by Cooroombranaud and Wynaud talooks; east by Wynaud and Yernaud talooks; south by Yernaud talook; west by Arabian sea. Comprises forty-one amshoms [q.v.]. In 1866 six amshoms were transferred from Cooroombranaud. Consists mostly of low hills covered with jungle. The higher grounds are usually laid out in terraces for the cultivation of dry grains [q.v.]. The banks of the rivers are thickly wooded; some infested with alligators. There being but little surf small craft can ply. The ports [toray] are however nearly all shut during the south-west monsoon [q.v.]. Similarly the passes. The Ootoomullays, separating this talook from Wynaud and Yernaud, contain large quantities of teak [q.v.], timber and bamboos [q.v.], which are floated down the rivers to Calicut and Beypore during the rains. Soil about the seaboard is brown or white sand; in interior red with gravel approaching in certain parts to a mixture of red and brown. In Caurannore amshom, there is a dam known as the Moolyaurnada, which is constructed for the protection of cultivation. The Conolly canal passes through the amshoms of Casaba, Cottooly, Cutcherry, Yedacaud, Caurannore, Makkada and Yelattore, and connects the Cullye with the Yelattore river. Principal rivers are the Yelattore and a stream which rises in the Vauvoomala or Camel hump [q.v.] mountains, flows in the direction of Tirvambaudy and Coottiyaudy, and joins the Beypore river east of Paloor. A third river rising in the ghauts [q.v.], in the vicinity of Tamracherry, joins the Beypore river 12 miles from the sea. Small tanks and large wells are numerous, particularly in the town of Calicut; cultivation is, however, almost entirely dependent upon the rains. Places of archæological interest:—Annacherry, Beypore, Calicut, Canniparamba, Chevayore, Codoly, Covoor, Iringallore, Kilacote, Padinyauttmoory, Poottore, Talacoolattore, Tirvangaud, Valayanaud, Varacull, Yedacaud, Yelattore. Principal trig. station:—Poccoonn. The leading places, &c., in the talook are the following.——Calicut (കോഴിക്കോട് - kózhikkótu, Mal.). See below.——Canniparamba (കണ്ണിപറമ്പ - kanniparamba, Mal.). From (kanni, mal. salt pan + parampa, mal. high ground). Village; pop. 3,666; lat. 11° 16′; long. 75° 59′; from Calicut E. 11 miles; from Chevayore E.S.E. 8 miles; from the sea E. 11 miles. Temple dedicated to Shiva, Vishnoo, Ganapaty, Ayyappan and Dacshina moorty, 132 feet square. On the rocky pinnacle of a hill is a pit from which holy water gushes out daily in the morning in Yedavam [mausam] or May-june for 20 minutes, when it again becomes dry. The water also begins to flow on the occasion of Shivarautry [pundigay, 6a] festival in Coombham [mausam] or February-March.——Chervannore (ചെറുവണ്ണൂർ - cheruvannúr, Mal.). From (cheruman, mal. member of the tribe + úr, mal. village). Village; pop. 3,514; lat. 11° 11′; long. 75° 55′; from Calicut S.S.E. 5 miles; from Chevayore S.W. 6¼ miles; from the sea E. 2 miles. Temple to Shiva, Soobramanyan, Ayyappan, Ganapaty, and Dacshina moorty; roof is copper-plated. Festival annually for forty-one days called Mundala vilakk in December and January. The Malabar spinning and weaving company, limited, set up mills in this village in 1888, and in August of that year commenced spinning cotton

[q.v.]. The shareholders are exclusively natives.——Chevayore (ചേവായൂര് - chévâyúr, Mal. chevayur *). From (chéva, mal. military service + úr, mal. village); nayar village held on military tenure. Village, Tahsildar's station; pop. 6,761; lat. 11° 17′; long. 75° 51′; from Calicut N.E. 3¼ miles; from Cannanore S.E. 49 miles; from Madras W.S.W. 320 miles; from Malapooram N.W. 24 miles; from Manantoddy S.S.W. 39 miles; from Palghaut W.N.W. 65 miles; from Ponnany N.N.W. 34 miles; from Tellicherry S.S.E. 39 miles; from the sea E. 3¼ miles. Sepulchral rock-cut cave with erect pillar in middle of main chamber.——Covoor (കോവൂര് - kóvúr, Mal.). From (kó, mal. king + úr, mal. village). Village; pop. 4,953; lat. 11° 16′; long. 75° 53′; from Calicut E. 4 miles; from Chevayore S.E. 2 miles; from the sea E. 4½ miles. Rock-cut cave.——Mammally (മമ്മള്ളി - mammalli, Mal.). From (man, mal. earth + palli, mal. village). Village. In Chervannore amshom, about 7 miles from Calicut, coffee-curing establishment under Europeam management.——Molancadav (മൊലങ്കടവ് - molankatavu, Mal.). From (mula, mal. bamboo, bambusa arundinacea, willd. + katavu, mal. ford). Village, Port; lat. 11° 14′; long. 75° 49′; from Beypore N. 4¾ miles; from Bombay S.S.E. 550 miles; from Calicut S.E. 7¼ miles; from Chevayore S. 4 miles. At mouth of Cullye.——Padinyauttmoory (പടിഞ്ഞാറ്റുമുറി - patiññáttumuri, Mal.). From (patiññáru, mal. west + muri, mal. village). Village; pop. 4,910; lat. 11° 19′; long. 75° 51′; from Calicut N.N.E. 5¼ miles; from Chevayore N. 2 miles; from the sea E. 4 miles. Rock-cut caves from which a quantity of pottery was unearthed.——Poccoonn (പൊക്കുന്നു - pokkunnu, Mal.). From (pokkam, mal. height + kunnu, mal. hill). Hill, Trig. station; lat. 11° 14′ 27·20″; long. 75° 51′ 50·49″; height 279 feet; from Calicut E.S.E. 3 miles; from Chevayore S.S.E. 2¼ miles; from the sea E. 3¼ miles.——Poothiyangaudy (പുതിയങ്ങാടി - putiyannáti, Mal.). Means new bazaar. Village, Port; lat. 11° 18′; long. 75° 47′; from Bombay S.S.E. 540 miles; from Calicut N.N.W. 4 miles; from Chevayore W.N.W. 4 miles; from Yelattore S.S.E. 3 miles. Small port of call for country craft taking in cocoanuts [q.v.] and other produce. Many Moplahs here. Residence of Moplah tangal [q.v.] of pure Arab extraction. Eight mosques [q.v.]. Jumma musjid [q.v.] 72 by 30 feet. Annual festival.——Poothoopaudy (പുതുപ്പാടി - putuppáti, Mal.). From (putu, mal. new + páti, mal. village). Village; lat. 11° 29′; long. 76° 2′; from Calicut N.E. 21 miles; from Cannanore S.E. 49 miles; from Chevayore N.E. 18 miles; from the sea E. 25 miles. Four miles from foot of Tamracherry ghaut. Hotel used as resting place by travellers between Calicut and Wynaad.——Talacoolattore (തലക്കുളത്തൂര് - talakkulattúr, Mal.). From (tala, mal. head + kulam, mal. tank + úr, mal. village). Village; pop. 4,156; lat. 11° 22′; long. 75° 48′; from Calicut N. 8 miles; from Chevayore N.N.W. 6½ miles; from the sea E. 2 miles. Old temple.——Tamracherry (താമരശ്ശേരി - támarashshéri, Mal.). See sep. title.——Valayanaud (വലയനാട് - valayanátu, Mal.). From (valaya, san. bracelet + nátu, mal. country). Village; lat. 11° 14′; long. 75° 51′; from Calicut S.E. 2 miles; from Chevayore S. 3 miles; from the sea E. 2 miles. Elaborate sculptures on the gopooram [q.v.]; temple belongs to the Zamorin; annual festival lasting for eight days is celebrated in Macaram [mausam] or January-february, when the image of Bhagavaty [q.v.] is taken in procession on an elephant's back with great pomp.——Yelattore (എലത്തൂര് - elattúr, Mal.). See sep. title.——(2) Deputy tahsildarry, Malabar district. Pay Rs. 70.——(3) Town, Head-quarters of Collector, District and Sub-judge, Moonsif, and Deputy tahsildar, Lighthouse. Malabar dist., Calicut tal.; pop. 66,078; lat. 11° 15′; long. 75° 49′; from Bangalore S.W. 168 miles; from Beypore N. 6 miles; from Bombay S.S.E. 553 miles; from Cannanore S.E. 50 miles; from Cochin N.W. 93 miles; from Madras W.S.W. 330 miles; from Mangalore S.E. 130 miles; from Manantoddy S.S.W. 40 miles; from Malapooram N.W. 24 miles; from Molancadav N. 1½ miles; from Palghaut W.N.W. 67 miles; from Ponnany N.N.W. 33 miles; from Poothiyangaudy S.S.E. 4 miles; from Tellicherry S.S.E. 39 miles; from Yelattore S.S.E. 7 miles. In extensive palm groves. One of largest ports in presidency. Limits of port are:—north, boundary pillar north of the new custom house [chowky]; south, boundary pillar south of the custom house; the sea-shore between them to within fifty yards of high-water mark spring-tides; east, the harbour or backwater [cauyal], and the Cullye river as far as the junction of Conolly's canal with all creeks and channels leading thereto, and so much of the shores thereof, whether of the main land or the islands, as are within fifty yards of high-water spring-tides; west, the space enclosed by two lines running due west from the boundary pillars to nine fathoms water. Light on the sandy beach; lat. 11° 15′ 05″; long. 75° 45′ 35″; white; fixed, 14 miles range; visible from all directions seaward white column; to guide vessels to the anchorage clear of the reef, which lies about one mile S. 30° W. from the light. A small red light is exhibited from head of pier as guide for small coasting craft when entering port. The best anchorage for large vessels is marked by a buoy, and is with lighthouse E. to E. by N. in five to six fathoms, and from two to three miles off shore. A soft mud bank which from time to time forms off the lighthouse stills the surf in ordinary sea-breezes. The entrance from anchorages, particularly from southward is cumbered by Coote reef, so called from one of the Company's vessels having grounded on it. See vol. II, 148. There is a modern legend of the ruins of a town built by the Portuguese lying under the water. An iron screw-pile pier extends out to 12 feet of water. According to native tradition, Chermaun, having divided Malabar among the ancestors of the present chieftains, had nothing remaining to bestow on Tamoory [zamorin], the ancestor of the chief whom the Portuguese found in possession. He accordingly gave Tamoory his sword, with all the territory in which a cock crowing at a small temple could be heard. His successors extended their dominions south and east with the aid of the Moplahs. They are no longer independent, but are stipendiaries of the crown. In 1498, Vasco de Gama arrived at Calicut, but was inhospitably received by the Zamorin. In 1501, Pedralvarez Cabral established a factory, which was immediately afterwards destroyed by the Moplahs, and the whole colony massacred. Cabral bombarded the town; and in the following year De Gama destroyed all the shipping in the roadstead, and laid nearly all the houses in ruins. In 1510, Albuquerque again attacked Calicut, burnt the Zamorin's palace, and wrecked the town; but the natives drove him back to Cochin with great loss. In 1513 the Zamorin made peace with the Portuguese, who erected a factory, the origin of the present establishment. English factory established by permission of the Zamorin of Calicut in 1616; establishment expelled by the Dutch in 1664; agency re-established in 1668; port ravaged by Captain Kidd in 1695; captured by Hyder ally in 1766, when the Zamorin set fire to his palace and with his family died in the flames; grant of factor and all existing privileges confirmed and ratified by Hyder ally on his conquest of Malabar, 23rd February 1766; further ratification by Hyder ally by treaty, dated 8th August 1770; British dispossessed by Hyder ally, 1779; reduced by Major Abingdon, 1782; factory and privileges restored according to treaty with Tippoo, 1784; taken by Tippoo in 1789, who treated the inhabitants with great cruelty; the city was almost entirely demolished and most of the materials taken to Nullore where they were utilized in building the fort of Furruckabad [q.v.]. In 1790, the Mysore force was totally defeated in the neighbourhood of Calicut. Tippoo's general was made prisoner with 900 of his men, and 1,500 more laid down their arms at Furruckabad. Under the treaty dated 18th March 1792 which deprived Tippoo of half his dominions, Calicut fell to the share of the East india company, and was formally incorporated with the British dominions. After this event the scattered survivors of the population returned and rebuilt their dwelling. Since the cession to the British, Calicut has steadily advanced in trade and population; and with the exception of fanatical Moplah outbreaks, the peace has been undisturbed. Owing to the Moplah outrages, a detachment of European infantry was stationed here in 1849. It was removed to the outpost at Malapooram in 1851, but again brought back on the assassination of the Collector, Mr. Conolly, in 1855. The French settlement dates from 1722, since which year it has been three times in British possession. In 1817, it was finally restored with Mahé to the French, who still hold a few houses and the land adjoining. The Danish government established a factory in 1752. It was partially destroyed in 1784, and soon after incorporated in the British settlement. An unsuccessful attempt was made in 1792 to re-establish the claims of Denmark. The present town of Calicut dates from the thirteenth century. The barracks stand north of the town, as also the old Portuguese quarter with a Roman catholic church built by the Zamorin and presented to Portugal in A.D. 1525, and a convent. The southern portion contains the timber depôt, Cullye, and the Moplah quarter; above which lie the sea customs and salt offices, the lighthouse and mercantile houses, facing the sea. Round the Mannanchira tank, a fine reservoir of fresh water, are grouped the chief public offices and many important buildings. The suburbs consist of detached villages joining Calicut to Beypore, and surrounded with groves of palm, mango [q.v.] and jack [q.v.] trees. The French loge consists of 6 acres on the sea-shore, about half a mile north of Calicut lighthouse and adjoins the old District jail; apparently obtained by the French from the Zamorin. Beyond the fact that the landed property and houses are untaxed, there is nothing to distinguish the loge from the rest of Calicut. When the Zamorin's influence was supreme on the Malabar coast [q.v.], Calicut was a place of great trade; though Cochin, its rival, under Portuguese and Dutch influence, has, with its greater natural facilities, always had an advantage. Imports are now chiefly grain, salt [ooppoo], and piece-goods; exports, produce of the cocoanut [q.v.], coffee [q.v.], pepper [q.v.], timber, ginger [q.v.], &c. In May 1842 a Basel mission was established here. In 1855 a carpenter's workshop and a weaving establishment with six looms were opened. In 1868 a mercantile mission shop was opened. In 1874 the mission started tile works. There are seven important Hindoo temples in the town. They are Aricodicauv, Beiraugy matam, Bilaaticoolam, Cokkolicode, Talee, Tirvannore, and Varacull. Talee temple is in the heart of the town close to the Zamorin's old palace dedicated principally to Shiva, though Vishnoo, Bhagavaty, Ganapaty and Ayyappan are also worshipped. The Tirvannore temple is very ancient; has a newly-erected gateway in style precisely similar to the basties at Moodbidry in South canara erected by

Jeinas. There are no less than forty mosques in the town. The most important are the two Jumma musjid, Shekkindepully and Palayapully. Large kotiyehs [q.v.] and puttimars [q.v.] are built on the beach 1½ miles south of the lighthouse by the entrance of the Cullye river or creek, where the shore is smooth, being partially protected by the Coote reef. There is a club for Europeans on the beach, which was started on the 8th February 1864. The following are the travelling distances by road from Calicut to different places :—

CALIDASS (कालिदास - kálidása, San.). From (kálí, san. the deity + dása, san. servant). The well-known poet and dramatic author, anterior to Christian era, at court of Vicramadityan [q.v.] rajah of Oojjein [navaratnam]. His chief poems are Comaura sambhavam and Maigha dootam [maha cauvyam]. Besides these, he wrote Saitoo caavyam, building of Rama's bridge [adam's bridge]; and three plays, Shacoontalay [q.v.], Vicramorrvashy, and Maulavicaugnimitram. Shacoontalay, in seven acts, is the most celebrated. There was a later Calidass at Canouj.

CALIMERE POINT (கள்ளிமேடு - kallimédu, Tam.). From (kalli, tam. milk hedge plant, euphorbia tirucalli, linn. + médu, tam. mound). Tam. also (kódikkarai), meaning cape + shore. Greek καλλιγικόν, Latin calingon. Village, Port, Promontory; Tanjore dist., Tritrapoondy tal.; acres 2,544; lat. 10° 17'; long. 79° 52'; from Madras S. 194 miles; from Moottoopett S.E. 23 miles; from Tanjore S.E. 57 miles; from Tritrapoondy S.E. 21 miles; from Vedaranyam S.E. 6 miles. Most southerly point on Coromandel coast [q.v.]. Ought not to be approached within 5½ or 6 fathoms. Two pagodas [q.v.] near each other are about a mile from the shore and 5½ miles N.N.W. of S. extremity of point. Trig. station in lat. 10° 17' 33·26"; long. 79° 54' 40·51"; from Tritrapoondy S.E. 23 miles; from Codicaray E.N.E. 3½ miles; from Codiyacaud E. 3 miles; on the sea shore.

CALINGULA (கலிங்கல் - kalingal, Tam.). From (kazhi, tam. to discharge + kal, tam. stone). A water-way constructed in the bunds of tanks to permit the escape of surplus water, so as to prevent the bund [q.v.] bursting; usually set with upright stones to admit of partial bunding up.

CALIPH (خليفه - khalífah, Hind.). From (khalafa, ar. to succeed). Mahomedan rulers, successors of the prophet.——Caliphate (خلافت - khiláfat, Hind.). The office of caliph, the head of Islam, according to the Soonnees. The Shiahs do not recognize the caliphate, but substitute the office of imaum [q.v.].

CALPAM (कल्प - kalpa, San.). From (klip, san. to arrange). ——(1) Medical treatment. Any preparation made to strengthen the body.——(2) The first Vedaungam [smrity, vedaungam]. A ceremonial directory or rubric set out in the form of short aphoristic sootrams [q.v.] or rules, called Shrowtam, because serving as guides for the application of the Muntram and Bramhanam portion of Shrooty to the conduct of sacrificial rites. There are Shrowta sootrams for each of the five Samhitays of the Veda. Thus, for the Rig vedam there are the Aushwalauyanam, Saunkhyauyanam, and Shownacam shrowta sootrams; for the Sauma vedam, the Mashacam, Lautyauyanam, and Drauhyauyanam; for the Teittireeyam or Black yajoor vedam, the Aupastambam, Bowdhauyanam, Satyaushaudham, Hiranyacaishy, Maunavam, Bhauradwaujam, Vaudhoonam, Veikhaunasam, Lowgaucshy, Meitram, Katam, and Varauham; for the Vaujsaneyin, or White yajoor vedam there is only the Cautyauyanam; for the Atarva vedam only the Cooshicam [matam]. ——(3) In Hindoo natural philosophy the bright half of Bramha's day [caulam, 2], or one thousand Mahayoogs [q.v.].—"a" A date is assigned to the creation calculated backwards to the time when all the planetary bodies [graham], with nodes [pautam] and apsides [mandotcham], must have been found in conjunction in the first degree of Maisham [q.v.] or Aries. In like manner calculation is made forward until a similar conjunction of planetary bodies and movable points in the heavens will occur. And both these periods added together make up 4,320,000,000 or 4,320 millions of solar sidereal years; corresponding to one thousand great ages [mahayoog], or one calpam. At the close of the bright day of Bramha a collapse of the universe takes place, which lasts through a night of Bramha, equal in duration to his day, during which period the three worlds are converted into one great ocean, when the lotus-born god, expanded by his deglutition of the universe, and contemplated by the yogies and gods in Jana locam, sleeps on the serpent sheshan. At the end of that night he awakes and creates anew. See Caulam.—"b" Within the period of a calpam or bright day of Bramha, fourteen Menoos reign, and a Manwantaram, or period of Menoo, is consequently the fourteenth part of a Calpam. In the present Calpam six Menoos, of whom Swauyambhoovan was the first, have already passed away, the present Menoo being Veivaswatan. In each Manwantaram seven rishies [q.v.], certain deities, an Indran, a Menoo, and the kings, his sons, are created and perish. A thousand of the systems of four yoogs [q.v.], as has been above explained, occur coincidently with these fourteen Manwantarams, and consequently about seventy-one systems of four yoogs elapse during each Manwantaram, and measure the lives of the Menoo and the deities of the period.—"c" According to another division a calpam is the sum of fourteen Manwantarams, with a Sundhyay, or twilight of 1,728,000 solar years.—"d" The Manwantaram, or reign of each Menoo, and the four lesser ages, Satyam, Tretay, Dwauparam and Kaly are not astronomical, but a sub-division after the greater astronomical periods had been adjusted.—"e" Calpam is often shortly used for the destruction of the world.——(4) Calpacam (कल्पक - kalpaka, San.). One of the five miraculous trees of Indran's devalocam or paradise yielding whatever is desired. Appears to be analogous to the tree of life in the garden of Eden. There is a Tamul proverb :—கற்பகதருவைச் சார்ந்த காகமும் அமுதம் உண்ணும்—"Even a crow that "lives in the calpacam tree feeds on ambrosia" [amritam]. Calpa droomam, from (druma, san. tree), is the same.——Calpa dinam (कल्पदिन - kalpadina, San.). From (above + dina, san. day). The day on which the Calpam began, or its anniversary.——Calpastaunam (कल्पस्थान - kalpaat'hána, San.). From (above + st'hána, san. abode); chapter on pharmacy. Standard treatise on pharmacy. Treats in its introduction of the different countries which produce vegetable drugs [desham, munn].

CALPENY (കല്പേനി - kalpéni, Mal.). Means stone-quarry. Island; Malabar dist.; pop. 1,236; from Calicut W.S.W. 166 miles. One of the Laccadives. About 44 miles due south from Andrott in lat. 10° 7' N. and long. 73° 38' E. Coral shoal upon which it stands is about 8 miles in length and 3½ to 4 in width. Besides the main island which alone is inhabited, there are two small rocky islands to the south-west separated from the mainland and each other by narrow channels and a long narrow island called Cheriyam, about 1½ miles north of the main island. These four islands together form a figure resembling a bottle with an elongated neck running north by east to south by west. The extreme length from the north point of Cheriyam to the south point of Calpeny is about 7 miles, and the greatest width about three-quarters of a mile. On the east the reef forms the shore line of Calpeny and Cheriyam, and on the south lies a short distance from the beach. On the west it trends outward so as to enclose a magnificent lagoon [cauyal] of still water over 7 miles in length and from 2 to 2¼ miles broad as its widest point. The channels between the various islands are at low water very shallow, and the islanders can easily pass on foot from one to another. It was from these shoals particularly that between the main islands and Cheriyam, that cowries [q.v.] were formerly gathered. The main island is about 3 miles long. Only the southern portion is inhabited, as only here good drinkable water is procurable. All nucultivated portions are covered with a dense jungle of screw-pine [q.v.], &c. This island contains a considerable plot of low arable land adapted to the cultivation of a few coarse grains. In physique the inhabitants are inferior to those of the other islands. Nearly all the work is done by the women. The Carnaver class claim to have derived their descent from the Numboory bramins of Malabar, and their houses are generally distinguished by the word illam [q.v.]. The island is divided into four sub-divisions or cherries, viz., Keelcherry, Mecherry, Tekkancherry, Vadacancherry. In the arable ground the same coarse grains are cultivated as in Andrott. In sea products, Calpeny is peculiarly rich. The turtle [cadal aumay], killed for oil but not for eating, is very common. Coir-yarn is the chief manufacture, generally of an inferior quality. The people are exclusively Mahomedans. A large English steamship, "the Amelia," was wrecked upon the reef in April 1880.

CALUMBA (کلمبہ - kalambah, Pers.; کلمبے کا پیڑ - kalambekáper, Hind.; کلمبے کا جھاڑ - kalambekájhár, Dec.; కలంబవేరు - kalambáveru, Tel.; கொழும்புவேர் - kozhumbuvér, Tam.). Title as having first reached england from columbo. Hind. from (kalamba, hind. colombo + per, hind. tree). Tel. and tamul mean columbo root. Hind. also (chobchíní), meaning china root. Giving China root, Columbo root. Botanically Cocculus [vausanavully] palmatus, dec., menispermaceæ [vricsham, 5]. Alias Cocculus colombo; Jateorhiza columba, miersii, palmata; Menispermum columba, palmatum. Shrub; flower small, green; native of mozambique, introduced. Root met with in slices of one to two inches diameter, half an inch thick, much wrinkled, greyish externally, bright yellow within; the taste is bitter, smell heavy, powder of a greenish grey color, and very apt to attract moisture from the air; very subject to decay and becomes perforated by small worms. Gives to pharm. calumbæ radix; contains a bitter crystallizable principle, calumbin, and a bitter neutral principle, berberina; valuable tonic and stomachic.——False calumba (दार्वी - dárví, San.; दारुहळद - dáruhalada, Mahr.; جھاڑکی ہلدی - jhárkíhaldí, Dec.; ಮರದರಸಿನ - maradarasina, Can.; ಮರಮಂಜಲ್ - maramanjal, Too.; మానుపసుపు - mánupasupu, Tel.; മരമഞ്ഞൾ - maramaññal, Mal.; වෙනිවැල් - veniwal, Singh.; மரமஞ்சள் - maramañjal, Tam.). Title as substitute for calumba. San. from (dáru, san. wood) [berberry]. Mahr. from (dáru, san. tree + halada, mahr. turmeric). Dec. from (jhár, hind. tree + haldí, hind. turmeric, curcuma longa, roxb.); from color of root used as dye. Can. from (mara, can. tree + arasina, can. turmeric). Tel. from (mánu, tel. wood + pasupu, tel. turmeric). Mal. from (maram, mal. wood + maññal, mal. turmeric). Tam. from (maram, tam. tree + mañjal, tam. turmeric); from ligneous yellow stem. San. also (dáruharidrá), meaning wood turmeric; (pítadru), meaning yellow tree, from dye. Dec. also (haldíkájhár), meaning turmeric tree [country saffron]. Can. also (doddamaradarasina), meaning large + tree turmeric. Title otherwise Maramanjal, Tree turmeric, Yellow tree. Botanically Coscinium fenestratum, colebr., menispermaceæ [vricsham, 5]. Alias Coscinium wallichianum; Menispermum fenestratum. Climbing plant with thick ligneous stem and branches; leaves alternate, petioled, cordate, entire, five to seven-nerved, smooth and shining above, very hoary below, acuminate or obtuse, three to nine inches long, two to six broad; petioles downy, shorter than the leaves; flowers in small globular heads, numerous, sub-sessile, villous, of an obscure green; female umbels several from the same bud, rising from the branches, on thick downy peduncles; the latter longer and thicker in fruit; calyx six-leaved; three exterior sepals oval, downy outside; three interior ones longer; petals six, filaments very downy; style recurved; berries round, villous, size of a large filbert; seed one; flowers greenish; indigenous in malabar forests. Round, yellow colored, bitterish root, about one inch in circumference. Cylindrical woody stems, diameter 1 to 4 inches, covered with a pale corky bark. Wood and bark tonic and stomachic; useful in debility and atonic dyspepsia; substituted for british columba, gentian, and cinchona [koinah] bark; gives to pharm. non-officinal, stems, like calumba root. Wood yields a yellow dye [shanyam]. Wood itself is of a bright greenish yellow color, and open porous structure, having no concentric rings, but conspicuous medullary rays; taste purely bitter; sometimes confounded with darbald [q.v.], the stem of the berberry [q.v.]; the wood is much less hard than that of the berberry, and of a lighter color.

CALYE (قلعی - kalaí, Ar.). From (kala, ar. mine); where produced. Tin. As verb, to line brass [pittalay] or copper [taumram] vessels with a coating of tin [tagaram].

CAM (क - ka, San.). Water.——Calamby (कलम्बी - kalambí, San.). From (ka, san. water + lamb, san. to hang). Aquatic bindweed. Title otherwise American bindweed, Morning glory. Botanically the Ipomæa genus, convolvulaceæ [vricsham, 93]. Twining prostrate creepers, or rarely low and erect shrubs; leaves, entire, lobed or divided; flowers large and showy; many yield purgative roots, others edible. Genus very scattered in vernacular terminology. The species best known to natives are:—angustifolia [seeta's knot], aquatica [tooty coora], batatas [sweet potato], beladamboe [white adambo], biloba [red adambo], bonanox [moon flower], coccinea [caushy ratnam], cymosa [laldana], digitata [giant sweet potato], hederacea [kaladana], muricata [false kaladana], pentaphylla [hill giant sweet potato], pestigridis [tiger's foot], quamoclit [indian pink], reniformis [rat's ear], sepiaria [laldanah], turpethum [turbith]. Other s. indian species indigenous or naturalized are:—Bracteata, in tamul called mortar flower from shape; Campanulata, stem straight, large bell-shaped flowers pale rose at the mouth deepening to dark crimson at the bottom; Chryseides, stem twisted; Dasysperma, one to three-flowered, flowers deep cream-colored tinged with yellow and with a lilac purple eye; Dissecta, coromandel coast [q.v], called in tamul hare's gourd; Eriocarpa, flower small, rose-colored, plant eaten in times of famine; Obscura, flower largish, white, with cream-colored plica, and a dark purple eye; Palmata, flowers very large, white, lilac purple; Purpurea or morning glory, profusion of flowers every shade of color from white through blue and crimson to dark purple; Rumicifolia; Staphylina, flowers very numerous; Tridentata; Uniflora; Vitifolia; Wightii.——Calasham (कलश - kalasha, San.; کلس - kalas, Hind.). San. from (ka, san. water + lá, san. to take). Pot. A rounded pinnacle or ball on the top of a temple [coil, shikharam]. Calashapoojay is placing a water-jar in a chamber as type of Doorga [q.v.].——Calauyam (कलाय - kaláya, San.; वाटाणे - vátáné, Mahr.; बट्टणे - battané, Conc.; مٹر - matar, Hind.; بٹانے کا جھاڑ - batánekájhár, Dec.; کچنگ - kachang, Malay; ಬಟಾಣಿ - batáni, Can.; ಬಟಾಣಿ - batáni, Too.; పఠాణి - pat'háni, Tel.; പട്ടാണിപ്പയറു - pattánippayaru, Mal.; රටගොරද්‍ය - ratagoradya, Singh.; பட்டாணி - pattáni, Tam.). San. from (ka, san. wind + lá, san. to take), causing vayoo [bengal gram]. Mahr. from hindostany. Mal. from (pattáni, mal. patán + payar, mal. pulse); favorite pulse among patauns. San. also (satínaka), meaning troubling; (harénu), meaning destroying; (khandika), meaning eaten. Ar. also (himmas) [bengal gram]. Hind. also (golmatar), meaning round pea. Can. also (badagida). Tel. also (pattáni); (gundushanagalu), meaning round + bengal gram, cicer arietinum, linn. Tam. also (vellaippattáni), meaning white + pisum sativum, linn. Greek ἐρέβινθος. Title otherwise Common pea, Dantzic pea, Garden pea, Puttauny. Botanically Pisum sativum, linn., leguminosæ [vricsham, 48]. Alias Pisum exhorticatum, quadratum, humile, umbellatum. Annual tendril climber; leaves having three pairs of entire glaucous leaflets and large leafy stipules; large flowers white or variegated with red; indigenous in central india; here only cultivated; grows well at bangalore. Not much cultivated except for European tables. There is a Hindostany proverb:—ایک چنے کے دو دال—"Two halves of "a pea;" or two chips of the same block. Many varieties. More valuable and prolific than P. arvense, linn.——Camalam (कमल - kamala, San.). From (ka, san. water + al, san. to adorn). Lotus, nelumbium speciosum, willd. [nelumbo].——Camala moodray (కమలముద్ర - kamalamudra, Tel.). Means camalam or lotus stamp. Otherwise Camala mauda. Ancient gold coin of a cup-like form; stamped on one side with the lotus flower, whence name, and with the chunk [q.v.]. Generally half pagoda [mauda].——Camalaupooram (కమలాపురము - kamalápuramu, Tel. kamalápuram *). Means camalam or lotus town.—"a" Deputy tahsildarry, Cuddapah district. Pay Rs. 70.—"b" Village, Deputy tahsildar's station, Railway station; Cuddapah dist., Cuddapah tal.; pop. 5,082; acres 4,408; lat. 14° 36′; long. 78° 43′; height 462 feet; from Cuddapah N.W. 13¼ miles; from Madanapully N. 72 miles; from Madras N.W. 152 miles; from Sidhout W.N.W. 22 miles. At the junction of Paupughny and Pennair. Once residence of a poligar [q.v.]. Family now extinct. Two old temples. Two Government plantations near the town on the Paupughny. Trade in rice.—"c" Town; Bellary dist., Hospett tal.; pop. 5,314; acres 23,494; lat. 15° 18′; long. 76° 31′; from Bellary W.N.W. 31½ miles; from Hospett E.N.E. 7 miles. Suburb of Vijianugger. Built beneath the embankment of a large tank, supplied by the Toongabudra. Until 1820 the residence of the last surviving representative of the Vijianugger dynasty. There are many ruined buildings, one converted into a bungalow [q.v.]. Chiefly remarkable for its iron foundries; the large iron [auhan] pans required for boiling down the juice of the sugar-cane [q.v.], largely grown in the neighbourhood, being made here.——Camalay (கமலை - kamalai, Tam.). From (ka, san. water + al, san. to adorn). The lotus, a name of lutchmy [q.v.]. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name of females and males. Similarly Camaleshan; from Vishnoo, husband of Lutchmy the lotus-goddess [peyar].——Capotam (कपोत - kapóta, San.). From (ka, san. wind + póta, san. young one); from rapid motion. Columbidæ family, gemitores, aves [pacshy, 29], of naturalists [jantoo]. Pigeons and Doves, ordinarily so called, which feed chiefly on grains, often on shoots and buds of plants, and a few partially on fruit [pazham]. Differ from green pigeons [haritaulam] by more terrestrial habits, more dull and sombre colors, various shades of dark-blue, red-brown, and grey predominating, often adorned with a beautiful iridescence or play of colors on neck, and in many with marked neck spot. Divided according to general tone of coloring and habits into :—"a" Palumbinæ, Wood-pigeons or cushats. Feet fitted for perching; tail somewhat long and rounded. More frugivorous and bud-eating than ordinary Pigeons and Doves, only twelve tail-feathers, denizens of woods and forests, feed partly on trees and partly on the ground [sholah pigeon].—"b" Columbinæ, Rock-pigeons. Feet fitted for walking; tarsus longer and less feathered; find their food mostly on the ground. Comprise the blue Rock-pigeons and the so-called Stock-pigeons and their allies, from some species of which the domestic Pigeons have sprung [blue-rock pigeon].—"c" Turturinæ, bonap., Doves. Feet fitted for walking on ground, tail somewhat lengthened, rounded or graduated, pale tips to outer feathers; of delicate make, with small heads; neck usually without the iridescent play of the Columbinæ, but frequently adorned with neck spots as in the Palumbinæ, or with rings; colors usually pale, compared with pigeons. Mostly feed on the ground on grain, pulse, and other small seeds, not in general gregarious, though large numbers may be seen feeding together. Chiefly frequent open and cultivated country, a few preferring highly wooded or forest districts; many are very familiar, feeding close to houses and stables. Breed on low trees, or shrubs, constructing the usual slight platform nest; they breed at all seasons of the year [tootroo].——Caunjícam (कांजिक - káñjika, San.). From (ka, san. water + añj, san. to shine); water by distinction. Rice vinegar [caudy].

CAMAUL (كمال - kamál, Ar.). From (kamala, ar. to complete). Perfection. Prefixed to an alam forms a lacab, as Camaul ahmed, perfection of Ahmed the prophet [ism].

CAMBATTIGA (కంబట్టిగ - kambattiga, Tel.). Corruption from (kembattakki, can. red paddy rice). A Bellary paddy.

CAMBAUKUM (காம்பாக்கம் - kámbákkam, Tam.). From (kámbu, tam. bamboo, bambusa arundinacea, willd. + pákkam, tam. village). Village; Chingleput dist., Trivellore tal.; pop. 742; acres 15,874; lat. 13° 35′; long. 79° 58′; from Suttivaid N.N.W. 10 miles; from Sydapett N.W. 44 miles; from Trivellore N.N.W. 30½ miles. Near Calastry zemindarry. Cambaukum droog is a trig. station in lat. 13° 34′ 29·90″; long. 79° 54′ 13·72″; height 2,548 feet; from Sydapett N.W. 44 miles; from Trivellore N.N.W. 30 miles. Principal peak in the Naugalaupooram and Suttivaid ranges. Remains of a fine hill fort with palaces and other buildings. On the hill is a tableland half square mile in area, which it was at one time proposed to convert into a sanitarium for troops. The forest in the vicinity promises to be of great value. This plateau is the only approach the district possesses to a hill climate, but the range is decidedly feverish in the hot months, until cleansed by the first falls of the south-west monsoon [q.v.].

CAMBAY (खंभात् - khambhát, Mahr.; கம்பை - kambai, Tam.). Title from mahratta. Mahr. corruption from (stambhatírtha, san. sacred pillar pool); from a pool sacred to shiva under the form of pillar god. Town in Goozerat, at the head of the gulf of same name.——Cambay pebble (گجراتی کنکر - gujrátíkankar, Hind.; గుజరాతిరాయి - gudzarátiráyi, Tel.; கம்பைக்கல் - kambaikkal, Tam.). Title from cambay, town of goozerat. Hind. from (kankar, hind. pebble). Brought from Goozerat and resembles in color a mixture of milk and water. It changes color when held in different positions [ratnam].

CAMBODIA (कम्बोज - kambója, San.). From (kambu, san. neck + ójas, san. strength). One of the non-Aryan tribes of the north-west famous for their horses. When the Aryan travellers or colonists proceeded to the country which is the modern French cochin china, they took this name with them. The Cambodia ruins of extraordinary vastness and architectural elaboration are numerous. The country is known to the modern natives under the name of Champah [baly]. Gamboge [q.v.] is derived from this word. The country also exports eaglewood [q.v.]. Its chief produce is rice. Abrus precatorius is Cambojy in sanscrit. And compare :—Phyllanthus multiflorus (krishnakámbóji), black fruited abrus; Securinega leucopyrus (shvétakámbóji), white fruited abrus.

CAMEES (قميص - kamís, Hind.). From the portuguese camisa through arabic. A short coat, shirt [coortee, sheelay].

CAMEL (اونٹ - únt, Hind.). Rather common prefix [ottagam].——Camel hump (വാവൽമല - vávalmala, Mal.). Title from appearance. Mal. from (vával, mal. large bat + mala, mal. hill). Peak; Malabar dist., Wynaud tal. Trig. station; lat. 11° 25′ 34·05″; long. 76° 10′ 23·03″; height 7,677 feet; from Calicut E.N.E. 26 miles; from Manantoddy S.S.E. 26 miles; from Munjery N. 22 miles. The highest peak in Wynaud, and a conspicuous landmark from all points on the coast and from sea. Covered to the summit with virgin forest.——Camel thistle (ऊंटकटारी - úntakatárí, Mahr.; اونٹ کٹارا - úntkatárá, Hind.; ಬ್ರಹ್ಮದಂಡ - brahmadanda, Can.; వేమదొండ - vémadonda, Tel.). Title from food of camels. Mahr. from (únta, mahr. camel + katára, mahr. dagger); from dagger-like bristles of plant. Hind. from (únt, hind. camel + katárá, hind. the plant). Can. from (brahma, san. deity + danda, san. stick); from white stem [bramhadand]. Tel. from (vému, tel. margosa tree, melia azadirachta, linn. + donda, tel. cephalandra indica, naud.). Hind. also (katárá), meaning plant with dagger-like bristles. Title otherwise Globe thistle, Vaimdonda. Botanically Echinops echinatus, dec., compositæ [vricsham, 74]. CAMPHOR (कर्पूर - karpúra, San.; कापूर - kápúra, Mahr.; كافور - káfúr, Ar., Pers. and Hind.; کپور - kápúr, Dec.; کپور - kapur, Malay; ಕರ್ಪೂರ - karpúra, Can. and Too.; కర్పూరము - karpúramu, Tel.; കർപ്പൂരം - karppúram, Mal.; කපුරු - kapuru, Singh.; கற்பூரம் - karppúram, Tam.). From sanscrit through arabic. Greek καφουρά. Camphora of chemists. Product of Cinnamomum camphora, nees. and eberm. [camphor cinnamon], and Cinnamomum zeylanicum, breyn. [ceylon cinnamon]; chiefly the former. Is a vegetable principle arising from the separation by sublimation of the concrete volatile oil contained in wood of the trees; it is not a gum resin [gond, googal]. Impure camphor of the shops is concrete, grey, granular, moist, full of heterogeneous particles; refined camphor is in flat cakes, white, semi-transparent, having a crystalline appearance; in either case has a fragrant odour, and a hot taste; inflammable and so volatile as to exhale when left exposed in a warm air; odour very penetrating, taste hot and bitter like peppermint; weight sensibly decreases by keeping, owing to evaporation; insoluble in water, burns without residue or blackening, though it emits dense smoke. The bazaar dealers moisten it to increase its weight, and fresh cakes often contain about one-fourth their weight of fluid. The article here sold comes, like the one imported into europe, from formosa and japan. Camphor is prepared by boiling chips of the wood in a retort; the wood is cut into billets and boiled in water in iron pots covered with earthenware heads filled with straw; the camphor volatilises and concretes on the straw; it is afterwards purified by sublimation and made into cakes. In medicine camphor is primarily a diffusable stimulant and diaphoretic; secondarily a sedative, anodyne, and antispasmodic; and in large doses an acro-narcotic poison; as external application used in the form of liniment for rheumatism, sprains, &c.; camphor water or julep is a vehicle for other medicines; spirits of camphor are prepared by dissolving one drachm of camphor in one ounce and one drachm of rectified spirits of wine. Gives to pharm. preparations :—aqua camphoræ, spiritus camphoræ, tinctura camphoræ cum opio, linimentum camphoræ, linimentum camphoræ compositum; officinal. In veterinary practice used in fever and for destroying worms in cancer. Camphor is constantly burnt in ceremonies; placed among clothes as insectifuge. The above is the ordinary or China camphor. Borneo or Sumatra or green camphor comes from Dryobalanops aromatica, gærtn.; natives consider this more highly medicinal than the ordinary. Sumatra camphor is often called Barus camphor from town of that name and this has the highest reputation. Camphor may also be procured from thyme, marjoram, ginger, sage, &c. The so called Mercury camphor is rascapoor [q.v.], an impure sub-chloride of mercury. Vemana has a verse :—ఉప్పు కప్పురంబు నొక్క పోలికనుండు; చూడ చూడ రుచుల జాడ వేరు; పురుషులందు పుణ్య పురుషులు వేరయా, వి— "Salt and camphor are of one semblance, but if you examine "and try the flavors, their tastes are diverse; thus do the excellent differ from other men."——Camphor creeper (कर्पूरवल्ली - karpúravallí, San.). From smell. Same as Country lavender or Country borage.——Camphor grass (கற்பூரப்புல் - karppúrappul, Tam.). From fragrance. Same as Lemon grass [q.v.].——Camphor leaf (कर्पूरपत्त्र - karpúrapattra, San.). From flavor. Same as Indian sage.——Camphor root (عروق الكافور - urúkulkáfúr, Ar.). From (urúk, ar. roots + káfúr, ar. camphor). Same as Long zedoary.——Camphor tomato (కర్పూరవంగ - karpúravanga, Tel.). From flavor. Same as Europe brinjaul or tomato.——Camphor tree (கற்பூரமரம் - karppúramaram, Tam.). From smell and appearance of back of leaves. Same as Blue gum.——Camphor turmeric (کپور هلدی - kapúrhaldí, Hind.). From smell. Same as Long zedoary.

CANACAM (కనకము - kanakamu, Tel.). Means gold. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name of females and males [bungaur, ponnoo, tungam]. Similar is Canacaratnam meaning gold gem; Canacasabhaupaty from shiva, lord of the golden hall at chidambaram; Canacasabhay from the sacred hall itself. Ponnambalam is the same among non-bramins [peyar].

CANAM (कण - kana, San.). From (kan, san. to grow small). Atom.——Canaudan (कणाद - kanáda, San.). From (above + ada, san. eater); from his abstemious habit. Author of the ancient Veishaishicam philosophy, or physical branch extension of Nyauyam [q.v.]. He is also called Ooloocan, meaning owl, probably in derision. See vol. I (74).——Canishtam (कनिष्ठ - kanisht'ha, San.). Literally least. x in the algebraic form $ax^2 + b = y^2$.——Canwa (कण्व - kanva, San.). One of the very ancient rishies. Recently the earliest writer on Teloogoo grammar; at court of one Andhra roya on banks of Godavery. Ancient royal dynasty in the modern Behar; see vol. I (117), (132) [charitram].

CANAMA (కనుమ - kanama, Tel.). From (kanu, tel. to see). Ravine or hill pass [ghaut]. A breach in the bank of a tank, whether accidental or artificial. Suffix in place names, as Raupore canama [canavye, cundy].

CANARA (ಕನ್ನಡ - kannada, Can.). From (karnáta, san. from karu, tam. black + nádu, tam. country). Anglo-indian name for part of west coast which lies below ghauts from Mount delly northward to Goa territory. Comprises two British districts N. and S. canara, the latter in this Presidency. Term unknown to the natives in this sense. The name meaning black country, from black cotton soil [regar] prevailing there, was a corruption of Carnautacam [carnatic]. Throughout sixteenth century applied to country above ghauts, sometimes even to the whole kingdom of Narsingam or Vijianugger. Gradually, and owing to local application at Goa, where the natives were from the first known to the Portuguese as Canarija, the name became appropriated to the low country on the coast between Goa and Malabar, which was subject to the kingdom in question; much in the same way that Carratic came at a later date to be misapplied on other side of peninsula. The tract is bounded on the north by Goa; east by Mysore and Coorg; south by Coorg and Malabar; west by the Arabian sea. It lies between lat. 12° 11′ to 15° 30′; long. 74° 9′ to 75° 44′, and has an area of 7,720 square miles. The Jeinas, who have nearly vanished from many other parts of India, are here still numerous. The early history is obscure. Soon after middle of last century it fell into hands of Hyder ally; and on fall of his son Tippoo in 1799 it passed to the East india company [charitram].——Canarese (ಕನ್ನಡ - kannada, Can.). From (kár, tam. black + nádu, tam. country). English name for the Carnauta or as it was later called Cannada language; the language of the Carnatic [q.v.]. The term Carnautam was once a generic term, including both the Teloogoo and Canarese people and their languages. Then the Teloogoo people branched off. There are in the Presidency about 1,300,000 persons who talk Canarese; most in Canara, Coimbatore, and Salem. See vol. I (50) [bhaushay].

CANAVAN (கணவன் - kanavan, Tam.). From (kan, tam. eye). Master. Vishnoo.

CANAVUTTAM (கணவட்டம் - kanavattam, Tam.). From (kshana, san. moment + vattam, tam. circle); fast-going. The royal Paundy horse emblem. See vol. I (119).

CANAVYE (கணவாய் - kanaváy, Tam.). A gap or dip in a mountain range, by which travellers can pass at the lowest level from one side to the other. For principal passes see Ghaut [canama].

CANCHOOLYA (கஞ்சுளிய - kañjuliya, Tam.). From (kanjuli, tam. jacket). A class of votaries of Angauly. See vol. I (87).

CANDAHAR (गान्धार - gándhára, San.; قندهار - kandahár, Hind.). The town of afghanistaun; was an ancient province.——Candahar tree (गान्धारी - gandhárí, San.; قندهاری - kandahárí, Hind.). Same as Cashmere tree.

CANDEL (கண்டல் - kandal, Tam.). The tree, kandelia rheedii, w. & a. Its juice is astringent and used to dye sailcloths, boat-ropes, fishing-nets to preserve them from decay. Poo candel is variety bearing fragrant flowers; pey candel is a wild one.——Candel bark (കണ്ടൽതൊലി - kantaltoli, Mal.; கண்டற்பட்டை - kandarbattai, Tam.). Mal. from (kantal, mal. the tree, kandelia rheedii, w. and a. + toli, mal. bark). Title otherwise Mangrove bark. Used for tanning [chamrah]. The barks known in S. india as Mangrove bark are from following trees:—Avicennia officinalis, Bruguiera gymnorhiza, Ceriops candolleana, Ceriops roxburghiana, Kandelia rheedii, Rhizophora mucronata. See gloss. paragraphs.

CANDY (खण्डशर्करा - khandasharkará, San.; قند - kand, Ar.; مصری - misri, Hind.; ಕಲ್ಕಂಡ - kalkanda, Can.; కలకండ - kalakanda, Tel.; കൽക്കണ്ടു - kalkantu, Mal.; கற்கண்டு - kargandu, Tam.). Title from arabic. San. from (khanda, san. piece + sharkará, san. sugar); sugar in pieces. Ar. from (khanda, san. piece). Hind. means sugar of egypt, misr, through which country it was imported into turkey. Drav. means stone + piece. Crystal, especially of cane sugar [q.v.].

Same as Tel. pootty in Ganjam and Vizagapatam, Tam. bhauram.—"b" Measure of capacity. 20 colagams = 1 candy [alavay, 3]. Bellary and Mysore. In Coimbatore a candy is 24 shalagays. In some Teloogoo districts candy is used for pootty. Same as cundaga.—"c" Cubic measure. Approximate actual value, 1 candy = 12½ cubic feet. Used in Malabar in measuring wood. It is a cube measuring a kole or 28¼ inches to the side. The cubical contents of a block of wood is obtained there by multiplying half the circumference of the block reduced to koles, by its length.—"d" Superficial measure. 120 beegahs = 1 candy [alavay, 2]. Approximate actual value, 1 candy = 75 acres. Same as Hind. chauver.

CANDY (కంది - kandi, Tel.). From (kandi, tel. to redden). Formerly common Anglo-indian for dholl.

CANGOTE (കണ്ണവം - kannavam, Mal.). Inflected form from (kan, mal. eye + akam, mal. abode); beautiful abode. Village; Malabar dist., Cottayam tal.; from Calicut N.W. 41 miles; from Tellicherry N.E. 13 miles. Large hilly tract, formerly a military post. Small redoubt on a hill in ruins. Good bungalow for travellers and substantial stone-bridge thrown over small river by pioneers in 1822-23. Celebrated pagoda, known as Toticalam, about one mile north-north-west of Cangote. There are three rock-cut caves in Toticalam, paved with bricks. Mosque in the amshom known as Cangote mosque. The rich jenmy known as Cangote numbiyaur joined rebellious Pychy rajah of Cottayam and disturbed the peace of the talook for a series of years. He eventually fell into the hands of the authorities and was hanged on the hill near the bungalow, his estate being declared escheated in 1805. Cangote escheat is of large extent and lies in Cangote and Manattana amshoms. The forests are peopled by Cooritchiyar.

CANIGHERRY (కనిగిరి - kanigiri,* Tel.). From (khani, san. mine of precious stones + giri, san. mountain). Tel. also (kanakagirivijayamártándadurgamu), meaning gold + hill + vijayamartaundan, meaning the prosperous sun, the local name of shiva + hill fort. Sanscrit name (kanakagiri), means gold + mountain.——(1) Talook, Nellore district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 150. Area 1,014 square miles. N. central inland part of district. Lat. 15° 1′ to 15° 35′ N.; long. 79° 07′ to 79° 44′ E. Separated on E. from Cundoocore talook by the Choondy hills; from Cumbum talook of Kurnool district on W. by the Veligondas [q.v.]; Zemindarry talook of Podily, belonging to Vencatagherry, skirts the northern boundary; south bordered by Oodayagherry talook. Portion belongs to the Vencatagherry and Calastry zemindarries respectively, and the villages thereof are interspersed throughout all parts of the talook. In eighteenth century Hyder ally invaded Nizam's dominions, and took possession of the talook, destroying town and fort of Canigherry. On defeat of Tippoo it reverted to Nizam, who afterwards gave it to the English with the Ceded districts [q.v.]. It was first attached to Cuddapah district, then transferred to Kurnool, and finally made part of Nellore district. The most barren talook in the district, though palmyra trees are abundant in N.W. corner. Intersected by two streams, the Munnair and the Palair. Rock hills abound. Soil, red loam. Coarse cloths such as doopty [q.v.] sheets and female white cloths manufactured to a large extent. These, ghee and lamp oil seeds, are exported to Nellore, Naidoopett and Calastry, &c., by road. Most of the paddy [q.v.] consumed in the talook is imported from the villages of Cauvaly, Cundoocore and Nellore talooks. Cloths, iron [auham] and sundry articles, &c., are received from Madras viâ Buckingham canal to Oollipollem and thence by road and bandy tracts to different principal villages. Jaggery [q.v.], cloths, and tamarind [q.v.] from Vellore, pulses [dholl] from Ongole, chillies [q.v.] and tobacco [pogauk] from Guntoor, are also largely imported. Petty merchants buy brass vessels manufactured at Meilavaram and Wonipenta and sell in the northern talooks from village to village. There are nine tanks. Nundanavanam the largest, below the Veligonda range. In almost all the villages there is garden cultivation with the aid of private wells. Camping grounds:—Canigherry, Gogoolpully, Hajipooram, Mogullore, Pamoor, Pedda alvalapaud, Pedda irlapaud, Vaimlapaud. Principal trig. stations:—Lingamgoonta, Pitcherlacondah, Tellanullamala. CANNADA (ಕನ್ನಡ - kannada, Can.). Later name for the Canarese language [bhaushay].——Cannaudam (கன்னடம் - kannádam, Tam.). Tamul for the Canarese country [bhoogolashastram].

CANNANORE * (കണ്ണൂര് - kannúr, Mal.). From (kannu, mal. eye + úr, mal. village); beautiful village. Sanscrit name (vélápuri), meaning sea-shore + town.—"a" Deputy tahsildarry. Malabar district. Pay Rs. 100.—"b" Town, Port, a Native regiment and European detachment are stationed here, Cantonment, Municipality, Head-quarters of talook, Deputy tahsildar and District moonsif, Lighthouse. Malabar dist., Chiracal tal.; pop. 27,418; lat. 11° 52′; long. 75° 25′; from Belliapatam S. 4¾ miles; from Bombay S.S.E. 508 miles; from Calicut N.N.W. 50 miles; from Chiracal S. 3½ miles; from Madras W.S.W. 345 miles; from Malapooram N.W. 72 miles; from Manantoddy W. 42 miles; from Palghaut N.W. 113 miles; from Ponnany N.N.W. 82 miles; from Tellicherry N.W. 11 miles. Populous sea-port of great antiquity. On north of a small bay, open to south, but sheltered on west by a bluff headland running north and south and surmounted by a fort and other buildings which render it easily distinguishable at sea. The port limits are:—north boundary pillar one mile north of the fort; south, boundary pillar two miles south of the fort; east, sea-shore between them to within fifty yards of high-water mark, spring tides; west, space enclosed by two lines running due west from the boundary pillars to nine fathoms water. Light on the fort rampart near the beach; lat. 11° 51′ 10″; long. 75° 21′ 45″; red; fixed, 6 to 8 miles range; visible from all directions seaward. Small masonry tower of a light yellow color. The best anchorage for large vessels in the roads is with the flagstaff N.E. by N. to N.E. by E. in from 5½ to 6 fathoms and about 2½ miles off shore. Small coasting craft find shelter in the bay under guns of fort. According to the legend of the partition of his dominions by Cherma permaul, Cannanore was included in the kingdom of the Colattiry or Chiracal rajahs, to whom it belonged till the invasion of Malabar by Hyder ally. In 1501 Cabral landed here, and being well received planted a colony. In 1505 later Vasco da Gama erected a factory. Fort St. Angelo on the promontory north of the bay, commanding the native town and south-east of the cantonment was built by the Portuguese. In 1656 the Dutch effected a settlement, for the protection of which they built the present fort, which they occupied till 1766, when it fell into the hands of Mysore troops. In 1784 Cannanore was captured by the British, and the reigning princess became tributary to the East india company. It was on the conclusion of the treaty of Mangalore given back to the Moplah family. In 1791 having become the property of Tippoo, it was besieged and taken by the British. Since that date it has remained in British hands. The descendant of the old Cannanore moplah sultans, Ally rajah, resides in the east of the bay. Within the Moplah quarter stands the fishing village of Tye, with a Roman catholic chapel, once a Portuguese factory. Modern trade is principally in pepper, grain, timber, and cocoanuts; vast quantities of the last are exported northwards. Anglican, German, and Roman catholic missions are established here, with schools attached. Cotton fabrics are manufactured chiefly by the mercantile branch of the German mission. A bazaar known as Tekky bazaar, is used by the native troops. About three miles north of the fort is the Central jail at Oodayancoonn. The Cannanore town was once the residence of the Chiracal rajah and contained a village known as Caunattore with 390 Numboory houses, almost all of which have now become extinct. The following are the distances from Cannanore to different places:—

CANNAUD (కన్నాడు - kannádu, Tel.). From (kanama, tel. defile + nádu, tel. country). Ancient name for hilly portion of Kurnool district, distinguishing from Renaud, black cotton land of adjoining Coondair valley.

CANNING SEAT (கானிங்சீட்டு - káningsíttu, Tam.). After Lady Canning. A prominent point on Dolphin's Nose road, with views over Coimbatore plains. Neilgherry district. Parangi-naud division; lat. 11° 22′; long. 76° 53′; from Coonoor E.N.E. 3 miles.

CANOO (కను - kanu, Tel.). Prominent.——Canoogonda (కనుగొండ - kanugonda, Tel.). From (above + konda, tel. hill). Hill; Cuddapah dist., Madanapully tal. Two sculptured gatekeepers or Dwaura paulacans [q.v.] of temple on the hill. Trig. station in lat. 13° 46′ 59·05″; long. 78° 20′ 28·44″; from Peddapolliem N. 1½ miles.

CANOON (قانون - kánún, Ar.). From Greek κανών. A rule, canon.——Canoongo (قانونگو - kánúngo, Hind.). From (above + go, pers. who speaks). An expounder of the laws, but applied especially to village accountant [curnum]. See vol. I, 112.——Canoon i fittib (قانون فی الطب - kánúnifittib, Hind.). From (above + fi, ar. in + tibb, ar. medicine). Arabic work known in Europe as Canons of Avicenna. Author was Aboo ally ool hoossein ben abd oollah ibn e seenah; born in Bokhara, A.D. 980, and died at Hamadaun in Persia, A.D. 1036. Treats of medicine and diseases in general, simple and compound medicine, their qualities and virtues, also of anatomy; consists of five books.

CANOOPURTY (కనుపర్తి - kanuparti, * Tel.). From (kanaka, san. gold + parti, tel. village). Sanscrit name (kanakapuri), meaning gold + city. Village, Salt factory; Nellore dist., Ongole tal.; pop. 3,838; acres 10,643; lat. 15° 35′; long. 80° 15′; from Madras N. 169 miles; from Motoopully S.S.W. 10½ miles; from Nellore N. 78½ miles; from Ongole E.N.E. 12½ miles; from Paudarty N.N.E. 8½ miles. Close to Buckingham canal. Founded by a Rajah, one Oodauyana. Said to have been destroyed by an inundation of the sea, and ninety-nine temples entirely buried. In many places the bull and lingam [q.v.] are carved on the rocks, and there is an immense stone shausanam [q.v.] with an inscription. Half hidden in the sand are several sculptured nundies and lingams. Shiva temple of Yeleshwara-sawmy of great antiquity and rebuilt one hundred and twenty years ago. Villagers say that opposite to this temple there lies buried in the sand a very large bell-metal chariot at the site of a still older temple.

Author of two works; viz., original Saunkhya sootrams, sometimes called Saunkhya pravachanam, comprising 526 aphorisms in six books; and a short work called Tatwa samausam or Compendium of principles [matam]. One of the forty-nine Madura professors [madura college].

CAR (کار - kár, Pers.). Work [caur].——Caravan (کاروان - kárwán, Hind.). From (above + ván, pers. suffix of possession). A string of travellers with beasts of burden [taundah].——Caravansary (کاروان سرائی - kárwánsarái, Hind.). From (above + sarái, pers. building). An inn.——Carbaur (کاروبار - károbár, Hind.). From (above + bár, pers. load). Business, affairs. Carbaury is a manager.——Carcoon (کارکن - kárkun, Hind.). From (above + kun, pers. doer). An inferior revenue officer in charge of a taraf, or division of a talook, corresponding to modern Revenue inspector. See vol. I, 112.

CAR (கரு - karu, Tam.). Black [calam, caulam, caur].——Caraid (కరేడు - karédu, Tel.). From (kari, tel. black + vídu, tel. town). Sanscrit by corruption (kharapuri), meaning kharan, the raucshasan + town. Village, Port; Nellore dist., Cundoocore tal.; pop. 3,574; acres 12,550; lat. 15° 11′; long. 80° 06′; from Cundoocore E. 10¼ miles; from Nellore N. 51 miles. Hardly any trade by sea now. Noted for betel gardens. Ancient temples of Caulahasteeshwara sawmy, Keshava sawmy, Veerabhadra sawmy. In braminical tradition Kharan brother-in-law of Ravanan was killed by Rama here. Noted for dyeing [shauyam] cloths. Large tank. Festival of Shiva in February.——Carangooly (கருங்குழி - karunguzhi, Tel. karunguli *). From (karumai, tam. blackness + kuzhi, tam. pit). Town; Chingleput dist., Madrantacam tal.; pop. 3,887; acres 1,205; lat. 12° 32′; long. 79° 57; from Madrantacam N.N.E. 2¼ miles; from Sydapett S.W. 39 miles; from the sea W. 18 miles. At the forty-eighth mile stone on the great southern trunk road from Madras. Former cusbah of talook of same name, which included roughly speaking eastern half of Madrantacam talook. On banks of channel in an old mango tope stands travellers' bungalow. Was head-quarters of collectorate until 1825, when removed to Conjeeveram. The fort was occupied during Anglo-french wars of the Carnatic [q.v.], being regarded as an outpost of Chingleput. These two places, with Wandiwash and Ootramallore, formed a quadrilateral on the line of attack between Madras and Pondicherry. As early as 1755 it was a point of dispute. In 1757 it was evacuated by English in the face of advancing French troops. The following year the English attempted to recover it by surprise, but were repulsed with loss; a failure which was repeated in 1759. A few months later Colonel Coote, after a few days' bombardment, captured the fort. This was the first decisive action in the successful campaign of 1759-60, which led to the victory of Wandiwash. During Hyder's invasion of the district in 1780, Carangooly, with other forts in the Carnatic, fell into his hands. On the 19th January 1781 it was captured by the English and thereafter remained in the undisturbed possession of the British. Its ramparts for some time formed a quarry for stones. The fortifications were destroyed in 1782. A Mahomedan mosque inside the fort is built of the materials of a Hindoo temple and contains a Chola inscription. On the hill behind the house are remains of two rude stone redoubts connected by a way protected by a stone wall. These are clearly native works. Trig. station in lat. 12° 32′ 09·05″; long. 79° 55′ 57·44″; height 412 feet; from Madrantacam N.N.E. miles; from the sea W. 17 miles.——Caratchy (करकटल karakatla, Mahr.; కరెప - karipe, Tel.; എഴുത്തക്കോറ - ezhuttam kóra, Mal.; கராச்சி - karaççi, Tam.). From (kár, tam. black + nádu, tam. country). In allusion to the black regady [regar] soil. The term is found in Varauha mibiran. There are other black countries in this sense; tracts of black soil being found scattered throughout the valley of the Kistna, and occupying the lower plains and flats of Coimbatore, Salem, Madura, Tanjore, Ramnaud and Tinnevelly:—"a" The Carnatic proper may be defined as bounded:—to the south by the plateau of Mysore; to the east by a line passing through Nundidroog, Penoocondah, Adony, Ryechore, and Goolburga to Beedar, its most northern point; to the north by an irregular line passing from Beedar by Calyuun, Sholapore, Punderpoor, and Kolhapore to Gheriah, or Viziadroog, on the sea. The whole tract is comprised between latitude 12° and 18°, and longitude 73½° and 77½°, forming an area of about 115,000 square miles and containing at present from ten to twelve millions of inhabitants. The most ancient history is almost unknown. The country was probably divided between princes of the Chera and Cadamba families. The Chalookya family of Calyuun, the Yaudava princes of Chundragherry, and the Ganapaty princes of Warangal had probably small portions. About the tenth century the country fell into the hands of the Cholas. About the middle of the eleventh century the family of the Ballaula appears to have arisen. The Vijianugger dynasty, which came into power about 1336 and survived till 1565, conquered the whole of the Peninsula south of the Toongabudra river. They were completely overthrown by the Mahomedans in 1565, and retired first to Penoocondah, and then to Chundragherry, one branch of the family settling at Anagoondy.—"b" The Nawaubs of Arcot, were known as Nawaubs of the Carnautaca payeen ghaut, or that adjunct to the Carnatic proper which lay below ghauts. But the English in error dropped the distinctive term Payeen ghaut [q.v.] and applied the unmeaning term Carnatic to the whole country below the ghauts on the eastern side of the Peninsula. By just the same error the term Canara [q.v.] was extended to the country below the Western ghauts. The English carnatic was divided into Southern, Central and Northern. The first is the country S. of Coleroon; comprising Poodoocottah, Tinnevelly, Madura, part of Trichinopoly, and Tanjore. Central carnatic is the country between Coleroon and Pennair comprising the larger portion of Trichinopoly, the whole of North and South arcot, Chingleput and a section of Nellore. Northern carnatic was limited by the Pennair on one extremity, and Guntoor on the other, including within it the remainder of Nellore. The English carnatic extended from lat. 8° 10′ to lat. 16°, and from the sea on the east to long. 77° 20′ on the west. See vol. I (176).—"c" In 1801 the title of Nawaub of the Carnatic became nominal, the British Government obtaining all actual power. The last Nawaub dying in 1855 without heirs, the titular dignity expired. See vol. I, 43 [charitram].——Carnautacam (कर्णाटक - karnátaka, San.). Otherwise Carnautam. Old name for the Canarese people; the inhabitants of the proper Carnatic.——Carnautaca rajakkal (கருணாடகராசாக்கள் - karunádagarásákkal, Tam.). From (karnátaka, san. the country + rájá, san. king). Modern work. A Savistaura charitram, or general history being original history of peninsula, and the only one of its kind. Author Narayanan of the Ananta kone or poligar race of Jinjee. Composed while Lord W. Bentinck was Governor of Madras. It embraces period from commencement of Kalyoog corresponding with installation of Paricshit, son of Abhimanyan and grandson of Arjoonan, down to Kalyoog 4908, being Acshayam year of the Hindoo cycle; era of Vicramadityan 1864, Shalivahana saca 1729, A.D. 1807-8. The first caundam, on primeval matters. The Bramhaundam, or mundane egg; the greater and lesser periods; periodical deluge; Avatars of Vishnoo; birth of Krishnan, about 100 years before end of Dwaupar yoog, and his building Dwarca, on sea coast, and reigning there. Second caundam deals with royal line of Hastinapooram. Accounts of Pandavas, and other persons, similar to Mahabhaurat. A long lapse of time given to the descendants; Vicramadityan conquered and ended that race. Kalyoog 3700 is fixed as commencement of Hijra. Hindoo kings ruled 591 years after that period. Rise of Mahomedan ascendancy. Third caundam. Account of Vilauyet or original country of the Mahomedans. Rise of Mahomed. Invasion of Delhi from Persia. Extension of irruption into Deccan. Plunder of Carnautacam country, extending to Seringapatam. Ramaunoojan was then at Seringapatam. Another invasion in the year of the Hijra 622. Fourth caundam on Delhi affairs. Fifth caundam gives account of Timur, Acbar, Jehaungeer. Aurungzeeb sent Zoolfacar khan to conquer the Carnatic; fought with the Mahrattas, took Jinjee. Davood shah made Killadar of Jinjee. Sixth caundam concerning Mahrattas, and Tooloovam country, and upper Carnautaca desham. A shepherd of the Coorumba tribe discovered treasure, raised troops, and laid the foundation of Anagoondy, and afterwards of Vijianugger. He was named Pravada deva royel. Seventh caundam on the Hassan dynasty of the Deccan kingdom. Eighth caundam concerning lower Carnautacam country. Ascendancy gained by the Sheivas. Notice of Tamul poets; Cumban, Poogazhendy, Ottacoottan. Cumban composed his poetical version of the Ramayanam in Shal. Sac. 807. Notice of some Chola kings. Veishnava teacher Ramaunoojan flourished Shal. Sac. 939. Tribhoovana chuckravurty became Soondra paundy tevar, Fusly 460. Veera paundya cholan was his son. Ramaunoojan lived in his time. Notice of first inroad made by Mahomedans into Carnatic. Many details concerning Ramaunoojan. Caricara cholan flourished 570 Fusly. Villipoottooran, a poet in the Congoo desham, translated Mahabhaurat into Tamul verse, at promised reward of five gold hoons [q.v.] each stanza on his task being finished, king gave him only five fanams [q.v.] each stanza. Origin of Jinjee. A treasure was discovered by one Ananta kone, a shepherd, who raised troops therewith; and getting aid from other chiefs, established himself as a rajah, Jinjee being his capital; this was Fusly 600. He cut a canal for irrigation near Trinomallee, which in the course of time having become filled up, was restored by Nawaub wallajah, Fusly 1184. Ananta kone gave to his tribe the name of Shamanar. He was succeeded by Krishna kone, Fusly 650 and Conairy kone, Fusly 680 both of them built sacred edifices. His son was Govinda kone Fusly 700. Pulliya kone, Fusly 720, made roads, choultries, &c. The dynasty now gave way before a Coorumba tribe named Vadooga yiday or north country shepherds. The first king of this tribe was Gopy lingan, Fusly 740. He built a brick fort at Shendamungalam. He formed some tanks, and left others unfinished. In his time, his feudatories built several forts with bricks in different places, as Aspore, Pelagooppore, Cooppamgolore, &c. He formed channels to bring down streams for irrigation from mountain-springs; among which the one named Gopy lingan shoonay remains to this day. He ruled with great equity. Afterwards, Fusly 800, Narsinga wodeyar became viceroy. The Maha royer of Anagoondy, Vijianugger, and Penoocondah sent an army against the aforesaid Gopy lingan, and having conquered the country he delivered it over to Narsinga wodeyar, to be held sending tribute to the royer. About this time the rajah of Wandiwash named Bhoopaty roya wodeyar ruled according to an inscription dated in Shal. Sac. 1341. Veera vijaya royer was also a ruler over that district. Vellaula royer ruled Fusly 750. He made additions to the shrine at Trinomallee. He paid tribute to the royer. After he fell the country being divided among petty chiefs. The royer sent an army into the Carnatic, which consisted of 100,000 men under command of Veiyyappa naick, Toopauky krishnappa naick, Vijaya raghavanaickar, and Vencatappa naickar. In Fusly 870, Veiyyappa naick came and collected tribute extensively. He encamped near Vellore. The chief at Chittore, and other chiefs of the Tondaimundalam, had an interview with him. He fixed their rate of tribute. Mention is made among others of Bomma reddy of Calastry. The royer's general afterwards went to Jinjee. The chiefs of the Chola mundalam had an interview with him, and their tribute was also settled. Veiyyappa naick continued at Jinjee with his army. He gave it in charge to the subordinate generals to go and levy tribute on the Paundyam, Cholam and Cheram kingdoms. In Tanjore, Trichinopoly, Madura and Tirnagary, the kings respectfully answered to the demand. Thus the eastern Carnautacam, as distinguished from Mysore, &c., became subject to the royer. He derived three crores of rupees from this country, and in consequence he divided the whole into three parts, under three viceroys. Krishnappa naick at Jinjee governed the country from Nellore to Coleroon, Vijayaraghavan at Tanjore governed the fertile country washed by the Cauvery river, and to Vencatappa naickar was assigned the country south of the latter. Notices follow of the proceedings of these viceroys. A Mahomedan coalition was formed against the royer. The principal viceroy of the latter was recalled, with his troops; and Toopauky naick thenceforward assumed independency at Jinjee. His successors with their dates and proceedings are mentioned. The last of them Appa naickar is described as weak and vicious to an extreme. He came to the throne, Fusly 1030, and in his time a Mahomedan confederacy, the formation of which is ascribed to the treachery of Bomma rajah of Chingleput, brought a deluge of Mahomedan troops into the lower Carnatic. The siege of Jinjee, and its capture, after great resistance are described with considerable force and spirit, and at much length, as the author is writing about his native place. The proceedings of Vijayaraghavan at Tanjore are also alluded to; he purchased peace. Trimal naickar of Madura by the assistance of the Cullar routed and repelled the Mahomedans, who returned discomfited to Jinjee. Irruption of the Mahrattas into the country, seizure of Tanjore, tribute imposed by them on other places. Proceedings of Shivajee in the lower Carnatic. Arrival of the English at Chennaputnam. Notice of other Europeans. From this time forwards, there is a minute and generally correct detail of the proceedings of the English and French in connexion with the Nawaub on the one part, and Chundah sahib, &c., on the other part. The French capture of Jinjee is circumstantially stated. The whole of the connected and subsequent transactions are interwoven with details as to motives on the part of native princes, little known to English historians. Hyder ally and Tippoo's proceedings are fully described, and the narrative closes practically with final capture of Seringapatam and its celebration at Madras [charitram].——Carnautam (कर्णाट - karnáta, San.). CARANAM (करण - karana, San.). From (kri, san. to do).— "a" Bond [pramaunam]. Specifically in Malabar the title-deed by which land is transferred or acquired under the Jenm system of land tenure. The six kinds of Caranams culminating in acquired Jenm are according to old book authorities:—Cooyicaunom, Caunom, Otty, Otticoompooram, Coodimaneer or neermoothal or jenmpanayam, and Neerattipair or full jenm. The first is a sort of cowle [q.v.] for reclaiming waste land and contains slight proprietorship. The second is a lease. The third Otty, is really mortgage. The fourth and fifth are cases where the mortgagor has less and less rights. The sixth is complete transfer of jenm. According to some authorities, between Otty and Otticoompooram there is another Keividotty. By a peculiar Malabar inversion the deeds are called Caranamattipair, not Attipair caranam; and so on. For a sketch of the modern aspects of the whole question of land transferred, see vol. II, 104. The transactions are there viewed from the point of view of the tenant as merely in succession Veroompanttom or plain lease, Cannom or quasi-mortgage, Otty or real mortgage, and Neerattipair or sale of jenm.—"b" The proper form of Curnum [q.v.].—"c" An astrological element importing the time during which the moon's motion from the sun amounts to 6°, and being half of an astrological Tity [caulam, 4]. The moon's synodical revolution is divided into eleven Caranams, seven of which are ordinary and movable, called Charam; and four extraordinary and fixed, called Stiram. The following are the caranams:—Bavam, Baulavam, Cowlavam, Teitilam, Garam, Vanikk, Bhadram, Shacoony, Chatooshpadam, Naugavam, Kimstooghnam. The last four are the fixed. The first caranam begins when the moon is 6° from the sun; and the seven movable ones being eight times repeated in successive order, include 342°. The moon's synodical orbit [cacsham] being considered as divided into 360°, there remains 18° which she wants to complete her revolution [bhaganam]; and these are allotted to the eighth, ninth and tenth caranams; but the first six degrees [bhaugam] after the conjunction belong to the eleventh or last. Punchaungams [q.v.] give ending of each caranam [jyotisham].——Caranappiya (കരണപ്പിഴ - karanappizha, Mal.). From (above + pizha, mal. fine). A fine for having executed documents on an unstamped or insufficiently stamped leaf or paper.

CARAT (قيراط - kírát, Hind.). From arabic through greek. A bean of the κερατεία, carob tree, Ceratonia siliqua, l. For gold, the twenty-fourth part of any alloy. For diamonds [vajram] a fixed weight of $3\frac{1}{8}$ troy grains, divided into 4 carat grains and further sub-divisions. Cf. Retty.

CARAUR (قرار - karár, Hind.; కరారు - karáru, Tel.; கரார் - karár, Tam.). From (karra, ar. to settle). An agreement. Caraur nauma is an agreement deed [oodambadikay].

Title directly from arabic, indirectly from the country caria. San. from (su, san. well + su, san. to beget); curative [black jeerah, carolah]. Mahr. from hindostany. Pers. from (zírah, pers. cumin seed, cuminum cyminum, linn. + armaní, pers. armenian). Hind. from (viláiti, hind. foreign + zírah, pers. cumin seed + per, hind. tree). Can. from (sópu, can. caraway seed + gida, can. plant). Tel. from (síma, tel. foreign + sópu, tel. anise seed). Singh. from (rata, singh. foreign + duru, singh. cuminum cyminum, linn.). Tam. from (shímai, tam. foreign + shómbu, tam. anise seed, pimpinella anisum, linn.). Ar. also (kamúniarmaní), meaning armenian cumin; (kamúnirúmí), meaning turkish cumin. Pers. also (zírahirúmí), meaning turkish cumin; (zírahisiyáh), meaning black cumin. Tel. also (kékuvittulachettu), meaning cake seed plant. Tam. also (kḙkkuvirai), meaning cake seed, from use [tootty]. Greek κάρος, Latin careum, from Caria the country of the plant. Title otherwise Andalusian caraway, Armenian cumin, Black cumin, Cake seed, Foreign anise, Foreign cumin, Mountain cumin, Persian caraway, Roman cumin, Turkish cumin. Botanically Carum [ajmood] carui, linn., umbelliferæ [vricsham, 67]. Specific name from arabic. An erect plant not unlike a carrot [gaujar]; flowers small, whitish; not cultivated here, and introduced at a not very early date. Gives to pharm. dried fruit, carui fructus, active principle, a volatile oil; preparations, oleum carui, aqua carui; officinal; stomachic and carminative; an ingredient in many prescriptions. Seed is used parched and powdered to flavor curries, or raw and entire to put into cakes; also in flavoring drinks. The oil is used for scenting soap [sauboon]. For cumin see Jeerah.

CARAWILLA (کوریالا - kauriyálá, Hind.; سنپولادارسانپ - sampoládársámp, Dec.; ರಕ್ತಕನ್ನಡಾ - raktakannáde, Can.; කරවලා - karavalá, Singh.). Title and hindostany from singhalese. Dec. from (sampolá, hind. zigzag + sámp, hind. snake). Can. from (rakta, can. blood + kannu, can. eye + ádu, can. to play). Hypnale nepa, crotalidæ [pit piper], ophidii viperiformes, ophidia [sarpam], reptilia [sarpy, 29], of naturalists [jantoo]. The genus Hypnale has only this species. Alias Coluber nepa; Cophias hypnale; Hypnale carawala; Trigonocephalus hypnale, [illegible] zara. Found in Malabar, on the Anamullays and in Ceylon. The largest size is 19 inches, the tail accounting for two and a half inches. Head broad, triangular; snout covered with numerous small shields above, the crown of the head being normally shielded. Body of moderate length, with keeled scales in seventeen rows. Tail rather short, not prehensile, terminating in a short cervical scale. Brown or grey, or reddish olive, with a double dorsal series of brown or black spots; the spots of both sides sometimes confluent into cross-bands. Sides and belly finely marbled and dotted with brown or black. Upper lip brown or black, well marked by a darker line running from behind the eye to the angle of the mouth; a more or less distinct white or whitish temporal streak above the dark line, sometimes continued along the side of the neck, with an interrupted brown band above and below it. Chin and throat blackish and brownish variegated with yellow or grey. Sometimes specimens occur of a more uniform coloration; the dorsal spots on each side of the throat are the most constant markings, as described. The [illegible] carawilla is much dreaded, although its bite is but exceptionally fatal to man, and in such cases death does not occur before the lapse of some days.

CARAY (కర - kara, Tel.; கரை - karai, Tam.). From (karai, tam. to be dissolved). The natural shore of a sea, river, tank, &c. [cara]. Several portions of the Tinnevelly coast are called Caraychoott, the coast circuit; whilst a caste of fishermen farther north are called Caraiyaur, coast people. The last portion of two names of places mentioned by Ptolemy represents the Tamul, viz., καλαικαρίας and περιγκαρεῖ. If the latter word had been written περυγκαρεῖ, it would have been perfectly accurate Tamul, letter for letter, for great shore. In the Cauvery channels the riparian villages are divided into Carays for the supply of labor to maintain Coramboos [q.v.]. In the Balaghaut [q.v.] talooks of Salem district a Caray is a curnum's and moonsif's charge. Also merely a portion of land, especially a share in a Mirassy [q.v.]. So freehold or private property. See vol. I, 112. Also suffix in place names, especially in southern districts. As Ootancaray, meaning water spring + bank; Tencaray, meaning south + bank [garay]. Compare Anay, artificial bank.——Aroothy caray (அறுதிக்கரை - aruthikkarai, Tam.). From (aruthi, tam. decisive + above). Permanent shareholders in a village. Cf. mirassidar and pasuncaray.——Cara (കര - kara, Mal.; కర - kara, Tel.). Bank. Malabar houses are generally built round a tract of paddy land, and according to their bearings, are named Vadakkara, northern bank; Tekkara, southern bank, and so forth. Hence cara comes to mean hamlet, parish. The caras have no separate boundaries and no distinct names, but are comprehended in the deshom [q.v.]. They formerly contained husbandmen subordinate to the Deshavauly in military matters, and to the Tarwaud carnaven in civil matters. See vol. I, 112.——Caraicauran (கரைக்காரன் - karaikkáran, Tam.). From (above + káran, tam. possessor). Officer in charge of a caray: same as Caraidar, but with a Tamul instead of a Hindostany termination.——Caraicutt (கரைக்கட்டு - karaikkattu, Tam.). From (above + kattu, tam. protection). A buttress for strengthening a bank [bund].——Caraidar (கரைதாரன் - karaitháran, Tam.). From (above + dár, hind. agent). Monigar.——Caraiyaulan (கரையாளன் - karaiyálan, Tam.). Means landlord. Tribal title of Yidayar [peyar].——Caraiyaur (கரையான் - karaiyán, pers. sing.; கரையார் - karaiyár, pers. pl., Tam.). Caste-title. The καρέοι of Ptolemy. Division of the Shembadavar or fishermen. Numbers about 7,000.——Caramana (കരമന - karamana, Mal.). From (above + mana, mal. house). Meaning houses on the bank. Sanscrit name (kharávása), meaning kharan's abode. River; Travancore state, Trivandrum division, Nedoovengaud, Neittincara and Trivandrum talooks. Rises in the north-western slopes of Agastya cootam. After a winding irregular course, westerly at its rise, then southerly and lastly south-westerly it discharges itself into the sea at a small headland, termed Covalam, three miles from Poondora. It receives the Kiliyaur about three miles from the sea. Length, 41 miles. Confined by high and steep banks for the greater part of its course. Bed is rocky and narrow. Navigable for boats for about ten miles inland. During the rains rafts are floated down upon it from a great distance. Trivandrum and a large Bramin village are situated on its bank. Crossed by a strong stone bridge at the village from whence it takes its name. The Caramana bramin village is in lat. 8° 27′; long. 77° 01′; from Trivandrum S.E. 2¼ miles; from the sea E. 3 miles.——Caravepp (കരവെപ്പു - karaveppu, Mal.). From (above + veppu, mal. planting). Plantation on elevated ground, in contradistinction to Auttvepp [q.v.] on low ground.——Caraypottanaur (கரைப்பொட்டானாறு - karaippottánáru, Tam.). From (karai, tam. boundary + pódu, tam. to form + áru, tam. river). River that marked the boundary between Chera, Chola and Paundya kingdoms. River; Trichinopoly district, Moosiry talook. Flows through Cautpoottore mittah and several villages in extreme W. of talook, falling into Cauvery at Sheelapillapoottore, 12 miles W. of Moosiry. An embankment carries the boundary from the river southwards [carvauttaur].

CARBOY (قرابه - karábah, Hind.). Leather water jar [caraft].

CARCAM (कर्क - karka, San.). From (krí, san. to injure). A crab [raushy].——Carcasham (కర్కశము - karkashamu, Tel.). Literally rough. A dispute. Carcashabhoomy is a field, the boundary, &c., of which is in dispute or under litigation.——Carcatacam (कर्कटक - karkataka, San.). Fourth solar month [mausam] when the sun is in cancer the fourth sign [raushy].——Carcata shringy (कर्कटशृङ्गी - karkatashringí, San.). Crab or scorpion + horn. From appearance of galls. Plant name common to Pistacia integerrima, Rhus succedanea, Terminalia chebula; see gloss. paragraphs.

CARCAUROO (कर्कारु - karkáru, San.). Means white. Title otherwise Gourd, Pumpkin, Squash. Botanically the Cucurbita genus, cucurbitaceæ [vricsham, 62]. Large climbing herbs, hispid or hairy; leaves stalked, cordate, ovate, five-angular or lobed; flowers solitary, yellow, very large; fruit fleshy, indehiscent, often large; seeds ovoid or oblong, compressed, margined or not. The species best known to the natives are shown below. For melons and cucumbers see Oorvauroo; for water-melons see Indravully; for white pumpkin see Wax gourd. Tam. also (shittélam), meaning small cardamom; (irávadi); (iláñji). Greek καρδάμωμον. Title otherwise Cluster cardamom, Lesser cardamom, Long malabar cardamom, Officinal cardamom, Round cardamom, Small cardamom, True cardamom, White cardamom. Botanically Elettaria cardamomum, maton., zingiberaceæ [vricsham, 144]. Generic name from (élattari, mal. cardamom seed). Alias Alpinia cardamomum; Amomum cardamomum, ensal, racemosum, repens; Zingiber ensal. Ensal from singhalese. Native of india; stem perennial, reed-like, erect, jointed, 6–9 feet, enveloped in the sheaths of the leaves; leaves lanceolate, acuminate, sub-sessile, entire, 1–2 feet long; sheaths slightly villous; scapes several, flexuose, jointed, branched, 1–2 feet long; flowers alternate, short-stalked, solitary at each point of the racemes; calyx funnel-shaped, three-toothed, finely striated; corolla tube as long as the calyx; limb double; exterior portion of three oblong, concave, nearly equal divisions; inner lip obovate, longer than the exterior divisions, curled at the margins; apex three-lobed, marked in the centre with purple-violet stripes; capsule oval, somewhat three-sided, three-celled, three-valved; seeds numerous, angular; flowers pale-greenish white. Produces fruit for several years; grows abundantly, both wild and under cultivation, in the moist shady mountain forests of north canara, coorg and wynaud at elevation of 2,500 to 5,000, above sea; is truly wild in canara, and the anamullay, cochin and travancore forests; there is a small cardamom island in the laccadive group, west of malabar, inhabited by moplahs. The seeds as occurring are small, almost black, nearly triangular, with an aromatic taste, and a camphoraceous smell; semina cardamomi minoris, fructus cardamomi of chemists; a volatile oil is procured from the seeds by aqueous distillation, which has a strong aromatic taste, soluble in alcohol; it loses its odour and taste by being kept too long. The plant grows as a spontaneous seedling in woods of high land, cultivation being merely clearing of ground from trees; previous to commencement of rains cultivators ascend mountain sides, and seek a spot where cardamom plants are growing; here they make small clearings, in which the admission of light occasions the plant to develop in abundance; about two years after the first clearing the plants begin to flower, and five months later ripen some fruits, but a full crop is not got till at least a year after; the plants continue productive six or seven years. On the lower range of the pulney hills, near dindigul, at an elevation of about 5,000 feet above the sea, the cardamom plant is actually cultivated in the shade; the natives burn down the underwood, and clear away the small trees of the dense sholahs, which are damp all the year round; the cardamoms are then sown, and when a few inches high are planted out, either singly or in twos, under the shade of the large trees; they take five years before they bear fruit. In harvesting, the clusters of cardamom are plucked by hand; the stem being pruned to permit fresh stems to shoot; the capsules are separated and strewn on ground and dried in sun; that part of the stalk which adheres to the capsules is removed by heating the capsules over a fire in a pit; 100 pollums [q.v.] of capsules dried are sold at 7½ rupees. Plant gives to pharm. dried capsules, cardamomum, stimulant, carminative; preparation, tinctura cardamomi composita; also in british pharm. Used in veterinary practice in cordial preparations. Capsules are used by natives in flavoring sweetmeats and certain cooked dishes; also as a spice; sometimes chewed in betel-leaf [paun]. In commerce there are three varieties of cardamoms, the short, long-longs, and short-longs:—Short are more coarsely ribbed and of a brown color, and are called the malabar cardamoms or wynaud cardamoms, reckoned the best of the three; long-longs are more finely ribbed, and of a paler color, seeds are white and shrivelled; short-longs merely differ from the latter in being shorter or less pointed. It is usual to mix the several kinds together when ready for exportation. Large cardamoms distinct from these are furnished by species of Amomum. No other species here.——Cardamom hills (ഏലമല - élamala, Mal.). From (élam, mal. elettaria cardamomum, maton. + mala, mal. mountain). Range of hills. Travancore state, Cottayam division, Todoopoya, Mooatpoya, Meenachel, and Chungacherry talooks. Detached from W. ghauts. Divided roughly into Margary alam and Coonny alam groups, both very sparsely populated and unhealthy. Coonny alam, though lower lies within influence of the sea-breeze and enjoys rather better climate than Margary alam. The chief produce is cardamoms, which brings in a large revenue. They thrive best at 3,000 feet. A few small coffee-estates on southern slopes.——Ethiopian cardamom (قاقلۀ زنگی - kákilahizangí, Pers.). Tam. also (periyayélam), meaning large cardamom. Title otherwise Ethiopian cardamom, Greater cardamom, Jungle cardamom, Raven cardamom. Botanically Amomum subulatum, roxb., zingiberaceæ [vricsham, 144]. Capsules larger and inferior to real cardamom. The following is a description of capsules:—ovate or bluntly triangular, with a tuft of fibres at its smaller end, which is often destroyed in course of time; generally 1 inch in length and 1¼ inches in circumference; ribbed; coriaceous; and reddish brown color. And the following of the seeds:—small; almost round or bluntly angular; brown; and feebly aromatic in taste and smell, the latter not being distinct until they are bruised or chewed. Medicinally same as real cardamoms. The following are other Amomum cardamoms:—Moringa [q.v.] cardamom is amomum aromaticum, roxb.; flower middle-sized, pale-yellow, the tip tinged with red down the middle; capsule ovate, size of a nutmeg, similar to true cardamoms; native of chittagong. Java cardamom is amomum maximum, roxb.; introduced from malay islands; pungent taste but not so grateful as real cardamom. Grains of paradise are amomum melegueta, roscoe; otherwise malaguetta pepper; native of guinea; capsule oblong, somewhat triangular, beaked, of dark reddish-brown color, hairy, powerfully aromatic; the seeds are of bright golden brown color, excessively hot, acrid and aromatic; used in cattle medicines; used to give false strength to beer and other liquors.

CARICAUL (காரைக்கால் - káraikkál, Tam.). From (kárai, tam. thorny webera, canthium parviflorum, lamk. + kál, tam. channel). Greek κορύλη. French territory and town; Tanjore dist.; pop. 92,516; square miles 60; town, lat. 10° 55′ N.; long. 79° 52′ E.; from Combaconam E. 31 miles; from Madras S.S.W. 152 miles; from Mayavaram S.E. 16 miles; from Munnargoody N.E. 31 miles; from Nagore N. 8 miles; from Negapatam N. 12 miles; from Tanjore E.N.E. 47 miles; from Tranquebar S.S.W. 7½ miles. On the Coromandel coast about 1½ miles from the mouth of the Arasilaur. Central coast part of district. Light at the mouth of the river; lat. 10° 55′ 0″; long. 79° 50′ 35″; white; fixed; 9 miles; visible from all directions seaward; flagstaff; as a guide to the anchorage. The territory is bounded north, south, and west by Tanjore district; and east by Bay of Bengal. Eighty-one other villages ceded to them on 21st December 1749 by Rajah of Tanjore. French seized town in 1736, and constructed a fort, which was taken by the English on April 5, 1760, restored in 1765, again taken in 1778, and finally restored by treaty in 1814 on condition that no fortifications should be erected therein. By terms of treaty, no military are to be retained but such as required for police. Caricaul formed the base of Lally's operations against Tanjore. The town carries on a brisk trade with Ceylon, Europe, and the French colonies, exporting rice and importing chiefly European articles and timber. An administrateur, subordinate to Pondicherry, is in charge of settlement. There are also a colonial inspector, a commandant of troops, a judge and other officers. On the subject of inland customs a convention exists with the Madras government, and all salt consumed in French territory is by treaty purchased from the English. Revenue about 400,000 francs; expenditure about 277,000 francs. The soil is watered by six small rivers, branches of Cauvery. These periodically overflow their banks, fertilizing the country. Fourteen principal canals and their branches afford irrigation. The territory contains 108 villages. The following are besides Caricaul the principal villages, giving their names each to a sub-district.——Cotcherry (கோட்டுச்சேரி - kóttuççéri, Tam.). From (kódu, tam. boundary + shéri, tam. village); pop. 10,646.——Nedoongaud (நெடுங்காடு - nedungádu, Tam.). Means long forest; French, Nedouncadou; pop. 5,931; lat. 10° 58′; long. 79° 49′; from Caricaul N.W. 5 miles; from Tanjore E. 44 miles; from the sea W. 5½ miles.——Nullazhandore (நல்லழுந்தூர் - nallazhandúr, Tam.). CARM (كرم - karm, Ar.). From (karama, ar. to be generous). Gift. Prefixed to an alam forms a lacab; as Carm ally, gift of Ally [ism].——Careem (كريم - karím, Hind.). From (karama, ar. to be generous). Clement. An attribute of God [allah]. Common alam; as Careem beg, alam + slaumat. Also part of lacab; as Careem ood deen, generous in faith [ism].

CARMAM (कर्म - karma, San.). From (kri, san. to do). Action. Any act of piety; as sacrifice, marriage-ceremony, funeral obsequies. Fate as the consequence of acts. Action. Also action in a previous birth, good or evil, entailed on the soul and resulting in the enjoyments and sufferings of the present or a future state [samsauram]. Also religious action such as sacrifice, ablution, and especially as originating in the hope of future recompense and as opposed to speculative religion or spiritual knowledge; such rites are expounded in the augamams; they are thus one of the three means of salvation:—viz., carmam, works; bhacty, faith; and nyaunam or spiritual knowledge. Also simply periodical religious rites according to the rules of the shastrams; obligation imposed by peculiarities of tribe or occupation. In Booddhism, it is especially prominent and is the supreme controlling power of the universe, the instrumental cause of birth and death. It is by destroying this cause and getting rid of its operations by following a prescribed course of discipline, that men can ensure freedom of action, good or bad, and attain nirvaunam [q.v.] or liberation from existence [matam].——Carma caundam (कर्मकाण्ड - karmakánda, San.). From (above + kánda, san. section). Act; section. Exoteric portion of vedic writing [nyauna caundam].——Carmauntaram (कर्मान्तर - karmántara, San.). From (above + antara, san. interval). Supposed to be born of Coonty's ear. One of the Pandaras. There is a Tamul proverb:—கார்த்திகைக்கு மேல் மழையும் இல்லை, கர்ணனுக்கு மேல் கொடையும் இல்லை—"No rain "better than november, no liberality superior to that of carnan" [mahabhaurat, mausam].

CARNAVEN (കാരണവൻ - káranavan, Mal.). Means the originator. Managing head of a family or tarwaud [q.v.] in Malabar. Where the Makkatoyem [q.v.] law of descent of property is observed, he is the father, elder brother, &c. Where Maroomakkatoyem [q.v.] is observed, which is the usual case, he is the maternal uncle or eldest brother. As an exception to the general rule, in some few Shoodra families a custom exists by which the management is vested in the senior female in preference to the senior male member of the family [allyasantauna]. The Carnaven is the natural guardian of every member within the family. He alone can sue and be sued as the representative of the family. In the absence of fraud or collusion, a decree against the Carnaven as such is binding upon the other members of the family, although they are not parties to the suit. The Carnaven for the time being has an almost absolute control over the distribution of the family income and the family expenditure. He may delegate his powers of management, but he cannot, without the assent of the members of the family generally, assign his rights and privileges so as to be unable to resume them. His powers of management may however be limited by contract. Alienations by a Carnaven, whether in the form of gifts, sales or mortgages, are invalid unless made with the assent, express or implied, of the junior members. The whole of the tarwaud property is liable for a tarwaud debt properly incurred by the Carnaven [maryauday].——Carnavaty (കാരണവതി - káranavatti, Mal.). Female Carnaven.——Carnavenpaud (കാരണപ്പാട് - káranavappátu, Mal.). From (above + pátu, mal. rank, a title). Rank of a Carnaven.

CAROB (خروب - kharrúb, Ar.; كشك شامى - kisáishámí, Pers.; خرنوب - kharnúb, Hind.). Ar. from (kharaba, ar. devastated); desert plant. Pers. from (kisá, ar. cassia fistula, linn. + shám, ar. syria); from resemblance of fruits. Title otherwise Algaroba [manilla tamarind], Bread tree, Kharnoob, Locust bean, Locust tree, St. john's bean, St. john's bread, Syrian cassia. Called St. John's bread from the idea that the pod constituted the honey on which John the Baptist fed in the desert. The shells of the carob are supposed to have been the husks which the prodigal son desired to eat. Greek κερατωνία, Latin ceraunia, Spanish algaroba. Pods called keratia, from resemblance to a curved horn. Botanically Ceratonia siliqua, linn., leguminosæ [vricsham, 48]. Pod, 6 to 8 inches in length, an inch in breadth, flattened on the sides; seeds of a reddish brown immersed in a sweetish pulp; native of mediterranean coast; imported. The seed is the original of the jeweller's carat [q.v.]. Seeds used in coughs attended with much expectoration; had formerly a place in british materia medica; husk of pod antacrid, purgative, pectoral, and astringent. Saccharine matter in which seeds are imbedded is nutritious, forms an important constituent in patent cattle foods. Wood hard, heavy, excellent as fuel, and valued for cabinet-work.

Sanscrit name (garbhapurí), meaning interior + town.——(1) Talook, Coimbatore district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. Area 612 square miles. Population 201,044. Language Tamul. S.E. of district. Bounded N. by Erode talook, from which it is separated by Noyil; W. by Dharaupooram talook; S. by Dindigul talook of Madura and Coolitalay talook of Trichinopoly districts; E. by the Cauvery and Coolitalay talook of Trichinopoly. As the border talook between Trichinopoly and former Mysore territory, was once the scene of incessant military movements. Is open undulating plain with no hills and only a few insignificant rocky extrusions. The bulk is poor uplands with fertile bottoms and good wet lands along the borders of the river. The climate is very hot from March to June, after which time it is tempered by the south-west winds. Soils are of the usual gneissose and quartzose character, with beds of nodular or agglomerated limestone [choonam]. Towards the south the surface is little but hard kankar [q.v.] which however produces fair crops. White quartz crops up in many places, especially on road from Poogalore to Caroor. Dark grey gneiss of superior quality is quarried about three miles S.W. of Caroor. Soils are either red or grey, the former being ferruginous and the latter calcareous; there is no black soil; 7 per cent. of the dry land is classed as red loam and 93 per cent. as red sand; in wet lands about 98 per cent. is red loam and 2 per cent. red sand. The soil of the dry lands is generally inferior, but a regular and abundant rainfall, gives good crops. Pastures are fairly abundant, the usual grass being the indigenous coray [q.v.]. Hides [chamrah] are imported and exported, and there is trade in cloth, grain and money at Aravacoorchy, Caroor and Pullaputty. A considerable trade in grain and oil-seeds finds an outlet by Caroor railway station. Tanning [chamrah] used to be well represented at Caroor; it is still carried on at Pullaputty. Brass [pittalay] is made in Caroor. Products are almost entirely rural, save brass ware, leather and common cloths. Rivers are the Amravatty, Cauvery and Noyil. The Cauvery is not embanked in this talook below Vaungal, and, as the surface of the country is little above its ordinary full level, floods cause considerable damage by the sand which they deposit on the wet lands fed by the Neroor channel. This river feeds three good channels. The banks of the Amravatty are low, and the lands bordering the river are irrigated by anicuts and coramboos [q.v.] of sand and brushwood in the bed of the river. Nine channels are supplied by the Amravatty. The banks of the Noyil are high and steep, and its floods are very intermittent. It is useless for irrigation except by the Poogalore channel. The only considerable jungle streams are the Codavanaur and Nangaunjy, which, running from the south, fall into the Amravatty above Caroor town. There are two considerable rain-fed tanks, Ooppidamungalam and Velliyanay. There is much baling from channels. Zemindarry, Andiputty. On rising ground on the left or north bank of the Amravatty and near its confluence with the Cauvery. Of great antiquity and at or near the Scandapooram of the old Congoo country. Ancient capital of the Cherans or Keralans. The κηρόβοθρος of Ptolemy was the Cherapaty or lord of Cheram. Is also one of the seven sacred stalams or Shivaulyams of Congoo country. During the struggles between the rival dynasties of Chera, Chola, and Paundya, the town changed hands more than once. After the absorption of the Chera by the Chola dynasty it was still of importance and was provided with a good stone fort. With the rise of the Naicks, it fell to the kingdom of Madúra; but was frequently attacked and occupied by the Mysore armies, until towards the end of seventeenth century it was finally annexed to the latter kingdom, and became its most important frontier post. In 1736, Chundah sahib besieged it unsuccessfully. In 1760, it was captured by the English after a short siege, and held by a British garrison till 1768, when it was retaken by Hyder ally, to whom its possession was confirmed by Treaty in 1769. In 1783, Colonel Lang held the fort for a few months. It was a third time captured in 1790 by General Meadows, and again restored in 1792. At the close of the second Mysore war, in 1799, it was finally ceded to the English, and was abandoned as military station in 1801. A monument to British who fell in the siege of 1790 is on the south bank of the river. Old Shiva temple of Pashoopateeshwaran built by a Cholan king. The lingam [q.v.] is 5 feet high. Old Vishnoo temple. In 1806 Roman coins were found. The fort is now demolished. Considerable trade. The Jesuit mission was established in 1639. The Wesleyan mission have also station. Sub-collector's head-quarters formerly. Cf. alloor [cranganore].

CARPET SNAKE (चित्रमण्डल - chitramandala, San.; कुण्डली - kundalí, Mahr.; افعی - afaí, Ar.; لپیٹا سانپ - lapetásámp, Hind.; సురతపాము - suratapámu, Tel.; ചുരുട്ട - churuttappámbu, Mal.; சுருட்டை - shuruttai, Tam.). Title from pattern of back. San. from (chitra, san. variegated + mandala, san. circle). Mahr. from (kundala, san. coil). Ar. from (faá, ar. malignant). Hind. from (lapetá, hind. coiling + sámp, hind. snake). Drav. means coil. Hind. also (sabzikásámp), meaning grass snake; (churímársámp), meaning fowl-killing snake; (gaddhá-(angulsámp), meaning inch snake, from small size; (gaddhá-márúsámp), meaning donkey killing snake; (marúrisámp), meaning twisting snake. Title otherwise Asp. Echis carinata, viperidæ [viriyan], ophidii viperiformes, ophidia [sarpam], reptilia [sarpy, 30], of naturalists [jantoo]. Alias Pseudoboa carinata. A small viper [viriyan], one of the true vipers. Brown or brownish grey, with a series of sub-quadrangular or ovate whitish spots, edged with blackish brown; a sub-semicircular whitish band on each side of each of the dorsal spots, enclosing a round, dark-brown, lateral spot. A pair of oblong brown, black-edged spots on the crown of the head convergent anteriorly; a brown spot below and an oblique broad streak behind the eye. Belly whitish, with more or less numerous round brown specks. The carpet-viper is fierce and aggressive. It is always on the defensive, ready to attack; it throws itself into a double coil, the folds of which are in perpetual motion, and as they rub against each other, they make a loud rustling sound very like hissing. This sound is produced by the three or four outer rows of carinated scales above-mentioned, which are very prominent, and point downwards at a different angle to the rest; their friction against each other causing the sound. This viper does not really hiss. Its fangs are very long and mobile like those of the Daboia [chain viper, penjera]. Its eye has a peculiarly vicious appearance. It is very active and can dart a considerable distance a foot or more, to strike its prey; it is the most active and aggressive of all poisonous snakes. Kills, if at all, by slow poisoning followed by gangrene or mortification. The following different kinds are distinguished in Tamul and Teloogoo.——Blood carpet snake (నెత్తురుసురట - netturusurata, Tel.; இரத்தச்சுருட்டை - iráttaççuruttai, Tam.). Title otherwise Bean of Malacca, Cardole oil tree, Cashew-apple, Cashew-nut, Christians' mango, Foreign almond, Foreign marking-nut, Hijlee baudam, Kajo, Portuguese mango, Pot mango, Promotion nut tree, Ship mango, Turkish marking-nut. Botanically Anacardium occidentale, linn., anacardiaceæ [vricsham, 45]. Alias Acajouba occidentalis; Cassuvium pomiferum. Small tree, native of west indies; trunk short, thick, and very crooked, bark considerably rough; leaves oval, alternate, with roundish or emarginate apex; calyx five-cleft nearly to the base; petals five, linear-lanceolate, pale, yellow with pink stripes; stamens usually nine, with one longer than the others; style solitary; panicles terminal, with male and hermaphrodite flowers mixed together; flowers greenish red; fruit or cashew-nut a kidney-shaped ash-brown nut, one inch, sessile on the apex of a yellow or crimson-colored torus, called cashew-apple; flowering twice a year; in coast forests near the sea; resembles the walnut, and its leaves have a similar scent. The kernel of the nut is enclosed in a coriaceous covering consisting of two layers, between which is a thick black oil known as cardole oil; this oil is acrid to an extraordinary degree, whilst the kernels, which are roasted and eaten, are quite bland. The nuts yield also by expression a very sweet-tasted edible oil, much superior to european olive oil, but not so cheap as ground-nut [q.v.] oil; as the nuts are generally roasted and eaten, this oil is seldom obtained. The gum [gond] from trunk occurs in stalactiform masses, and varies in color from reddish to pale yellow; when placed in water it swells and forms a jelly-like mass and a portion of it dissolves; this solution is rendered turbid by oxalate of ammonium, and gives a copious white precipitate with alcohol; it is not precipitated by borax [vengauram] or sulphate of iron [annabhaidy]; the gum is obnoxious to insects. Cardole oil is medicinally powerful rubefacient and vesicant, used as an anæsthetic in leprosy [cooshtam], and as a blister in warts, corns and ulcers; the bark is given internally in infusion; apple is succulent and possesses a peculiar cooling quality; the juice of the apple is of use in diarrhœa and diabetes; whole plant gives to pharm. gum, cardole oil, cashew-nut oil, and cashew spirit. The dried kernels are eaten as dessert like almonds [baudam] after being toasted; in this state they are palatable when eaten with salt, but indigestible; they impart a flavor to madeira wine; mixed with cocoa they make a good chocolate; the juice of the apple expressed and fermented yields a pleasant wine, and distilled a spirit is drawn from it. Bark used in tanning [chamrah]; cardole oil applied to prevent attack of white-ants; gum is a good varnish [rangh] and a fair substitute for gum-arabic [q.v.], collected while the sap is rising, small in quantity. Wood red, moderately hard, close-grained; makes good charcoal [adoopp-kary]. A variety grows in travancore, whose nuts have no oil. No other common species here.——Country cashew (රටකජු - ratakaju, Singh.). From likeness of taste. Same as Ground-nut.

CASHOON (کشون - kashún, Hind.). A battalion [pataulam]. Turkish word introduced by Tippoo sultan.

CASHYAPAN (कश्यप - kashyapa, San.). According to the Mahabhaurat, the Ramayanam and the Pooraunams, he was the son of Mareechy, the son of Bramha; and he was the father of Vivaswat, the father of Menoo. He married thirteen of the daughters of Dacshan and two of Veishwaunaran and became the father of the gods, demons, men, beasts, and reptiles [adity]. He is therefore called a Prajaupaty. He is also according to some, one of the seven great Rishies. The word resembles the mythological and astronomical κασσιόπεια [caushyapy]. It without doubt represents some very ancient race who inhabited the Central asiatic chain, in which traces of the name are so plentifully found, as in the Koh i kas or Caucasus, the Caspian, and Cashmere [q.v.]. Of the forty-nine gotrams of Bramins cashyapa is one [matam].

It was here that Colonel Forde's troops made their rendezvous with those of Vizianagram, previous to battle of Condore and taking of Masulipatam in 1758-59. Peshcush Rs. 13,901.

CASSUMUNAR (वनार्द्रक - vanárdraka, San.; كسومنر - kasumunar, Hind.; కారల్లము - kárallamu, Tel.). Title from bengalee. San. from (vana, san. forest + árdraka, san. ginger, zingiber officinale, roscoe). Tel. from (káru, tel. wild + allamu, tel. ginger). Hind. also (bumadabemada); (banada), by corruption from sanscrit. Tel. also (kúrapasupu), meaning curry + turmeric, curcuma longa, rox.; (kárupasupu), meaning wild + turmeric. Title otherwise Bengal root, Curry turmeric, Downy-leaved ginger, Wild turmeric. Botanically Zingiber [aurdracam] cassumunar, roxb., zingiberaceæ [vricsham, 144]. Root tuberous; stems erect, round, 3-5 feet; leaves bifarious, linear-lanceolate; scapes radical, 6-12 inches long; spikes oblong, strobiliform, closely imbricated with numerous obovate acuminate villous bracts; flowers large, pale sulphur; flowering in july and august. A plant, with strong camphoraceous smell; rhizome much larger than that of common ginger [q.v.], tastes hot and bitterish.

CATACAM (కటకము - katakamu, Tel.). From (kat, san. to surround). Fortification; suffix in place names [cadagam].

CATAMARAN (கட்டுமரம் - kattumaram, Tam.). From (kattu, tam. to bind + maram, tam. wood). Raft consisting of three logs of very light buoyant wood, such as the Erythrina indica [common coral tree]. Erroneously said to be made of the cocoanut [q.v.] tree, a wood which sinks at once in water.

The length is from 20-25 feet, and breadth 2½-3½ feet. The logs are secured together by three spreaders and cross-lashings through small holes; the centre log being much the largest, with a curved surface at the fore end, which trends and finishes upwards to a point. The side logs are similar in form, but smaller, having their sides straight, and fitted to the centre log. The catamaran is generally navigated by two men, sometimes by one only. Catamarans are used mostly for deep-sea fishing. They also convey letters to and from the shore; the man who takes it has leaf of the areca [q.v.] tree tied round his waist, in which he encloses it.

CATAPANG (इंगुदी - ingudí, San.; बदामिरूकु - badámirúku, Conc.; درخت بادام هندی - darakhtibádámiħindi, Pers.; هندی بادام کا جہاڑ - hindíbádámkáper, Hind.; جنگلی بادام کا جہاڑ - janglíbádamkájhár, Dec.; کتاپڠ - katapáng, Malay; ನಾಟುಬಾದಾಮಿ - nátubádámi, Can.; ಬಾದಾಮು - bádámu, Too.; నాటుబాదముచెట్టు - nátubádamuchettu, Tel.; അടമരം - atamaram, Mal.; කොට්ටම්බා - kottambá, Singh.; நாட்டுவாதுமை - náttuváthumai, Tam.). Title from malay. San. from (ing, sán. to grow up) [baudam, firework plant]. Pers. from (darakht, pers. tree + bádám, pers. almond, prunus amygdalus, baill. + hindí, pers. country). Hind. from (hindí, hind. country + bádám, hind. almond + per, hind. tree). Dec. from (janglí, hind. wild + bádam, hind. almond + jhár, hind. tree). Can. from (nátu, can. country + bádámi, can. the tree). Tel. similar. Mal. from (ata, mal. close + maram, mal. tree). Tam. from (nádu, tam. country + váthumai, tam. almond tree). San. also (déshabádáma), meaning country almond; (tailap'hala), meaning oil-fruited. Can. also (bádámi); (olágramara), meaning indigenous + tree; (úrubádámi), meaning country + tree; (tari). Tel. also (bádamuchettu); (tápasataruvu), meaning sage + tree. Mal. also (náttubádám), meaning country almond; (kottakkuru), meaning kernel nut. Tam. also (amandimaram), perhaps from english almond; (váthumai) [baudam, kateerah]. Title otherwise Bengalee baudam, Broad-leaved terminalia, Country almond, Indian almond, Jungle almond, Malabar almond, Malay almond. Botanically Terminalia [antya parny] catappa, linn., combretaceæ [vricsham, 55]. Specific name from malay. Alias Adamaram; Bucida buceras; Juglans catappa; Terminalia intermedia, moluccana, myrobalana, subcordata. Adamaram from malayalam. Tree, 50 feet; leaves about the extremities of the branchlets, short-petioled, obovate, cuneate or slightly cordate at the base, a little repand, with a large gland beneath on either side the midrib near the base; racemes axillary, solitary, simple shorter than the leaves; drupe compressed, oval, with elevated margins, convex on both sides; flowers small, dull white, with a hairy glandular disk at the bottom of the calyx; found in gardens, &c.; is in flower and fruit throughout the year; bears fruit three times a year on the malabar coast; a malayan species, cultivated in india. Drupe contains one kernel which has a fine filbert-like flavor, with a crispness like that of a fresh walnut, resembles a small fold of white paper; the kernel yields upwards of fifty per cent. of a pure bland oil, very similar to almond oil, for which it may be used as a substitute; this kept for a time deposits a large quantity of stearine; the color is a deep straw. Bark astringent; kernels and oil are in pharm. non-officinal. Kernels are eaten; oil expressed from seeds is like almond oil cake used to feed pigs; tusser [q.v.] silkworms feed on the leaves. Makes a good avenue [shaulay] tree; bark and leaves yield a black pigment [rangh], to dye teeth and make indian ink [mashy]; gives a gum [gond]. Wood red with lighter-colored sapwood, hard; levers of picottahs [q.v.] are made of it; texture is very like that of mango [q.v.].

CATAURY (کٹاری - katárí, Hind.). From (katár, hind. dagger). Pointings in embroidery [zardozy].

CATECHU (खदिर - khadira, San.; खैर - khaira, Mahr.; खैरु - khairu, Conc.; کہیر ببول - khairbabúl, Hind.; کتھے کی کیکر - katthekíkíkar, Dec.; ಕಗ್ಗಲಿಮರ - kaggalimara, Can.; ಕಾಚು - káchu, Too.; పొడలమాను - podalamánu, Tel.; ଖଇର - khoiru, Oor.; ഖദിരം - khadiram, Mal.; කිහිරි - kihiri, Singh.; ஓதலை - óthalai, Tam.). Title from teloogoo and canarese for the product [cutch]. San. from (khad, san. to be firm), strong timber. Mahr. from sanscrit. Hind. from (sanscrit + babúl, hind. acacia arabica, willd.). Dec. from (katthá, hind. cutch + kíkar, hind. acacia sp.). Can. from (kaggallu, can. to be firm + mara, can. tree). Tel. from (poda, tel. variegation + mánu, tel. tree). Oor. and singh. from sanscrit. Tam. from (ótham, tam. moisture + ali, tam. to preserve), as thriving on dry soil. San. also (jívamangalyá), meaning life + auspicious, from cutch being good for health; (arunaki), meaning red, from color of cutch. Can. also (taremara), meaning to tear, of thorns + tree. Tel. also (nallatsandra), meaning black + acacia sundra, dec.; (kátsuchettu), meaning cutch tree. Greek ἀχάνθη. Title otherwise Black catechu, Cutch acacia, Kath acacia, Medicinal acacia, Wodalee gum tree. Botanically Acacia [cantalam] catechu, willd., leguminosæ [vricsham, 48]. Alias Acacia polyacantha, sundra, wallichiana; Mimosa catechu, catechuoides, sundra. Sundra, from (tsandra, tel. acacia sundra, dec.). Gregarious, thorny, deciduous tree, 30-40 feet; dark brown bark; branches armed with stipulary thorns, occasionally unarmed; foliage delicate; leaves bipinnated; pinnæ ten to thirty pair; leaflets numerous, ranged like teeth of small comb; young shoots, petioles, and peduncles more or less pubescent; petioles sometimes armed below with a row of prickles; spikes axillary one to four together, shorter than the leaves; corolla five-cleft; petals united; stamens distinct; legumes thin, flat, glabrous, four to eight-seeded; flowers small, white, or pale yellow, flowering nearly all year; chiefly found in malabar; closely allied to acacia sundra, dec., and suma, kurz. [sundra, white sundra]. The watery extract is black cutch [cutch]; a concentrated and solidified product of a decoction from the chips of the brown heart-wood; an astringent juice, soluble in water; not to be confounded with gambier [q.v.]; not a gum [gond] or resin [raul], any more than indigo [q.v.]. Ordinary black cutch occurs as dry, brown externally, reddish or pale within, fracture brilliant, or dull according to the kind; in flat, round, cylindrical, or irregular pieces, inodorous, of extremely astringent taste, followed by an agreeably sweet flavor; often adulterated with starch and clay; that used for medicinal purposes is clean, dark, and easily fractured. The tree also yields direct a pale yellow gum, often occurring in tears one inch in diameter, generally less than half an inch in size; it is sweet to the taste and soluble in water; it forms a strong mucilage. For making the cutch, chips of the heart-wood are boiled in earthen pots, and the clear liquor is strained off; when the residuum is of sufficient consistence, it is poured into clay moulds; a finer form generally called kath [q.v.] which is the hindostany for cutch, is made by putting twigs in the decoction, on which the substance then crystallizes. A mixture of cutch and myrrh [q.v.], called kathbol, is given to women after confinement as a tonic and to promote the secretion of milk; in general medicine a powerful astringent; also antiperiodic and antiscorbutic; for british kino, pale catechu, oakgalls and logwood; gives to pharm. catechu nigrum; active principles, peculiar form of tannin, mimotannic acid and catechin; powerful astringent tonic; preparations, infusum catechu, tinctura catechu, pulvis catechu compositus; officinal. The purer kath is used as an ingredient in the prepared paun [q.v.] or betel-leaf. Cutch contains a greater proportion of tannin than other astringent substances, and 1 lb. of this is equal to 7 or 8 lb. of oak-bark for tanning [chamrah]; it is now largely exported to europe and america for its tannin; it is also used in dyeing [shauyam], a solution of cutch being by the action of lime [choonam] or of alum [padicauram] changed into a dull red color. Timber dark colored; hard and heavy; close-grained and durable, works smoothly and stands a good polish, though somewhat brittle, much valued where strength is required, used for ploughs [calappay], pestles, &c., in house-building and the construction of carts; not attacked by white-ants [q.v.]; the wood is however inferior to the other species of the genus.

CATHAY (خطا - khatá, Ar.). From (khitan, the dynasty which ruled over the country). Northern china [cheen]. Name by which for nearly thousand years the whole of China has been known to nations of Inner asia and to those whose acquaintance with it was got by that channel [charitram]. From (ká, tam. grove + éri, tam. tank); from its original source in a garden tank. Tam. also (shittiraiççilamban), meaning april + mountain fresh; as it rises in chittray [mausam] or april from the mountain floods; also (ponni), meaning gold possessor. Sanscrit name (dakshinagangá), means south + ganges; also (ardhagangá), meaning half ganges; also (kákanadí), meaning crow + river, from black color of sand. The earliest mention is that of Ptolemy. Greek χάβηρος; καμάρα of the Periplus. River; Salem, Trichinopoly, Tanjore districts. Rises in the mountains of Coorg at Taley cauvery, 50 miles from Mangalore in lat. 12° 25′; long. 75° 34′. Flows first easterly for 33 miles and then turns north-east for 8 miles, at which point it touches Mysore and for 20 miles forms its boundary towards Coorg, still flowing north-easterly. In Coorg it is joined by the Cacabey, Cadanore, Chikkaholey, Cummaholey, Moottaureymootta, and Swarnauvaty. Flows through Mysore, generally south-easterly for 95 miles, to Talacaud; from whence, its course being first north-easterly and subsequently easterly, it forms the boundary between Mysore and Coimbatore district for 40 miles, when it finally leaves the former territory. At Seringapatam it entirely encircles the fortress and island. At Sosiley it receives its first great auxiliary stream, the Cubbany, which flowing past Nanjangode, brings into its course the alluvium of Wynaud. Farther on the Muddore falls into it, and now greatly enlarged in its limits it occupies a bed of nearly a mile broad, varying from 15–20 feet deep, before it reaches the western point of Shivasamoodram. The passage of the river before Shivasamoodram and residence upon the island of that name were formerly difficult, but the jagheerdar of the island erected two stone bridges over the two branches of the river. After passing under the bridges the northern branch of the river winds along the southern side of a mountain until it reaches the high land forming the island on the eastern side. Here it begins to descend with considerable rapidity till it arrives at the head of the cataract Gunganchookky, so called in consequence of a rajah of the island whose name was Gungan having about 700 years ago leapt his horse down at this place at the command of the divinity of the island, in order to cleanse himself from a pollution he had unknowingly received. Part of the site of the ancient Hindoo city of Gungan pauray may still be traced here. A little above the cataract, this branch of the river encircles a smaller island. The fall on the southern branch of the river is called Barchookky, and is about two miles from Gunganchookky. After leaving Shivasamoodram, the Cauvery gradually descends until it receives the Bhawauny at the village of the same name. About Bhawauny there are numerous islands. At Caroor the Amravatty, and a little higher the Noyil fall into the Cauvery. All these streams, now united into one bed, wind in a serpentine course. After forming the boundary between Coimbatore and Salem districts for a considerable distance, the river enters Trichinopoly districts. Passing the rock of Trichinopoly, it divides at the island of Shreerungam into two channels, which enclose between them the delta of Tanjore. This delta is 70 miles in length from the apex to the sea and has a base of 80 miles. After Shreerungam, the river is divided into two branches; of which the northern is called the Coleroon and falls into the sea at Devicottah, while the other breaks up into many small streams reaching the sea at Negapatam and Tranquebar. On the seaward face of the delta are the open roadsteads of Negapatam and Caricaul. Large as is the supply of water in the Cauvery it is nearly exhausted before it reaches the sea at Cauveryputnam. The course of the Cauvery is over an extensive and generally barren surface of granitic rocks, with scarcely any woods or jungle on its banks. It consequently brings down no vegetable alluvium, but a rich clay, rendering the plains of Tanjore the most fertile portion of the South of India. During the inundation, the river is navigable through the low country for craft. Those in use are circular baskets from 9–14 feet in diameter, covered with buffalo leather. In these cotton [q.v.], sandal-wood, saltpetre [shorah], and other wares are brought down the river, and as the violence of the current precludes their upward navigation, they are taken to pieces, the basket-work abandoned, and the leather taken back on men's heads. Seringapatam, Trichinopoly, Tanjore, Combaconam and Mayavaram are on its banks. For a description of the irrigation works, see vol. I, 399, &c. Total length, about 475 miles; estimated area of drainage basin, 28,000 square miles. The area of delta is 2,760 square miles, and irrigation system supplies about 835,208 acres, yielding a revenue of Rs. 35,30,336. The whole of the course of the Cauvery is to the natives holy ground. Even the Ganges is said to resort under-ground once in the year to the source of the Cauvery to purge itself from the pollution contracted from the crowd of sinners who have bathed in its waters. At its source at Taley cauvery, and at Bhaugamundalam, where it receives its first tributary, are ancient temples largely frequented by pilgrims in October and November. There is a Tamul proverb:—புல்லும் பூமியும் கல்லும் காவேரியும் உள்ளமட்டும்—"As long as vegetation, earth, "rocks and the Cauvery exist" [shansanam].——Cauvery falls (காவேரியருவி - kávériyaruvi, Tam.). Shivasamoodram, Barchookky and Gunganchookky in Coimbatore; Hogeycull in Salem. Former generally meant [aroovy].——Cauverypauk (காவேரிப்பாக்கம் - kávérippákkam, Tam. kávéripák*). From (kávéri, tam. the river + pakkam, tam. village). Village; North arcot dist., Wallajahpett tal.; pop. 6,259; acres 2,914; lat. 12° 54′; long. 79° 30′; height 389 feet; from Chittore S.E. 33 miles; from Wallajahpett E. 6¾ miles. Flourishing agricultural village midway between Arcot and Conjeeveram, south of large tank to which it gives name. Formerly a small fort near tank bund. Clive gained victory over French here in 1752. Captured by French in 1757. Tank largest in district, having bund four miles long north to south. Has much silted up. Fed by channel from Palaur, and in its surplus weir are head waters of Corteliaur, which supplies Madras with drinking-water. Waterfowl abundant. On bund a bungalow.——Cauverypooram (காவேரிப்புரம் - kávérippuram, Tam.). Means cauvery town. Village, Pass; Coimbatore dist., Bhawauny tal.; pop. 6,725; acres 37,909; lat. 11° 54′; long. 77° 48′; from Bhawauny N. 32¾ miles; from Coimbatore N.N.E. 82 miles. On right bank of Cauvery. Fort stands at mouth of one of passes from Mysore. Fort and pass were points of strategic importance throughout Mysore wars, the pass 30 miles in length being much used for convoys in the final struggle. Outpost of Trimal naick of Madura against the inroads of the Curtar [q.v.] of Mysore. In 1768, captured by Colonel Wood; 1769 retaken by Hyder ally. The pass has been almost abandoned in favor of the route via Suttimungalam and Hassanore. Old well-sculptured Shiva temple in the village with many inscriptions. Also a ruined fort. Large number of resident Canarese bramins. Weekly market.——Cauveryputnam (காவேரிப்பட்டணம் - kávérippattanam, Tam.). Means Cauvery town.—"a" Sanscrit name (cháritrapura), meaning historic fame + town. Greek χάβηρος ἐμπορίον. Village, Place of pilgrimage; Tanjore dist., Shiyally tal.; pop.

2,846; lat. 11° 09′; long. 79° 53′; from Neythavausal S. 1½ miles; from Shiyally S.E. 9 miles; from Tanjore E.N.E. 53 miles. Resorted to by the Hindoos for bathing. Fattan of Rasheedood deen. Compare putnam for Madras now-a-days. Ancient seaport with extensive commerce, gold dust being a part of the commodities. Ceased to be of importance in fifteenth century, partly owing to silting up of Cauvery. Nothing now remains but a few sandy mounds with fragments of brick strewed over them, and traces of temples. Trig. station in lat. 11° 7′ 53·37″; long. 79° 54′ 6·08″; from Shiyally S.E. 11 miles; from Cauveryputnam S.E. 1½ miles; from Mailayore E.S.E. 3 miles; from Neythavausal S.S.E. 2¾ miles; from the sea W. ⅛ mile.—"b" Town; Salem dist., Krishnagherry tal.; pop. 4,457; acres 206; lat. 12° 25′; long. 78° 15′; from Krishnagherry S. 8 miles; from Salem N. 53 miles. On right bank of Ponniaur. The fort which commands the pass of Palcode was taken by the English in 1767, and almost immediately recaptured by Hyder ally, who strengthened the works, and used them as a support in the following campaign, until his withdrawal above the ghauts [q.v.], when Colonel Wood again captured the place. In 1790 Cauveryputnam was Colonel Maxwell's head-quarters before advancing against Tippoo. Trade in oil, oil-seed and grain is considerable; while the cloths woven here supply the demand of the greater part of the talook. Large weekly fair for cattle.

CAUCATEEYA (काकतीय - kákatíya, San.). Dynasty of Warangal. Otherwise called Ganapaty. See vol. I (132), (142) [charitram].

CAUD (ಕಾಡು - kádu, Tel.; காடு - kádu, Tam.). From (kadu, tam. hard). Uncultivated jungle tract. Suffix in place names, as Yercaud, meaning tank + forest. Compare Coody, Naud, Oor.——(1) Caudaurambam (காடாரம்பம் - kádárambam, Tam.). From (above + árambha, san. beginning). Upland where dry grain is raised.——Caudcaul (காடுகால் - kádugál, Tam.). From (above + ká, tam. to protect). Mauriyamman.——Cauttairy (காட்டேரி - kåttéri, Tam.). From (above + éru, tam. to pervade). Same as caudcaul.——Cautvauram (കാട്ടുവാരം - káttuváram, Mal.). From (above + váram, tam. share). A tax on lands bordering on waste in lieu of any assessment on tracts that may be cultivated within the waste. See vol. I, 112.——(2) Beed caud (బీడుకాడు - bídukádu, Tel.). From (bídu, tel. waste + above). Uncultivated land.——Cautcaud (ಕಾಟುಕಾಡು - kátukádu, Can.). Jungle cultivation in which the plots are changed every year. Same as Coomry and Ponacaud on W. coast.——Shavacaud (சவக்காடு - shavakkádu, Tam.). From (shava, san. corpse + above). Burial ground. Vedantists, lingayets, the five artisan castes, beiraugies, sanyausies, the gooroos of sects and all the races and tribes not admitted into hindooism, bury their dead. As life becomes extinct, the body is made to assume the attitude to be preserved in the procession and in the grave. It is borne to the grave in a car, on the shoulders of relatives or friends. On reaching the burial place, the priest recites prayers, and the body is seated on a ledge with its face looking northwards; salt and ashes of cow-dung are placed on the head [maryauday].——Shoodcaud (சுடுகாடு - shudugádu, Tam.). From (shudu, tam. to burn + above). Burning-ground. Those not mentioned under Shavacaud burn their dead. When it appears that one of those classes is about to die, a space is prepared with earth mingled with cow-dung, and strewed with sacred Darbhay [q.v.] grass, and over it a clean cloth is spread, on which the dying man is placed. Next, the chief priest or Poorohit performs a Prauyaschittam [q.v.] or general expiation, by the efficacy of which he is delivered from all his sins. After this the ten gifts or Dasha daunam [q.v.] are prepared. These consist of cows, lands, millet-seed, gold, butter, clothes, grain of various kinds, sugar, silver, and salt, and are offered to bramins on the day of the funeral. The more valuable of these are distributed by the rich only. After the last breath those who are present weep for a reasonable time, and then the chief mourner performs ceremonies, till in due time the body is placed on a litter and carried to the place where it is to be burnt, the chief mourner walking foremost with fire in a vessel, and others following. Having arrived at the place, the party dig a trench of inconsiderable depth over which the funeral pile is erected. The corpse being placed on it, the chief mourner makes the sacrifice called Homam [q.v.] and other ceremonies, after which he sets fire to the pile and retires with the company, while the four bearers should remain with the corpse till it is consumed [carmauntaram, maryauday, matam].——Vettcaud (வெட்டுக்காடு - vettukkádu, Tam.). From (vettu, tam. to cut + above). Land cleared of jungle and brought under cultivation.

CAUDY (अम्ल - amla, San.; خل - khall, Ar.; سرکہ - sirkah, Pers. and Hind.; ಕಾಡಿ - kádi, Can.; కాడి - kádi, Tel.; കാടി - káti, Mal.; காடி - kádi, Tam). San. from (am, san. to make sick). Ar. from (khalla, ar. to become spoiled), from the sweet flavor spoiling by fermentation. Drav. root means burning or biting. Vinegar [sharb]. Acetum of chemists. An impure acetic acid [tezaub] made by the acetous fermentation of sweet fruits [pazham], rice [q.v.], toddy [q.v.], sugar [q.v.], honey [shahad], &c.; each kind of vinegar is named after the substance from which it is produced. Imported english distilled or white wine vinegar is preferred medicinally; the best native kind is that prepared from the toddy of the palmyra [q.v.] tree, colored with burnt paddy [q.v.]. For making this the alcoholic liquid is placed in earthen jars half imbedded in the soil and left until the acetification has been accomplished. Natives use it in medicine externally as a repellent, and in composing certain discutient fomentations; also mix it with gingelly [q.v.] oil to make cooling embrocation for head in cephalalgia; some veidyans [q.v.] and hakeems [q.v.] render it stronger by distillation; used internally it is not only refrigerant, but, especially when taken in warm gruel, powerful diaphoretic; bengal gram vinegar is a common menstruum for medical purposes. The following are vinegars most commonly found in the bazaar.——Barley vinegar (सौवीर - sauvíra, San.). San. from (su, san. good + víra, san. spirituous liquor). From husked grains of barley [jow] boiled and steeped in water.——Bengal gram vinegar (चणकाम्ल - chanakámla, San.; خل الحمص - khallulhams, Ar.; سرکہ نخود - sirkahinakhúd, Pers.; بوٹ کا سرکہ - bútkásirkah, Hind.; கடலைப்புளிப்பு - kadalaippulippu, Tam.). Acid drops of water on the leaves of cicer arietinum, linn., or bengal gram [q.v.].——Date vinegar (खर्जूराम्ल - kharjúrámla, San; سیندھی کا سرکہ - sendhíkásirkah, Hind.; ಖರ್ಜೂರಕಾಡಿ - kharjúrakádi, Can.; ఈతకాడి - ítakádi, Tel.; ഈന്തിങ്കാടി - íntinkáti, Mal.; ஈச்சங்காடி - íççangádi, Tam.). From toddy of phœnix sylvestris, roxb., the date palm [wild date].——Grain vinegar (धान्याम्ल - dhányámla, San.; அரிசிக்காடி - arisikkádi, Tam.). Tam. from (arisi, tam. rice + above). From acetous fermentation of powdered paddy [q.v.]. Also called Caunjicam.——Grape vinegar (द्राक्षाम्ल - drákshámla, San.; انگوری سرکہ - angúrísirkah, Hind.; ದ್ರಾಕ್ಷಿಕಾಡಿ - drákshikádi, Can.; ద్రాక్షకాడి - drákshakádi, Tel.; മുന്തിരിങ്ങാക്കാടി - muntirinnakkáti, Mal.; திராட்சக்காடி - tirádchakkádi, Tam.). From fruit of vitis vinifera, linn., the grape vine [angoor].——Husk vinegar (तुषाम्ल - tushámla, San.). From husks of fried oolundoo [black gram] and barley [jow], boiled together for acetous fermentation.——Palmyra vinegar (तालाम्ल - talámla, San.; تاڑی کا سرکہ - táríkásirkah, Hind.; ಪನೇಕಾಡಿ - panékádi, Can.; తాటికాడి - tátikádi, Tel.; പനങ്കാടി - panankáti, Mal.; பனங்காடி - panangádi, Tam.). Otherwise Culloo caudy or Toddy vinegar. From toddy of borassus flabelliformis, linn., the palmyra [q.v.].——Rice vinegar (आरनाल - áranála, San.; கஞ்சிக்காடி - kañjikkádi, Tam.). San. from (ára, san. brass + nála, san. odour). Tam. from (kanji, tam. gruel from the smell + above). From fermentation of boiled rice.——Six-month vinegar (ஆறுமாதக்காடி - árumáthakkádi, Tam.). Water in which rice has been washed and various ingredients mixed, kept six months; used medicinally for jaundice, incipient dropsy, &c.

CAUFIR (کافر - káfir, Hind.). From (kufr, ar. infidelity). One who denies, an infidel [caffre]. Abusive epithet by Mahomedans to all non-Mahomedans. Of these there are five classes:—those who do not believe in the great first cause; those who do not believe in the unity of God; those who do not believe in revelation; idolators; deniers of the mission of Mahomet.

CAUFOOR (کافور - káfúr, Hind.). From arabic, means camphor [q.v.]. Otherwise known as Malik caufoor. A slave taken during the conquest of Goozerat by Allah ood deen's general. Subsequently rose to highest offices. He was the first Mahomedan general who invaded the Deccan [q.v.], against which he made four expeditions. The first in 1306, and the last in 1312 was against the Yaudavas of Devagherry. In 1309 he reduced the Ganapaty of Warangal; led a successful expedition against the Yaudavas of Dwaura samoodram in 1310. Murdered in 1316 being suspected of his master's assassination. Vol. I (120) [charitram].

CAUJA (خواجہ - khwájah, Hind.). A title like gentleman, squire. Title of persons eminent for sanctity or learning. Denomination of Syeds out of respect. Title of Dervishes. Alaumat of one whose father is a Moghul and mother a Seidaunee; as Cauja fareed, alaumat + alam; Cauja nimat ool lah, title + lacab [ism].

CAUJAL (कज्जल - kajjala, San.; کاجل - kájal, Hind.; ارانگ پرا - arángpara, Malay; ಕಾಡಿಗೆ - kádige, Can.; ಕಾಡಿಗೆ - kádige, Too.; కాటుక - kátuka, Tel.; മഷി - mashi, Mal.; மை - mai, Tam.). San. from (kad, san. prefix showing defectiveness + jvala, san. flame). Malay from (aráng, malay, charcoal + para, malay, portion); from similarity. Tel. from (káru, tel. black). Tam. means blackness. Lamp-black. The carbon or smoke formed by burning vegetable substances in confined air. It constitutes the basis of lithographic and printing inks [mashy], and also of an oil paint [rangh]. Usually obtained by fixing a copper pan over the flame arising from burning gingelly [q.v.] oil, in which pan the lamp-black is collected [cajjaly].

CAUKKAY (काक - káká, San.; కాకి - káki, Tel.; காக்கை - kákkai, Tam.). From (kai, san. to caw). Crow [caurvam]. Plant first term, often joining two genera, from color or inferiority.

Ex., where transl. is of second term:—Abrus precatorius (kákachiñchá), tamarindus indica; Gmelina arborea (kákódúmbarí), ficus glomerata; Saccharum spontaneum (kákiveduru), bambusa arundinacea; Strychnos nux vomica (kákatinduka), diospyros embryopteris; Toddalia aculeata (kákkattutali), scutia indica; Trichosanthes palmata (kákidonda), cephalandra indica; see gloss. paragraphs. Constantly also within the same genus.——Caukkan (காக்கன் - kákkan, Tam.). Title from being dark like crow. Tam. also (korukkai). Pristipoma [caripey] hasta, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei [matsyam, 1], of naturalists [jantoo]. Alias Coius gudgutia; Lutjanus hasta; Mesoprion gutgutia; Polotus nitidus; Pristipoma chrysobalion, commersonii, kaakan. Kaakan from tamul. Four or five interrupted lines of grey along sides, three or four being above lateral line; sometimes they coalesce and form bands. Two or three rows of spots along dorsal fin, and in adult single row of dull blotches at base of the fin. Sea; 1½ feet.——Caukkay pon (कांस्यपत्र - kámsyapatra, San.; سون پیتل - sunpítal, Dec.; ಕಾಗಿಬಂಗಾರ - kágibangára, Can.; ಅಬರಕು - abaraku, Too.; కాకిబంగారు - kákibangáru, Tel.; കാക്കപ്പൊൻ - kákkappon, Mal.; காக்காய்ப்பொன் - kákkáyppon, Tam.). San. from (kámsya, san. brass + patra, san. leaf). Dec. from (sun, hind. gold + pítal, hind. brass). Can. from (kági, can. crow + bangára, can. gold). Tel. similar. Tam. from (kákkai, tam. crow + pon, tam. gold); inferior gold. Tam. also (kañjattagadu), meaning white copper or brass + leaf. Mica or glittering earth [abruck]. Also tinsel of brass leaf glittering like gold.——Caukoola canama (కాకులకనమ - kákulakanama, Tel.). From (káki, tel. crow + kanama, tel. ravine). Pass; Kurnool dist., Marcapore tal.; lat. 16° 15′; long. 79° 37′; from Kurnool E.N.E. 102 miles; from Marcapore N.N.E. 40 miles. Crosses N.E. extension of the Nullamullays, on high road between Cumbum and Pulnaud talook of Kistna district.——Jala caukkay (जलकाक - jalakáka, San.; پنکوا - pankavvá, Hind.). From (jala, san. water + káka, san. crow); from habitat. Hind. from (pání, hind. water + kavvá, hind. crow). Graculidæ family, piscatores, natatores, aves [pacshy, 58], of naturalists [jantoo]. Cormorants. The species best known to the natives are shown below.—"a" Large cormorant, called in vernaculars, large crow, water crow, black heron. Graculus carbo. Alias Carbo cormoranus. Rare towards south.—"b" Small cormorant not distinguished by separate vernacular. Graculus javanicus. Alias Carbo melanognathus; Phalacrocorax niger; Picus pygmæus. Common.—"c" Snake cormorant; title from long neck; called (bánuá) in deccany. Plotus melanogaster, plotinæ, graculidæ. Float low on the water, often with nothing, but the head and neck visible, and swim and dive with rapidity.——Samoodra caukkay (समुद्रकाक - samudrakáka, San.; تہاری - tehári, Hind.; సముద్రపుకాకి - samudrapukáki, Tel.). San. from (samudra, san. sea + káka, san. crow); from habitat and appearance. Hind. also (gangachíl), meaning ganges kite; (machhalouka), meaning fish snatcher. Tel. also (rámadásu), meaning rama's devotee. Laridæ family, vagatores, natatores, aves [pacshy, 53], of naturalists [jantoo]. S. indian sub-families:—Larinæ or gulls, Sterninæ or terns. The species best known are:—Little diving petrel, pelicanoides urinatrix. Great black-headed gull; kroikocephalus ichthyætus, seen on sea coast at madras, voice deep like that of the raven. Brown-headed gull, xema brunnicephala, frequently follows ships for miles to pick up garbage. Laughing gull, xema ridibunda, note is a hoarse cackle. Largest tern, sylochelidon caspius. Gull-billed tern, gelochelidon anglicus. Small marsh tern, hydrochelidon indica. Large river tern, seena aurantia. European tern, sterna nirundo. Black-bellied tern, sterna javanica. Little tern, sternula minuta. Large sea tern, thalasseus cristatus. Smaller sea tern, thalasseus bengalensis. Indian skimmer, rhynchops albicollis.

CAUL (కాలు - kálu, Tel.; കാൽ - kál, Mal.; கால் - kál, Tam.). The leg, foot. In Malabar, any tree that serves as a standard of the pepper vine or betel-vine. Figuratively a reach of water, like English arm of sea. So a channel [q.v.]. Suffix in place names as Tencaul, meaning southern channel. Also stands for road and land. Also one-fourth.——Caucauvery (காக்காவேரி - kákkávéri, Tam.). From (kál, tam. quarter + kávéri, tam. the cauvery); small Cauvery. On account of the stream which brought down high freshes and contained a perpetual supply like the Cauvery river. Zemindarry, Village; Salem dist., Salem tal.; pop. 1,844; area 1,830 acres; lat. of village 11° 27′; long. 78° 16′; from Salem S.E. 16 miles. Chief village in Mittah of same name. Peshcush Rs. 2,641.——Caulauda (ಕಾಲಾಡ - káláda, Can.). From (above + áda, can. the liquid measure of 20 seers of 70 cubic inches each). Liquid measure. 4 cootties = 1 caulauda; 2⅓ caulaudas = 1 maund [alavay, 4c]. Approximate actual value, 1 caulauda = 385 cubic inches. S. canara for oil. Compare Marcam or Mercaul of Kistna, Colagam of Coimbatore.——Caul shetty (காற்சட்டை - kárchattai, Tam.). From (above + shattai, tam. dress). Trousers.——Caulvye (ಕಾಲಿವೆ - kálive, Can.; కాలవ - kálavá, Tel.; கால்வாய் - kálváy, Tam.). From (above + váy, tam. place). A channel [q.v.], generally of irrigation.——Caulvyecomaury (کوماری - komárí, Hind.; கால்வாய்க்கோமாரி - kálváykkómári, Tam.). From (above + váy, tam. mouth + gó, san. cow + mári, san. contagious disease). Foot and mouth disease of cattle [pashoorogam]. Not largely destructive of life in Southern india; the mortality rarely exceeding 3 per cent. here though it rises to 50 in Europe. Sheep [shemmariyaud], goats [vellaud], pigs [soor] and poultry are liable and it has been conveyed by means of the milk [paul] of affected cows [pashoo] to the human subject. The absence of purging and the affection of the feet distinguish this disease from rinderpest [vishajooram], but both maladies may co-exist in the same animal.——Caulwa (కాలవ - kálava, Tel.). Means channel.—"a" Deputy tahsildarry, Kurnool district. Pay Rs. 70.—"b" Village, Head-quarters of Deputy tahsildar, a Sub-registrar and an hospital are situated here. The head-quarters of the Deputy tahsildar have been temporarily moved to Baitamcheroo after the advent of the railway. Kurnool dist., Nundiaul tal.; pop. 2,284; acres 6,519; lat. 15° 37′; long. 78° 14′; from Cumbum W. 60 miles; from Kurnool S.E. 17 miles; from Madras N.W. 223 miles; from Nundiaul W.N.W. 20¼ miles; from Pyaupaly N.E. 41 miles. On the bank of a spring channel, the town being built on the bed of red purple shales. Two large ruined temples. Extensive wet cultivation under the spring channel [q.v.]. Three miles distant is Boogga tepid spring, a halting place on Kurnool-Nundiaul road. On Shivarautry [pandigay, 6a] a car festival at this Boogga [q.v.].——Coott caul (میخ - mekh, Hind.; குத்துக்கால் - kuttukkál, Tam.). Hind. means a nail. Tam. from (kuttu, tam. to plant + kál, tam. post). Upright posts in a loom [nesavoo, tarry].

CAULAM (काल - kála, San.; کال - kál, Hind.; காலம் - kálam, Tam.). From (kal, san. to go). Time in general or any particular time or season. Death, destiny. Blackness [calam, car, caur]. Also one of the Dravyams [q.v.] of the Veishaishicam philosophy [matam].——(1) For Dravidian time generally see vol. I, 609. Average table of ditto:—60 cunnimays or twinkles otherwise nodies or finger-snaps = 1 vinaudy or indian minute, 60 vinaudies = 1 nauzhigay or indian hour, colloquially nauzhy, 7½ nauzhigays = 1 jaumam or watch, 2 jaumams = 1 nairam or half day light, 2 nairams = 1 pagal or day light, 1 irauppagal or night and day = 1 naul or natural day, 7 nauls = 1 kizhamay or week, 4 kizhamays = 1 tingal or month, 12 tingals = 1 aundoo or year. But notice that Vinaudy and Nauzhigay are borrowed from sanscrit, no native terms for minute and hour having survived. The Cunnimay is ·4 english seconds, the Vinaudy is 24 english seconds, the Nauzhigay is 24 english minutes.——(2) The following is the most ancient and still best known table of time from the sanscrit. It runs from the excessively minute to the almost infinitely great. The day is the sauvanam or natural and civil day from sunrise to sunrise, and the table is popular and not scientific, as will be seen from the fact that 360 sunrises make up here the year. 15 nimishams or eye winks = 1 caushtay, 30 caushtays = 1 calay, 30 calays = 1 moohoortam, 30 moohoortams = 1 dinam or day, or sunrise, 30 dinams = 1 mausam or month, 2 mausams = 1 ritoo or season, 3 ritoos = 1 ayanam or half-year, 2 ayanams = 1 varsham or year of men, 360 varshams = 1 devavarsham, or year of gods, 12,000 devavarshams = 1 mahayoog or great age, 1,000 mahayoogs = 1 calpam or bramha's day time, 2 calpams = 1 bramha's day, 30 bramha's days = 1 bramha's month, 12 bramha's months = 1 bramha's year, 100 bramha's years = 1 mahapralayam or bramha's flood. Taking the dinam as 24 english hours, the Nimisham here is ·213 english seconds, the Caushtay is 3·2 english seconds, the Calay is 1 english minute and 36 english seconds, the Moohoortam is 48 english minutes. The following is a tabular view of the longer periods of the same, dividing also the 12,000 devavarshams between the four yoogs [q.v.]:—

Kritam,	4,800	years of the gods		× 360=1,728,000	years of mortals.
Tretay,	3,600	do.	do.	× 360=1,296,000	do.
Dwau-param,	2,400	do.	do.	× 360= 864,000	do.
Kaly,	1,200	do.	do.	× 360= 432,000	do.
				4,320,000	Maha yoog.
				1,000
				4,320,000,000	Day of Bramha.
				8,640,000,000	Day and night of Bramha.
				360
				3,110,400,000,000	Year of Bramha.
				100
				311,040,000,000,000	Age of Bramha, 3 billions and odd of years.

The world is now, A.D. 1892, in the 4,993rd year of the iron age; 51 years of Bramha have elapsed; 49 of Bramha's years are yet to come, when all matter will become spirit, and all be absorbed into the essence of Bramha; after a million of ages Bramha will rise from his stupor and will again diversify himself. See vol. I, 609. The following is the authentic account of such time in the Vishnoo pooraunam:—"Time is a form of "Vishnoo; hear how it is applied to measure the duration of "Bramha, and of all other sentient beings. Fifteen twinklings "of the eye make a Caushtay; thirty Caushtays, one Calay; and "thirty Calays, one Moohoortam; thirty Moohoortams constitute a day and night of mortals; thirty such days make a "month, divided into two half months; six months form an Ayanam; two Ayanams compose a year. The southern Ayanam "is a night, and the northern a day, of the gods. Twelve

"thousand divine years, each composed of three hundred and "sixty such days, constitute the period of the four yoogs or "ages. They are thus distributed :—the Kritam age, has four "thousand divine years; the Tretay, three thousand; the Dwauparam, two thousand; and the Kaly age, one thousand; so "those acquainted with antiquity have declared. The period "that precedes a yoog is called a Sundhyay, and it is of as many "hundred years as there are thousands in the yoog; and the "period that follows a yoog, termed the Sundhyaumsham, is of "similar duration. The interval between the Sundhyay and "the Sundhyaumsham is the yoog, denominated Kritam, Tretay, "&c. The Kritam, Tretay, Dwauparam and Kaly, constitute a "great age, or aggregate of four ages; a thousand such aggre-"gates are a day of Bramha, and fourteen Menoos reign within "that term. Hear the division of time which they measure. "Seven rishies, certain secondary divinities, Indran, Menoo, and "the kings, his sons, are created and perish at one period; and "the interval, called a Manwantaram, is equal to seventy-one "times the number of years contained in the four yoogs, with "some additional years: this is the duration of the Menoo, the "attendant divinities, and the rest, which is equal to 852,000 "divine years, or to 306,720,000 years of mortals, independent "of the additional period. Fourteen times this period consti-"tutes a Bramha day. At the end of this day a dissolution of "the universe occurs, when all the three worlds, earth, and the "regions of space, are consumed with fire. The dwellers of "Maha locam or region inhabited by the saints who survive "the world distressed by the heat, repair then to Jana locam "or region of holy men after their disease. When the three "worlds are but one mighty ocean, Bramha, who is one with "Narayana, satiate with the demolition of the universe, sleeps "upon his serpent-bed; contemplated, the lotus born, by the "ascetic inhabitants of the Jana locam; for a night of equal "duration with his day; at the close of which he creates anew. "Of such days and nights is a year of Bramha composed; and a "hundred such years constitute his whole life. One Paraur-"dham, or half his existence, has expired, terminating with the "Maha calpam called Pudmam. The Calpam or day of Bramha "termed Vaurauham is the first of the second period of Bramha's "existence."——(3) There is a division of time also into Moortam or sensible time and Amoortam or artificial time.—"a" The following is a specimen of Moortam time:—10 goorvaucsharams or long syllables = 1 asoo or respiration, 6 asoos = 1 vinaudy or indian minute, &c. So also the table from eye-winks in head "2" above, or in head "6" below.—"b" The following is a specimen of Amoortam time:—100 trooties or atoms = 1 tatparam or speck, 30 tatparams = 1 nimisham or twinkling, 18 nimishams = 1 caushtay or bit, 30 caushtays = 1 calay or indian minute, 30 calays = 1 ghaticam or indian hour. With the calay as before, this makes the atom $\frac{1}{33750}$ of a second. It is called artificial time however because the scale goes down below limits of senses, and there is really no exact equivalence with anything else.——(4) The following is the scale of scientific lunar time:—60 soorams = 1 param or indian second, 60 params = 1 vighaticay or indian minute, 60 vighaticays = 1 ghaticay or indian hour, 30 ghaticays = 1 caranam or half lunar day, 2 caranams = 1 tity or lunar day, 15 tities = 1 pacsham or lunar fortnight, 2 pacshams = 1 chaundra mausam or lunar month or lunation, 12 chaundra mausams = 1 chaundra samvatsaram or maunam or lunar year. A mean tity or lunar day is the time during which the moon moves through 12° of her synodical orbit [cacsham] supposed to be divided into 360°; its duration is therefore 59g. 3v. 58p. hindoo sidereal or star time, or 23h. 37′ $27\frac{1}{5}''$ european time.——(5)—"a" The following is the scale of scientific fixed star or nacshatram [q.v.] time. This is the scale used by S. indian astronomers who compute in solar time, in dividing the nacshatram day or time of the equinoctial points [ayanam] rising twice. It is purely sexagesimal. The nacshatram days are considered equal throughout the year. 60 soorams = 1 param or indian second, 60 params = 1 vighaticay or indian minute, 60 vighaticays = 1 ghaticay or indian hour, 60 ghaticays = 1 dinam or day. Approximate actual value:—1 vighaticay or Indian minute = 24 english seconds.—"b" The following two tables convert the European sexagesimal scale of hours, minutes, seconds and sixtieths of seconds, into the above named Hindoo sexagesimal scale of dinams, ghaticays, vighaticays, params, soorams; and vice versâ:—

——(6) An astronomical Sowram day is the time taken by the sun in describing one degree [bhaugam] of the ecliptic [craunty mundalam], and consequently longer or shorter as the sun is in apogee or perigee. The following is the scale used in the Sowram time thence resulting:—3,600 nimishams or winks = 1 alipalam, 60 alipalams = 1 caushtacalay or indian second or vipalam, 10 caushtacalays = 1 prauna calay, 6 prauna calays = 1 vicalay or indian minute or palam, 60 vicalays = 1 dandam or indian hour, 60 dandams = 1 dinam or day. Approximate actual value:—1 vicalay or indian minute = 24 english seconds. Observe that here the sexagesimal order is interrupted after the vicalays, which are only sub-divided into 6 prauna calays for the purpose of procuring a numerical division of time equal to the number of minutes of a degree contained in the circumference of a circle, being 21,600. It may be converted into degrees, &c., or space divisions, by the following table:—

From (above + rúpa, san. form). Having the power to change the form at will. Also name of ancient country, now part of Assam.——Cauma shastram (कामशास्त्र - kámashástra, San.). From (above + shástra, san. science). Science of love. Treated by natives physically and classed under Veidya shastram.——Caumautchy (कामाक्षी - kámákshí, San.; காமாட்சி - kámádchi, Tam.). From (above + akshi, san. eye). Parvaty as having fascinating eyes. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name common to both sexes. Familiarly Caumoo [peyar].——Caumayya (కామయ్య - kámayya, Tel.). From cauman, god of love. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].

CAUMAUTY (ಕಾಮಾಟಿ - kámáti, Can.; காமாட்டி - kámátti, Tam.). From (karmat'ha, san. skilled in work). A bricklayer [inam]. Used as term of abuse [moottaul].

CAUN (कानन - kánana, San.; కాన - kána, Tel.; கானம் - kánam, Tam.). Jungle. Plant first term, often joining two genera. Ex., where transl. is of second term:—Flacourtia ramontchi (kánarégu), zizyphus jujuba; Guizotia abyssinica (kánel), sesamum indicum; Jatropha curcas (kánanéranda), ricinus communis; Ormocarpum sennoides (kánanashigru), moringa pterygosperma; Plumeria alba (kánanakaravíra), nerium odorum; Spondias mangifera (kánanámra), mangifera indica; Vernonia anthelmintica (kánanajíraka), cuminum cyminum. See gloss. paragraphs.——Caunaraig (కానరేగు - kánrégu, Tel.). Same as Forest bair [q.v.].

CAUN (காண் - kán, Tam.). To see; to worship.——Caunicay (காணிக்கை - kánikkai, Tam.). Present to a deity or preceptor [maryauday, wolfa].

CAUNARY (کانری - kánarí, Malay). Botanically the Canarium genus, burseraceæ [vricsham, 35]. Balsamiferous trees with compound leaves; flowers panicled; fruit a triangular drupe of one seed. The species best known to the natives are:—commune [elemi], strictum [black dammer].

CAUNCHY (पिण्डार - pindára, San.; پنڈالو - pindálú, Hind. and Dec.; ಕಾಟ್ಕುಂಬಳ - kátkumbala, Can.; ମୋଣ୍ଡ - momda, Oor.; കാഞ്ചി - káñchi, Mal.; ஆற்றுப்பூவரசு - áttuppúvarasu, Tam.). Title from malayalam. San. from (pinda, san. ball + ri, san. to go). Hind. from sanscrit. Can. from (kádu, can. wild + kumbil, mal. cashmere tree, gmelina arborea, linn.); from similarity of leaves. Tam. from (áru, tam. river + púvarasu, tam. portia tree, thespesia populnea, corr.). Can. also (kanchimara). Tam. also (káñji) [indian elm, jow]. Title otherwise Pindauloo, Pindaura, River portia. Botanically Trewia nudiflora, linn., euphorbiaceæ [vricsham, 118]. Alias Rottlera hoperiana, indica; Tetragastis osssea; Trewia macrophylla, macrostachys. Large tree; stipules linear-subulate, very caducous; leaves broad ovate, acute or acuminate, cordate or obtuse or subcuneate at the base, entire, five-nerved, membranaceous, biglandular at the base, young ones villous or pubescent on both sides and below, especially in the lower part, sprinkled with gold shining, very small, waxy glands, but soon altogether destitute of them; racemes axillary, males often exceeding the leaves, flower-bearing almost the whole length, females few-flowered; bracts very small; male calyx globose; segments of the female calyx long-acuminate, here and there cohering in pairs; anthers emarginate at the base and apex; ovary pale tawny, silky; fruit four to three coccous, sub-globose, smooth, pendulous; seeds smooth; in sandy places near the shore; flowering in february and march; small, whitish, greenish flowers. Wood white, soft, not durable. No other common species here.

CAUNDAL (காந்தல் - kándal, Tam.). Means burning, from burning ground. Neilgherry district, Todanaud division; lat. 11° 24′; long. 76° 43′; from Ootacamund N.W. 1¼ miles. Suburb of Ootacamund.——Caundy (காந்தி - kándi, Tam.). From (kándu, tam. to be sun burnt). Female proper name among the lower orders [peyar].

CAUNDAM (काण्ड - kánda, San.). A portion of a book; specially in epics and vedas. Distinguish from khandam.

CAUNG (காங்கு - kángu, Tam.). From (kán, tam. forest); from habitat. Botanically the Hopea genus, dipterocarpeæ [vricsham, 24]. Large, glabrous or hoary tomentose, resinous trees; heart-wood yellowish brown, hard, smooth, even-grained, seasons well. The species best known to the natives are shown below. Other s. indian species indigenous or naturalized are:—dichotoma, glabra, malabarica, odorata.——Common caung (காங்கு - kángu, Tam.). Botanically Hopea [caung] wightiana, wall., dipterocarpeæ [vricsham, 24]. Large tree; young branches and petioles densely pubescent; leaves ovate-oblong, rounded at the base and attenuated towards the apex into a very obtuse point, glabrous except on the rib above; panicles axillary, generally three together, shorter than, or as long as, the leaves; flowers pink, secund, bracteolate at the base of their very short pedicels; calyx glabrous; corolla hairy on the outside; stamens fifteen, alternately single and double; anthers terminated by a long bristle; fruit and calycine wings glabrous, bright crimson; very common in western forest; an echinate excrescence, much like young fruit of a spanish chestnut, is produced in the axils of the leaves, probably the formation of some insect in the bud of the panicle; large tracts are met with never apparently flowering, but abundantly covered with the abortive fruit-like excrescence; timber very valuable.——Water caung (ಕಿರಲ್ಬೋಗಿ - kiralbógi, Can.; ഇരിമ്പകം - irimpakam, Mal.; நீர்க்காங்கு - nírkkángu, Tam.). Title from habitat. Mal. from (irimpu, mal. iron + akam, mal. inside); from strong wood. Tam. from (nír, tam. water + kángu, tam. hopea genus). Can. also (tirpu). Botanically Hopea [caung] parviflora, bedd., dipterocarpeæ [vricsham, 24]. Large handsome tree, petioles, panicles, and calyx hairy; leaves short-petioled, glabrous, ovate to oblong, furnished with glands in the axils of the veins beneath; flowers secund, sub-sessile, numerous, very minute, fragrant; stamens fifteen, alternately single and in pairs; stigma three-cleft; common in both moist and dry forests; excrescences as in common caung; produces a gum [gond]; wood brown, hard, and close-grained, valued in south canara for building temples.

CAUNJIRAY (காஞ்சிரை - káñjirai, Tam.). From (káy, tam. fruit + shira, tam. to destroy). Same as Poison nut.

CAUNJORY (वृश्चिकाली - vrishchikálí, San.; खाज्रकुल्लि - khájrakulli, Conc.; کانچکوری - kánchkurí, Hind.; ದೂಲಗೊಂಡಿ - dúlagondi, Can.; దూలగొండి - dúlagondi, Tel.; ചൊറിഞ്ഞണം - choriññanam, Mal.; වල්කහඹිලියා - valkahambiliyá, Singh.; காஞ்சொறி - káñjori, Tam.). Title from tamul. San. from (vrishchika, san. scorpion + álí, san. friend); from similar burning sensation. Conc. from (khájara, mahr. stinging + kuirí, mahr. cowhage, mucuna pruriens, dc.). Hind. means cowhage, mucuna pruriens, dc. [common cowitch]. Tel. from (dúla, tel. itching + gondi, tel. wretch). Mal. from (chori, mal. itch). Singh. from (val, singh. creeper + kahambiliyá, singh. nettle, urtica). Tam. from (káy, tam. to be hot + shori, tam. to itch), as causing itching and burning sensation. San. also (dusparshá), meaning not to be touched [indian nightshade, prickly brinjaul]; (durálabhá), meaning not to be touched [arabian manna]; (samudrántá), meaning extending to the sea; (kachhurá), meaning itchy; (vrishchikapatri), meaning scorpion + leaf; from causing burning sensation on contact. Can. also (turachi) [common cowitch]. Tel. alsc (peddadúlagondi), meaning large + the plant; (télumanichettu), meaning scorpion + gem + plant. Mal. also (kotittúva), meaning creeper + nettle. Tam. also (erumaikkáñjori), meaning buffalo + the plant; (púnaikkáñjori), meaning cat + the plant; (vellaikkáñjori), meaning white + the plant; (shendotti), meaning good defence; (kannísi). Title otherwise Calycine tragia, Scorpion leaf, White caunjory. Botanically Tragia involucrata, muller, euphorbiaceæ [vricsham, 118]. Annual, twining; leaves oblong-lanceolate, acute, sharply serrated, alternate, closely covered with stinging hair; female bracts five-leaved, pinnated; flowers axillary in small clusters, several together on the same foot-stalk, upper ones male, under ones female; flowers small, greenish; flowering nearly all year; the hair sting like nettle; small root with no sensible taste nor smell. The root medicinally an alterative; the root in decoction [kwantam] internally against suppression of urine; the juice mixed with cow's milk and sugar given as a drink in fevers and itch; fruit made into paste applied to boils to hasten suppuration.——Small caunjory (कासघ्नी - kásaghní, San.; खाज्रकुल्लि - khájrakulli, Conc.; کاچکوری - káchkurí, Hind.; کانچکوری کا جھاڑ - kánchkuríkájhár, Dec.; ಕಿರುತುರಚಿ - kiruturachi, Can.; చిన్నదూలగొండి - chinnadúlagondi, Tel.; சிறுகாஞ்சொறி - shirugáñjori, Tam.). Title from size. San. from (kása, san. cough + han, san. to kill). Conc. means stinging cowhage. Hind. means cowhage, mucuna pruriens, dec. Can. from (kiru, can. small + turachi, can. tragia involucrata, müller). Tel. from (chinna, tel. small + dúlagondi, tel. tragia involucrata, müller). Tam. from (shiru, tam. small + káñjori, tam. tragia involucrata, müller). San. also (grahíni), meaning seizing; (virúpa), meaning shapeless. Can. also (sannaturachi), meaning small + tragia involucrata, müller. Tel. also (révatiddúlagondi), meaning regar soil + tragia involucrata, müller. Tam. also (karuppukkáñjori), meaning black + tragia involucrata, müller; (púnaikkáñjori), meaning cat + tragia involucrata, müller. Title otherwise Black caunjory; Hemp-leaved tragia. Botanically Tragia cannabina, l., euphorbiaceæ [vricsham, 118]. Annual; stem twining, hispid; leaves hairy, stinging, three-parted, lanceolate, petioled; peduncles lateral, solitary, one-flowered, the length of the leaves; flowers small, yellowish; hair stings like that of common nettle; root has, in dried state, but little taste or smell; in more succulent condition rather pleasant odour. Root is medicinally diaphoretic and alterative.

CAUNOM (കാണം - kánam, Mal.). From (kánuka, mal. to see). That which is seen; so deposit; so the tangible lump sum advance, bearing interest, on receiving which a west coast jenmy gives a lease of his land when desirous of raising money, which he cannot do by Veroompauttom [q.v.]. So by the elliptical technical language of Malabar that form of lease, or that tenure, itself. Caunom is the most ordinary form of lease-hold in Malabar. The origin was that the tenant was required to give a year's rent or pauttom in advance to the proprietor, either as a necessary security for payment or as a bonus for the profit he was allowed to enjoy [cuttacaunom, moonpauttom], and this turned to a permanent advance bearing interest. Looking to the fact of this advance, caunom is half a lease and half a mortgage. The following are the details. The landlord leases an estate to a tenant, giving him possession, but taking from him a sum of money or store of grain as deposit, and agreeing to pay him a small interest on this. At the end of the specified term, almost invariably twelve years, and always so where a fee has been paid, the landlord can demand repossession on payment of the amount taken in deposit and of compensation for any improvements that may have been made. During the tenancy, the tenant pays the whole profits to the landlord, after deducting the expenses of cultivation, the Government dues, and interest on the principal lent. The whole surplus is supposed to be paid over to the landlord, but the terms vary according to special agreement. The tenant cannot be ousted till the expiry of the term, except for injury to the estate. The tenant may obtain an extension of the term on payment of a renewal fine, theoretically supposed to be one-fifth of the sum originally lent. Should the landlord himself desire to raise a further sum of money on the land, and the tenant be unwilling to advance it, the landlord may assign the property to a third party, who will be entitled to possession on paying off the sum originally advanced by the first tenant. The latter however in his turn has the option of advancing the required sum and remaining in possession if he pleases [caunom poorangcadom]. To sum up, the rights of the landlord are to redeem at the end of the term on payment of what is due, to receive payment of the rent fixed as it falls due, or to deduct it from the refund of caunom if it is in arrears at the time of redemption, and to create what is called a mailcaunom or higher mortgage. The rights of the tenant are to assign his term, and to claim compensation for unexhausted improvements at the time of redemption. The caunom deed is the second of the six Pramaunams or Caranams or deeds of transfer of property recognized in the Malabar Sanscrit shastrams as culminating in acquired jenm [caranam]. It follows their Cooyicaunom or pitting lease, and precedes Otty or real mortgage. In North malabar the caunom sum is larger than in South malabar. For a conspectus of Malabar tenures see vol. II, 104; caunom is given there as coming next above Veroompauttom in the interests of tenant; for a stage higher see Otty. ——(1) Caunacaur (കാണക്കാരൻ - kánakkáran, Mal.). From (above + káran, mal. holder). The lessee or mortgagee.——Cauna coyoovan (കാണക്കൊഴുവൻ - kánakkozhuvan, Mal.). From (above + kozhuvan, mal. tenant). Lessee or mortgagee [coyoovan].——Cauna jenma maryauda arinyaver (കാണജന്മമൎയ്യാദ യറിയുന്നവർ - kánajanmamaryádayariyunnavar, Mal.). From (above + janmam, mal. birthright + maryáda, mal. custom + ari, mal. to know). Assessors by whom the value of an estate is determined and the proportion of the caunacaur and jenmy adjusted.——Cauna palisha (കാണപ്പലിശ - kánappalisha, Mal.). From (above + palisha, mal. interest). Interest on caunom deposited by lessee or mortgagee.——Cauna pauttom (കാണപ്പാട്ടം - kánappáttam, Mal.). From (above + páttam, mal. rent). The yearly rent payable by a Caunacaur. It does not usually exceed one-third of the net produce. It is opposed to Veroompauttom, the rent of a simple lease, where no deposit has been made and which is generally at least two-thirds.——Caunatoga (കാണത്തുക - kánattuka, Mal.). From (above + tuka, mal. amount). Amount of deposit in caunom.——Caunavacausham (കാണാവകാശം - kánávakásham, Mal.). From (above + avakásha, san. claim). A Caunacaur's claim.——Caunom poorangcadom (കാണംപുറങ്കടം - kánampurankatam, Mal.). From (above + puram, mal. outside + katam, mal. debt). An expedient of Jenmies for raising more money on land already made over to a tenant on caunom, from the same tenant. It is a separate transaction. It sometimes takes place at the time of arranging the caunom, in which case it is referred to in the caunom deed. At other times it is effected after the lessee has come into possession; in that case the fact of the caunom or lease is alluded to in this deed, and the landlord engages to pay off both the caunom and the new loan together. The loan of Poorangcadom gives the Caunacaur an additional lien upon the property.——(2) Cootticaunom (കുററിക്കാണം - kuttikkánam, Mal.). From (kutti, mal. stump + above). Stump mortgage. In this a landlord assigns on caunom a tract of forest land, receiving a stipulated fee for every tree felled by the mortgagee. ——Cooyicaunom (കുഴിക്കാണം - kuzhikkánam, Mal.). From (kuzhi, mal. pit + above). A special pitting lease antecedent to caunom. Lease by which land is let for improving. The tenant under this pays no real caunom and ordinarily no rent to the jenmy, and at the end of his term receives compensation [chamayam] for all trees planted, houses and walls built, &c., but only for such improvements as are of a permanent nature. If there happen to be any trees on the land at the time of leasing, the tenant pays rent for them. The tenant can be ousted for neglecting to improve the property according to agreement. He on his side cannot give up the property before the fixed time, but he can transfer his estate or any lesser one. Where no express period has been stipulated this lease is considered to run for twelve years. Cf. Cuttacaunom for another lease prior to Caunom and Coodiyiroopp for house-lease.——Cuttacaunom (കട്ടക്കാണം - kattakkánam, Mal.). From (katta, mal. lump + above). Ground-breaking lease. Another name for Moonpauttom or step between Veroompauttom and Caunom, or tenure of a simple lessee who deposits in his Jenmy's hands a single year's rent as security for due fulfilment of his lease contract, and for payment of rent. Cuttacaunom does not carry with it a right to hold for twelve years; the security is returned without interest at the end of the lease. The cultivator pays the full established pauttom besides. This differs from the payments under Caunom, Otty, and the higher tenures in that no interest is claimable on it.——Nauticaunom (നാട്ടിക്കാണം - nátikkánam, Mal.). From (nátu, mal. to inspect + above). A sum after inspection. A sum in compensation to himself deducted by a proprietor from the tenant's deposit or loan [in Caunom and Otty for the depreciation of the estate by neglect. ——Pautta caunom (പാട്ടക്കാണം - páttakkánam, Mal.). From (páttam, mal. rent + above). Rent.——Tooshicaunom (തുശിക്കാണം - túshikkánam, Mal.). From (túshi, mal. iron style + above). Fee paid to the writer who draws a transfer deed.——Vettoocaunom (വെട്ടുകാണം - vettukánam, Mal.). From (vettu, mal. to dig + above). Form of caunom where compensation [chamayam] is payable to an outgoing tenant for having cleared and levelled land, in other words for tillages.

CAUNOOGA (ಕಾನಗ - kánaga, Can.; కానుగ - kánuga, Tel.; പുന്ന - punnu, Mal.; புங்கு - pungu, Tam.). Title from canarese. Can. from (kánu, can. hard). Tel. from (kánu, tel. hard) [karanj]. Mal. from tamul. Tam. from (punmai, tam. inferiority); inferior wood [karanj, malabar poon]. Tel. also (peddasápara), meaning large + symplocos racemosa, rox.; (errapattsári), meaning red + dalbergia paniculata, roxb. Botanically Dalbergia [yooga pattricay] lanceolaria, linn., leguminosæ [vricsham, 48]. Alias Dalbergia arborea, frondosa. Tree, 30 feet; bark smooth; leaves pinnate; leaflets about five pairs, alternate, cuneate oval, emarginate, when very young silky; panicles axillary, pubescent; flowers secund, racemose along the alternate branches of the panicles, small, bluish white; calyx hairy; alæ as long as the vexillum, about twice as long as the keel; corolla papilionaceous; ovary very slightly pubescent; legume lanceolate, one to four-seeded or less; handsome and quick-growing; mountains of south of peninsula; taller and straighter than sissoo [q.v.]. The bark in infusion is given in dyspepsia, and the leaves rubbed over the body in leprosy [cooshtam] and cutaneous diseases; a fixed fat oil procured from the seeds used in rheumatic affections; milk which exudes from the roots applied to ulcers. Wood white, moderately hard; not durable; no heart-wood; may be used for building purposes.——Creeper caunooga (తీగకానుగ - tígakánuga, Tel.; പന്നിവള്ളി - pannivalli, Mal.; கொடிப்புங்கு - kodippungu, Tam.). Title from habit and resemblance. Tel. from (tíga, tel. creeper + kánuga, tel. dalbergia lanceolaria, linn.). Mal. from (panni, mal. hog + valli, mal. creeper). Tam. from (kodi, tam. creeper + pungu, tam. dalbergia lanceolaria, linn.). Tel. also (mottasirli); (surli); (chiratalabódi). Mal. also (muyalvalli), meaning hare + creeper. Title otherwise Hog creeper. Botanically Derris scandens, benth., leguminosæ [vricsham, 48]. Alias Brachypterum scandens; Dalbergia scandens. Twining shrub; leaflets opposite, oblong-lanceolate, obtuse at the apex; petioles channelled; calyx with two small bracteoles at its base, truncated, with a short tooth opposite the keel; vexillum callous at the base of the limb; wings ciliated at the base; legume almost sessile, linear-lanceolate, two to three-seeded; racemes axillary, longer than the leaves; pedicels fascicled, slender; flowers numerous, white or pale-rose, fragrant; flowering in august. There are other species :—canarensis, heyneana, ovalifolia, robusta, uliginosa.

CAUNTAM (कान्त - kánta, San.; लोहकान्त - lóhakánta, Mahr.; مقناطيس - maknátís, Ar.; آهن ربا - áhanrubá, Pers.; چمك پتهر - chamakpatthar, Hind.; بتو برني - batubrani, Malay; సూదంటురాయి - súdanturáyi, Tel.; അയസ്കാന്തം - ayaskántam, Mal.; කාන්තගල - kántagala, Singh.; காந்தம் - kándam, Tam.). San. from (kam, san. to long for). Mahr. from (lóha, san. iron + kánta, san. magnet). Ar. from greek. Pers. from (áhan, pers. iron + rubá, pers. attractor). Hind. from (chamak, hind. flash + patthar, hind. stone). Malay from (batu, malay, stone + brani, malay, bold). Tel. from (súdi, tel. needle + antu, tel. to stick + ráyi, tel. stone). Mal. from (ayas, san. iron + kánta, san. attracting). Singh. from (kánta, san. loadstone + gala, singh. stone). Tam. from sanscrit. Ar. also (hajrul-mighnátís), meaning magnet stone. Pers. also (sangichamak), meaning stone + flash. Malay also (basibrani), meaning bold iron. Loadstone. Otherwise Magnet. Ferri oxidum magneticum of chemists. A combination of the protoxide and peroxide of iron. Chief use is in making the mariner's compass; but veidyans consider to possess tonic and deobstruent qualities, and prescribe powder in conjunction with aromatics and sulphur [gandhac], in consumption and dropsy. Arakk cauntam, from (arakku, tam.) lac is a red kind. Cull cauntam is magnetic iron stone, used medicinally in anæmia and gastritis; according to their shape magnets are called oorlay or round, tagatt or flat, &c. Caunta munn is magnesite, see vol. II, 38, wherein is found carbonatè of magnesia; magnesia or oxide of magnesium, obtained from the latter by applying heat; and sulphate of magnesia or epsom's salts. Caunta shatroo, from (shatru, san. enemy), are things which counteract the magnetic power; as blue-vitriol [mayil toottam], salammoniac [nowshaudar] and saltpetre [shorah].——Cauntan (कान्त - kánta, San.). Lover. Suffix in proper names as Lutchmicauntan [peyar].——Caunty (कान्ति - kánti, San.). Brightness, love. Plant second term. Ex.:—Hibiscus mutabilis (súryakánti), lover of the sun; flower opens when sun is up and like it in color and form. Ipomæa bonanox, var. grandiflora (chandrakánti), lover of the moon; flower opens when moon is up and white in color.

CAUR (كار - kár, Hind.). Work [car].——Cauram (कार - kára, San.). From (kri, san. to do). Doing. Abstract agency. Suffix in compounds; as Balautcauram, meaning by force + doing, violence. Distinguish from cauram, alkali.——Cauran (കാരൻ - káran, Mal.; காரன் - káran, Tam.). Doer. Personal agency suffix in compounds; as Carmacauran, meaning work + doer, artisan.——Cauranam (कारण - kárana, San.). From (kri, san. to do). Cause. According to Sheiva philosophy it is threefold, viz.:—"a" moothal cauranam, material or proximate cause, the clay from which pot is made, the primitive Mauyay out of which the universe is produced;—"b" toonay cauranam, auxiliary or instrumental cause as the wheel of the potter, the Shacty or energy of shiva;—"c" nimitta cauranam, the efficient cause or agent as the potter, Shiva in the production of the world [matam].——Caurchoby (كارچوبي - kárchobí, Hind.). From (above + chob, pers. stick); from the frame of wooden laths on which the embroidery is done. Solid embroidery in gold thread [calaubat], employed for cushions of state, elephant trappings, &c. [zardozy].——Caurgah (كارگاه - kárgáh, Hind.). From (above + gáh, pers. place). Manufactory.——Caurinda (كارنده - kárindah, Hind.). From (above + suffix denoting agént). Servant, revenue clerk.——Caurjy (కార్జి - kárji, Tel.). From (above + jí, hind. honorific address). Head of a village [inam].——Caury (कारी - kárí, San.). From (kri, san. to do). A doer. Suffix of agency in compounds; as adhicaury, meaning over + doer.

CAUR (ಕಾರು - káru, Can.; కారు - káru, Tel.; கார் - kár, Tam.). Means dark [calam, car, caulam] or wild. Prefix in place names as in Caurcoody, meaning village with dark soil.—"a" The wet season of the year corresponding to either of the monsoon [q.v.] periods. The S.W. monsoon is sometimes called Moongaur [q.v.], and the N.E. Hingaur [q.v.]. In Tamul countries Caur is generally restricted to S.W., and then equivalent to Poonansa [q.v.] of N districts. Natives consider that there is a second burst of the S.W. in August and September; this is sometimes called Caur specially.—"b" The term indicates also the paddy [q.v.] of the corresponding season. The following are different kinds of Caur paddy:—Aroovaul caur means sickle, from sickle-shaped grain; Auny caur is from the month of sowing; Chittray caur from month of reaping; Coolla caur means short stalk; Eroomay caur means buffalo, being coarse; Mottay caur means blunt, from shape of grain; Mutta caur means palm stem, from color of grain; Oonday caur means ball, from roundish rice; Peroom caur means large size; Pody shandicaur means small and stubborn grain which cannot be easily husked off; Pooldy caur means raised on dry ground; Pooncaur means flower, being soft and superior; Shem caur means red, from color of grain; Tella caur means white, from color of ear growing. Compare Pishaunam.—"c" Cauriyan means the black man. Pariah proper name. Caury is feminine [peyar].—"d" Plant first term, often joining two genera, meaning wild. Ex., where transl. is of second term:—Atylosia scarabæoides (káranlava), dolichos biflorus; Bridelia retusa, var. roxburghiana (káratti), ficus glomerata; Carallia integerrima (káralli), memecylon; Caralluma adscendens (kárallamu), zingiber officinale; Dysophylla cruciata (kárutumma), leucas indica; Gardenia latifolia (káringuva), ferula narthex; Hibiscus vitifolius (kárupatti), gossypium herbaceum; Laggera aurita (kárupogáku), nicotiana tabacum; Phaseolus adenanthus (káralatsanda), vigna catiang; Rhynchosa viscosa (kárukandi), cajanus indicus; Sterculia colorata (káruboppáyi), carica papaya; Zingiber cassumanar (kárupasupu), curcuma longa. See gloss. paragraphs.—"e" Plant first term, meaning black. Ex.:—Aleurites triloba (kárankólam), black alangium lamarckii; Aristolochia bracteata (kárirattam), black blood, from flowers; Indigofera echinata (kárnoggilu), black tribulus terrestris; Jatropha curcas (kárnoççi), black vitex; Zehneria umbellata (kárkkóvai), black cephalandra indica. See gloss. paragraphs.——Caurallam (मकरसिंग - makarasinga, Mahr.; కారల్లము - kárallamu, Tel.; கள்ளிமுளையான் - kallimulaiyán, Tam.). Title from teloogoo. Mahr. means monkey horn. Tel. from (káru, tel. forest + allamu, tel. ginger, zingiber officinale, roscoe). Tam. from (kalli, tam. euphorbia tirucalli, linn. + mulai, tam. sprout); from fleshy leafless stems. Tel. also (tavatichettu), meaning bran + plant. Tam. also (ezhumán); (ezhumánbuli). Title otherwise Bran plant, Monkey's horn, Spurge sprout, Wild ginger. Botanically Caralluma genus, asclepiadeæ [vricsham, 88]. Generic from teloogoo. Fleshy, erect, nearly leafless herbs, with very thick stem and branches which are almost cylindrical or angular; leaves minute and dropping off; flowers solitary or in pairs at the upper nodes; follicles long and slender with hairy seeds. The species best known to the natives are:—Adscendens, curious looking fleshy plant with angular stems; flowers often nodding; used in pickles and chutney [q.v.]; young tetragonal stems used as famine food. Attenuata, dry plains at foot of neilgherries. Edulis. Fimbriata, flowers yellowish above, transversely purple-streaked, underneath „ yellow.——Cauraumany (காராமணி - kárámani, Tam.). From (kár, tam. black + á, tam. cow + mani, tam. grain). From dark grain and serving as fodder. Cow gram.——Caurcal (ಕಾರ್ಕಳ - kárkala, Can.). From (kare, can. black + kallu, can. stone); black stone found here in abundance.—"a" Deputy tahsildarry, South canara district. Pay Rs. 70.—"b" Village, Port, Deputy tahsildar's station; South canara dist., Oodipy tal.; pop. 4,115; lat. 13° 13′; long. 75° 02′; from Coondapore S.E. 35 miles; from Madras W. 355 miles; from Mangalore N.E. 26 miles; from Oodipy E.S.E. 18 miles; from Poottore N.N.W. 34 miles; from Soobramanyam N.W. 56 miles; from the sea E. 16 miles. On one of the main lines from Mysore to Mangalore. Once a populous Jeina town. Jeina statue and group of temples. The image called Goomta [gomataroya] is made of one piece of granite [caroomcull], the extreme dimensions of which above ground are 41 feet 5 inches in height, 10½ feet in breadth, and 10 feet in thickness and there are probably 3 feet more under ground. It was erected, according to an inscription on it in A.D. 1432. Only three of these great monolithic Jeina statues are known to exist, the others being at Shravanabelgola in Mysore and Yenoor in this district. This one represents Bauhoobalin, son of Vrishabhanautan, the first of the Teertancarans, and was erected by Veera paundyan. The principal basty [q.v.] is an elaborately sculptured building whose forms very closely follow those of wooden originals, as do most of the structures of the Western coasts. This is especially noticeable on the roof. The pillars of the mantapam and the base of the handsome monolithic pillar in front are well sculptured. The designs of some of the figure sculptures are purely Veishnava; for instance Vishnoo on the Garoodan, the boy Krishnan with the serpent, &c. The scroll work and the devices on some of the square pillar bases are admirably designed; amongst others an intricately twisted rope ornament and a geometrical pattern strongly recalling to mind that in constant use on Japanese pottery, of which the matrix is the swasticam [q.v.]. On one of the pillar shafts is a band like the plaits of a woman's hair. Near the village are the ruins of the palace of Bheirava arsoo wodeyar, the most powerful of the Jeina rajahs of Tooloovam, who was overthrown by Shivappa naick of Ikkairy. A high monolithic Dhwaja stambham [q.v.], a kind of obelisk, a Hindoo temple [coil] containing a figure of Ananta shayanan, and a Jeina impaling stone, are the other curiosities of this village. There are several inscriptions all in Canarese in the Ananta pudmanaubhan temple, dating from A.D. 1334 to 1592. There is a small lake here. The village is the centre of a considerable rice trade [betta].

CAUR (కారు - káru, Tel.). To flow.——Caurem (కారెము - káremu, Tel.). Hollowed trunk of a palm tree shaped like a canoe and balancing like a see-saw, to draw up water [picottah].——Caurempoody (కారెంపూడి - kárempúdi, Tel.). From (káremu, tel. hollow trunk of a palm tree used to conduct water + púdi, tel. village). Village, Head-quarters of District moonsif; Kistna dist., Pulnaud tal.; pop. 1,941; acres 4,265; lat. 16° 26′; long. 72° 46′; from Dauchepully S. 11¼ miles; from Masulipatam W.N.W. 94 miles. Scene of the cock-fights mentioned in the ballads of the Pulnaud heroes. This sport still survives. Several cromlechs have been opened in this neighbourhood. Temple of Sooreshwarasawmy. Two storied mantapams [q.v.]. Fourteen inscriptions, one of the reign of Coolotoonga chola A.D. 1154, others of the reign of the Regent Roodramma.

CAUR (കാർ - kár, Mal.; காறு - káru, Tam.). Ploughshare [calappay].——Cauraulan (കാരാളൻ - kárálan, Mal.). From (above + álu, mal. to own). Worker. The agent or deputy for the Ooraulan, or founder in the management of the lands of Malabar temples; the enjoyer of the Cauroyma tenure given therefor.——Cauroyma (കാരായ്മ - kháráyma, Mal.). The office of Cauraulan or temple land bailiff in Malabar [ooroyma]. So the tenure by which these hold certain temple lands. For conspectus of Malabar tenures, see vol. II, 104.——Cauroymacaur (കാരായ്മക്കാരൻ - káráyamakkáran, Mal.). Same as Cauraulan.

CAURAM (क्षार - kshára, San.; کہار - khár, Hind.; காரம் - káram, Tam.). San. from (kshar, san. to flow); a corrosive substance. Hind. and Drav. from sanscrit. Distinguish from cauram, suffix [caur]. Any alkali; substance changing the colors of the vegetable blues to green, and yellows to brown; neutralising acids [tezaub] and forming with them salts; has a peculiar hot, bitter, and caustic taste. Alkaline ashes [sujjeekhaur] are obtained by natives in the ruder parts of the country by burning plants. So more specifically a body, which having a two-fold attraction for organic fibres and coloring particles serves as a bond of union between them and thus gives fixity to coloring substances, constituting them dyes [shauyam]; the tamulians have a large assortment of these; their chief mineral mordants are alum [padicauram], and the salts of iron; alkalies derived from the ashes of many plants are used as mordants, when mineral are absent.——(1) The following are two key-lists in the briefest possible terms of the principal vegetable mordants of s. india for which vernacular names are known; further information must be traced in the glossary paragraphs through the small type cross-references at end of this volume; see also vricsham, 7,• for the method of expressing the products, &c., of plants in the dravidian languages:—"a" Abrus precatorius, indian liquorice, ashes; Acacia intsia, corindah, bark and leaves; Achyranthes aspera, indian burr, ashes; Adhatoda vasica, malabar nut, ashes; Alstonia scholaris, dita, ashes; Amarantus spinosus, thorny spinach, ashes; Averrhoa carambola, coromandel gooseberry, fruit; Bambusa arundinacea, common bamboo, ashes; Bassia latifolia, wild mohwah, bark; Bauhinia purpurea, purple mountain ebony, bark; Bauhinia variegata, variegated mountain ebony, bark; Cæsalpinia bonducella, bonduc, ashes; Calotropis gigantea, mudar, ashes; Carissa carandas, carondah, fruit; Cassia fistula, indian laburnum, ashes; Cedrus deodara, deodar, ashes; Erythrina indica, common coral tree, ashes; Euphorbia nereifolia, leafy milk hedge, ashes; Euphorbia tirucalli, round milk hedge, ashes; Ficus infectoria, stone banyan, galls; Gmelina arborea, cashmere tree, ashes; Holarrhena antidysenterica, tellicherry bark, ashes; Indigofera tinctoria, indigo, ashes; Luffa ægyptiaca, oil-giving luffa, ashes; Mangifera indica, mango, dry unripe fruit; Musa paradisiaca, plantain, ashes; Nerium odorum, oleander ashes; Pennisetum spicatum, spiked millet, ashes; Pistacia integerrima, zebra wood tree, galls; Pistacia vera, pistachio nut tree, galls; Pongamia glabra, indian beech, bark; Quercus infectoria, dyer's oak, galls; Salicornia brachiata, glosswort, ashes; Salvadora oleoides, large tooth-brush tree, galls; Shorea robusta, common saul, ashes; Suæda indica, indian saltwort, ashes; Suæda nudiflora, sea side indian saltwort, ashes; Symplocos racemosa, californian cinchona, ashes; Tamarindus indica, tamarind, fruit; Tamarix dioica, cypress tamarisk, galls; Tamarix gallica, indian tamarisk, galls; Vitex negundo, notchy, ashes.—"b" Bamboo, bambusa; Banyan, ficus; Beech, pongamia; Bonduc, cæsalpinia; Burr, achyranthes; Carondah, carissa; Cashmere tree, gmelina; Cinchona, symplocos; Coral tree, erythrina; Corindah, acacia; Deodar, cedrus; Dita, alstonia; Glosswort, salicornia; Gooseberry, averrhoa; Indigo, indigofera; Kino, butea; Laburnum, cassia; Leadwort, plumbago; Liquorice, abrus; Malabar nut, adhatoda; Mango, mangifera; Milk hedge, euphorbia; Millet, pennisetum; Mohwah, bassia; Mountain ebony, bauhinia; Mudar, calotropis; Notchy, vitex; Oak, quercus; Oleander, nerium; Pistachio nut, pistacia; Plantain, musa; Saltwort, suæda; Saul, shorea; Spinach, amarantus; Tamarind, tamarindus; Tamarisk, tamarix; Tellicherry bark, holarrhena; Tooth-brush tree, salvadora; Zebra-wood tree, pistacia.——(2) The different kinds of ordinary mineral cauram are shown in the sub-paragraphs below.——Appalacauram (پاپڑ کہار - páparkhár, Hind.; پپڑ کہار - papparkhár, Dec.; అప్పలాకారము - appalákáramu, Tel.; പപ്പടക്കാരം - pappatakkáram, Mal.; அப்பளாக்காரம் - appalákkáram, Tam.). Title from (appalam, tam. thin cake). Hind. from (pápar, hind. thin cake). A sub carbonate of soda [sowdoo] from a particular kind of pooneer [q.v.] containing saltness or acidity mixed with much sharpness. It produces a burning sensation on the tongue and is used chiefly in the manufacture of the thin wafer-like biscuits called poppadams [q.v.].——Caudy cauram (काडिखार - kádikhára, Mahr.; کاڑی کہار - kárikhár, Hind.; ಕಾಡಿಕಾರ - kádikára, Can.; కాడికారము - kádikáramu, Tel.; കാടിക്കാരം - kátikkáram, Mal.; காடிக்காரம் - kádikkáram, Tam.). Hind. from (kári, hind. stick), from appearance, stick caustic. Nitrate of silver, argenti nitras of chemists, but the bazaar article is impure; occasionally prepared by hakeems [q.v.]; in large doses an irritant poison; in medicinal doses astringent, sedative and antispasmodic; taken internally darkens the skin; the strongest and most manageable caustic known.——Munn cauram (மண்காரம் - mangáram, Tam.). From (man, tam. earth + above). General term for soda. A crude carbonate of soda is here obtained in two ways; as an efflorescence on the soil, from the ashes of certain saltworts or plants containing sodium. The former is Sujjee matty, or sowdoo [q.v.]; the latter is Sujjee khaur [q.v.], the barilla of commerce.——Oovar munn cauram (చవిటిమన్నుప్పు - tsavitimannuppu, Tel.; உவர்மண்காரம் - uvarmangáram, Tam.). Tel. from (tsavitimannu, tel. fuller's earth + uppu, tel. salt). Tam. from (uvar, tam. salt + man, tam. earth + kshára, san. alkali). An impure carbonate of soda made from dhoby's earth, otherwise Oovar munn, otherwise Soonnapoo sowdoo.——Padicauram (स्फटिकारि - sp'hatikári, San.; पटिकार - patikára, Mahr.; زاج - záj, Ar.; زاك - zák, Pers.; پھٹکری - phitkarí, Hind.; پھٹکری - phatakrí, Dec.; توس - tawas, Malay; ಪಟಿಕಾರ - patikára, Can.; ಪಟಿಕಾರ - patikára, Too.; పటికారము - patikáramu, Tel.; ചീനിക്കാരം - chínikkáram, Mal.; ചീനക്കാരം - chínakkáram, Singh.; படிக்காரம் - padikkáram, Tam.). San. from (sp'hatika, san. crystal + ari, san. foe); crystal-rival in lustre. Mal. from (chíni, mal. chinese + káram, mal. alkali). Tam. from sanscrit. Mahr. also (turatí), from the acid astringent taste. Ar. also (shib); (zájiabyaz), meaning white vitriol. Pers. also (zákisufid), meaning white vitriol; (zákibillaur), meaning crystal vitriol. Tam. also (shínakkáram), meaning china + alkali. Alum. Alumen of chemists. Double salt composed of sulphate of potash and sulphate of alumina; found native in small quantities, but has long been produced artificially from different ores; brittle, inodorous, crystallises in transparent octahedrons; has an acid, sweetish, astringent taste; the common impure alum contains potash [jharkanamak]. Veidyans employ it as astringent, styptic and antiseptic [ospitry, veidyan]; pharm. preparation is alumen exsiccatum. In veterinary practice; equal parts of alum and calomel are used in cancer of the feet; three drachms each of alum and catechu [q.v.] are used for soft doing, when not arising from diseased liver; four drachms of alum in a bottle of water are used for sore mouth. Used for clarifying muddy water; it dissolves in five parts of water at 60°, and the solution reddens blues; the dyers [shauyam] use it for fixing and giving brilliancy to colors in chintz and other paintings, particularly purple and deep red; chucklers employ it in preparing soft white leather. Goldsmiths use it to brighten gold ornaments.——Poongauram (सर्ज्जिकाक्षार - sarjjikákshára, San.; सज्जाखार - sajjákhára, Mahr.; ملح القلی - milhulkilí, Ar.; شخار - shikhár, Pers.; سجی - sajjí, Hind.; سجی کہار - sajjikhár, Dec.; ಸೂಜಾಕಾರ - sújákára, Can.; చవిటికారము - tsavitikáramu, Tel.; ചാരം - cháram, Mal.; பூநீறுக்காரம் - púnírukkáram, Tam.). San. from (sarja, san. impure carbonate of soda + kshára, san. alkali). Ar. from (milh, ar. salt + kilí, ar. alkali). Hind. from sanscrit. Can. from sanscrit. Tel. from (tsaudu, tel. fuller's earth + kshára, san. alkali). Mal. from (kshára, san. alkali). Tam. from (pú, tam. flower + níru, tam. ashes + kshára, san. alkali). San. also (sarjiká). Hind. also (chínákálon), meaning white salt; (sajjilon), meaning sujjee salt. Dec. also (chaurkánamak), meaning fuller's salt. Tel. also (tsavitimannuppu), meaning fuller's earth + salt. Tam. also (valaiyaluppu), meaning glass bracelet + salt. Nitre of the Bible. A carbonate of soda mixed with various impurities, popularly called soda [munn cauram]; obtained from pooneer [q.v.] or from dhoby's earth [q.v.]; compare sujjeekhaur from vegetables. Poongauram is found in the bazaar, in regular whitish cakes about third part of an inch thick; has smell like new-burnt quicklime. When purified employed by veidyans as antacid and alterative; substituted for british carbonate and bicarbonate of soda; in water poured over lemon juice, sweetened with sugar, forms a pleasant effervescing draught. It is used in preparing the lac [q.v.] dye in the process of glass-making [cunnaudy] and soap-making [sauboon]; it is also used in dyeing cloth and leather, and by painters; it is one of the ingredients employed in preparing red cotton [potee] and likewise in the process of dyeing [shauyam] leather red.——Vengauram (टङ्कण - tankana, San. and Mahr.; بورق - búrak, Ar.; تنگار - tangár, Pers.; تنکال - tinkál, Hind.; سہاگا - sohágá, Dec.; پجار - pijár, Malay; ಬಿಳಿಗಾರ - biligára, Can.; వెలిగారము - veligáramu, Tel.; പൊങ്കാരം - ponkáram, Mal.; വെംഗാരം - vengáram, Singh.; வெங்காரம் - vengáram, Tam.). San. from (tank, san. to bind); from astringency. Ar. from (baraka, ar. to glisten). Pers. from sanscrit, Hind. from sanscrit. Can. from (bili, can. white + kára, can. alkali). Tel. from (vella, tel. white + kshára, san. alkali). Mal. from (pon, mal. gold + káram, mal. alkali); used to melt gold. Tam. from (ven, tam. white + kshára, san. alkali). San. also (tagara). Ar. also (milhussághah), meaning goldsmith's salt. Malay also (patteri). Mal. also (vellakkáram), meaning white alkali. Singh. also (puskara); (lansipuskara), meaning dutch borax. Borax. Sodæ subboras, Sodæ biboras of chemists. Imported from north-west. Sold in transparent, colorless, crystalline masses or pieces of various sizes, inodorous, with a cool saltish styptic taste; after exposure to air becomes covered with a whitish efflorescence. Medicinally astringent lotion in hot eruptions on body; also gargle; criminally used to procure abortion; pharm. preparations are mel boracis, glycerinum boracis; with veidyans, refrigerant, diuretic, emmenagogue, parturifacient and lithontriptic; locally applied, stimulant; never used alone. Used as flux for metals [loham] by goldsmiths and tinmen; with it veishnavites prepare the red tirchoornam [q.v.] for their forehead marks.

Alias Canthium cymosum; Cupia cymosa; Gardenia parviflora; Plectronia didyma; Psydrax dicoccos; Rondeletia cymosa; Webera cymosa. Unarmed shrub; leaves oval, more or less acuminated, glabrous, coriaceous; upper side shining, under with glandular hollows in the axils of the nerves; cymes axillary, peduncled, much shorter than the leaves; calyx-limb with five often inconspicuous teeth; corolla-tube hairy inside; stigma much exserted, mitre-shaped, slightly two-lobed at the apex, drupe when ripe compressed and somewhat didymous, obovate, wrinkled and tubercled, marked with a furrow on each side; flowers white, very fragrant; interior mountains of the coromandel coast; hard wood.——Elephant cauray (ஆனைக்காரை - ánaikkárai, Tam.); from size. Same as Wodier.——Manilla cauray (മണിലക്കാര - manilakkára, Mal.). Same as Edible paulay.——Sweet cauray (மதுக்காரை - mathukkárai, Tam.). From taste of seeds. Common emetic nut.

CAURAY (ಗಾರೆ - gáre, Can.; ಗಚ್ಚಿ - gaççi, Too.; గార - gára, Tel.; കുമ്മായം - kummáyam, Mal.; காரை - kárai, Tam.). Mal. from (kummu, tam. to beat in a mortar). Tam. from (karai, tam. to dissolve). Mortar or plaster covering walls. Muttycauray is a coarse, and Sannacauray is a fine, kind.

CAURTEY (కార్తె - kárte, Tel.). From (krittiká, san. the constellation, so called); not connected with caur [q.v.], darkness. Primarily the period of the sun's stay in the nacshatram Kritticay, which was once the first of the twenty-seven nacshatrams [q.v.], some 2,500 years ago. Thence extended to other nacshatrams which follow. Now the period in which the sun lies in any nacshatram. Each Caurtey is divided into four quarters [jyotisham].—"a" The caurteys enable ryots roughly to forecast season and pursue cultivation on some system. Caurteys fifth to seventeenth include whole period when rains are due. Kritticay, third, early may, hottest part of year, is of evil influence being ruled by fire; no native builds a house in this caurtey; with first rain if any in this, ploughing is begun; these are the showers in advance of s.w. monsoon, arising from cyclonic disturbance by change of monsoons. Rohiny, fourth, end of may, is cooler and there are sometimes showers here also; if enough rain has fallen here or in june dry crops are put down after a heavy shower; commonest are raggy, cumboo, varagoo, gingelly, cotton. Mrigashiram fifth caurtey begins early in june;—మృగశిరలో చిన్నె ముసలి ఎద్దు రంకె వేయును—"if there "be drizzle in mrigashiram, it will make even an old bull "bellow;" that is, for joy; if no rain falls a drought is expected for following five caurteys, till middle of august; with first showers in this caurtey, the more general sowing of paddy, cumboo, raggy, &c., is begun. Ardray, sixth, end of june; if there should be thunder in this without rain, it presages drought for next sixty days; but if it rains then it is held to continue for next six caurteys, till end of september;—ఆర్ద్రలో ఉరిమితే అరవై దినాల కరవు, ఆర్ద్రలో వర్షిస్తే, ఆరు కార్తెలు కురుసును—"if there "be thunder in ardray, the rain will fail for sixty days; but if it "rain then, it will continue for the next six caurteys;" this caurtey is inauspicious for either sowing or transplanting. Poonarvas, seventh, early july, a second sowing of paddy is tried in this if first had failed; also various pulses and grams. Pooshyam, eighth, latter half of july; in this cumboo and other dry crops are transplanted. Aushlaisham, ninth, early august; in this slight showers are usual;—ఆశ్లేష వాన అరికాలు తడుపు—"rain "in aushlaisham just suffices to wet the sole of the foot;" transplanting of paddy is begun. Magham, tenth, latter half of august; in this transplantation is continued; if there should be lightning and thunder in this caurtey it is taken as a certain sign of an on-coming good season;—మఖ ఉరిమితే మదురు మీద కర్ర అయినా పండును—"if magham thunders even the dry stalk on the "wall-coping will yield fruit;" on the other hand if there should be no thundery rain during tenth and eleventh caurteys, natives hold it as an indication of coming famine. Poobbam, eleventh, early september; in this the ryots do not sow but transplantation is continued;—పుబ్బలో చల్లుటకంటె దిబ్బలో చల్లేది మేలు—"it is "better to throw the seed into the rubbish heap than to sow it "in poobbam;" if it should rain well now, it is expected to continue;—పుబ్బ రేగినా బూతు రేగినా నిలవదు—"if it rains hard in "poobbam, or if a foul tongue wags, either will be unceasing." Oottaram, twelfth, middle of september; in this if there should be rain and thunder it is certain to continue; in fact the end of this s.w. and beginning of n.e. monsoons will unite;—ఉత్తరలో ఉరిమిన పాము తరిమిన విడువదు—"if there be rain with thunder "in oottaram it will not cease, if a snake pursues and bites it "will not be without effect." If there has been no rain before and there should be no rain either in magham or in poobbam or oottaram that is till end of september it is an unmistakeable indication of coming drought and famine;—మఖ పుబ్బలు వరుపైతే మహత్తైన కష్టము; ఉత్తర చూచి ఎత్తర గంప—"failure of rain in magham "and poobbam, forebodes a famine; but wait till oottaram, and "if it does not rain even then, it is best to emigrate with your "basket." In oottaram caurtey the peira or second dry crop cultivation is begun; and latest sown paddy is transplanted;—ఉత్తరలో చల్లితే ఊబున పడితే పిట్టకైనా చాలదు—"crop sown in oottaram gives a "meagre yield." Hastam, thirteenth, early october; in this the n.e. monsoon sets in;—హస్తం అడివాన కాలము చక్కని గొల్లవాండ్రు యొల్లరూ, బండమీద గొర్రెలను చేయండి—"that hastam is the season of heavy rain "is foreseen by the sheep which ask the herdsmen to fold them "on the rocks;" similarly in chitta and swauty, fourteenth and fifteenth;—చిత్త చిత్తించి స్వాతి దయచేసి విశాఖ విసిరికొట్టకుంటే పిచాకి పుట్టెడు వంకాయ కాసును—"if chitta be kind and swauty show favor "and vishaukham does not blow a hurricane, one veesam of land "will yield a pootty of grain;" swauty or october rains are the heaviest of all;—స్వాతి వాన సముద్రాలు నిండును—"rain in swauty "fills the sea;" in chitta and swauty no new crops are sown as they are liable to be destroyed by insects. Vishaukham, sixteenth, or early november; in this rain is considered healthy;—విశాఖ కురిస్తే విషమునైనా విరుగును—"rain in vishaukham takes away "poison;" the first sown paddy crops are then reaped as also the grams; garden crops are also raised and second crop raggy is sown. Anooraudhay, seventeenth, latter half of november; with this the rain is supposed to terminate; rain during this caurtey sets the ryot's mind at ease, as having sufficient for the season;—అనూరాధ కురిస్తే మనోరోగాలు తీరును—"rain in anooraudham drives away mental anxiety." Though rain is not generally expected after caurtigay, december, it is possible it may fall during jyeshtam and moolam, the next two caurteys or till end of december; but such rains are not desired as injurious and likely to cause blight in flowering pulses;—జ్యేష్ఠ మూల కురిసినను, కష్టాలపాలు చేయును, మూలవాన మొండికి చేటు—"rain in "jyeshtay and moolam are injurious; rain in moolam will not "fail to ruin the farmer." After this the rains cease and night dews are heavy and bring the grain to maturity; in tye, or january-february is celebrated tye pongal feast with first fruits of harvest season. For tamul seasons see Mausam and Caur. For general proverbs on weather see Caulam.—"b" The following table shows the twenty-seven Caurteys of the year, their duration, and the corresponding solar months and seasons:—

CAURTIGAY (కార్తికము - kártikamu, Tel.; கார்த்திகை - kárttigai, Tam.). From (krittiká, san. the third lunar asterism). Otherwise Tircartigay, Caurtigay vilakk, Caurtigay deepam. Luni-solar festival [pundigay, 5c]. The day in the eighth solar month Caurtigay [mausam] when the moon enters the third Nacshatram, i.e., between November 15th and December 13th. A holy day sacred to the Pleiades and their foster son Scandan [soobramanyan]. Very similar to Deepauvaly and specially observed by Tamuls. A relic of sun-worship [bharany deepam, pongal]. On the evening of this day lamp lights are placed along the pial, at the door and other parts of the house, in the cowstall, at the well, &c. Also kept in honor of Shiva, who destroyed on that day Tripoorausooran [tripooran]. The Sheivites consider the whole month more sacred than others and many abstain from animal food during the month, who at other times use it, and keep it as a season of fast. The mondays in this month are regarded as fast days, called Caurtigay somavaram. Caurtigay is kept with particular state at Trinomallee, whither pilgrims flock. During three days a great lamp is lighted on the mountain top. The lamp, which is in a large stone cauldron, is fed with butter or ghee [q.v.] and camphor [q.v.] which the people send from all parts; the match is composed of pieces of linen of several cubits length. The Bramins collect the remains of this lamp, which they present to the worshippers, who every day mark their forehead with it. It is in imitation of this sacred lamp that the worshippers of Shiva make in their houses a large cake of rice flour, kneaded with water. They make a hole in the middle which they fill with butter or ghee, and light a small match; they then worship the fire, and fast the whole day, and after six o'clock at night they eat the cake [maryauday].——Caurtigay plant (கார்த்திகை - kárttigai, Tam.). From the month caurtigay or november, the time of flowering. Wild bachnaug.——Caurtigay powrnimay (கார்த்திகைப்பௌர்ணிமை - kárttigaippaurnimai, Tam.). Full moon of caurtigay or november when vanabhojanam [q.v.] is celebrated.——Caurtikeyan (कार्त्तिकेय - kárttikéya, San.). From (krittiká, san. the pleiades). N. indian name of Soobramanyan.

CAURVAM (कारव - kárava, San.). From (ká, san. bad + rava, san. sound). Corvidæ family, conirostres, insessores, aves [pacshy, 25], of naturalists [jantoo]. Divided into the following sub-families:—corvinæ, garrulinæ, dendrocittinæ, fregilinæ, and streperinæ. Corvinæ are the crows and magpies. The species best known to the natives are shown below.——Beggar's crow (عقعق - akak, Ar.; کلاغ ابلق - kulághiablak, Pers.; ٹکا چور - takkáchor, Hind.; لٹورا - latorá, Dec.; గోకరాయి - gókaráyi, Tel.). Title from belief that its call forebodes approach of guests to the house. Ar. from its call. Pers. from (kulágh, pers. crow + ablak, ar. piebald). Hind. from (takká, hind. money + chor, hind. thief). Tel. from (góku, tel. to scratch + ráyi, tel. stone), from sound. Ar. also (shajaji). Hind. also (handíchacha), meaning pan scraper, imitative of its cry; (mahalat), meaning large shrike; (kotri). Tel. also (kondakátigádu), meaning hill + forester. Dendrocitta rufa, dendrocittinæ, corvidæ. Alias Pica rufiventris, vagabunda. Whole head, neck and breast sooty brown, or blackish, deepest on forehead, chin and throat, passing into dusky cinereous; scapulars, back, and upper tail-coverts dark ferruginous; wing coverts and outer web of secondaries light grey, almost whitish in some; rest of quills black; tail ashy-grey, feathers all broadly tipped with black, least so on centre feathers; beneath from breast ferruginous or fulvous; bill black; irides blood-red; legs dark slaty; length 16 inches; common in well-wooded districts; occasional about towns; flies from tree to tree with a slow undulating flight; natives consider it of shrike genus [pingalam]; usual harsh cry of the magpie; also clear whistling, somewhat metallic call; also a feeble indistinct note at the pairing season, which the male utters, and the female responds to in a sort of chuckle. The long-tailed magpie is dendrocitta leucogastra, malabar coast; has a loud call.——Carrion crow (غراب - ghuráb, Ar.; کلاغ سیاه - kulóghisiyáh, Pers.; ڈھال کوا - dhálkavvá, Hind.; ڈھیڑی کوا - dherikavvá, Dec.; ಸುಬ್ಬುಕಾಗೆ - subbukáge, Can.; మాలకాకి - málakáki, Tel.; അണ്ടൻകാക്ക - antankákka, Mal.; அண்டங்காக்கை - andangákkai, Tam.). Title from food. Ar. from (gharaba, ar. remote), from far-sightedness. Pers. from (kulágh, pers. crow + siyah, pers. black). Hind. from (dhál, hind. shield + kavvá, hind. crow). Dec. from (dherí, hind. pariah + kavvá, hind. crow); from black color. Can. from (subbu, can. name of a serpent + káge, can. crow). Tel. from (mála, tel. the caste + káki, tel. crow). Tam. from (andu, tam. to approach + káka, san. crow); familiar crow. Ar. also (ghurábulbain), meaning raven of separation; (abka); (hátim), meaning unlucky. Hind. also (dhár). Tel. also (bontakáki), meaning large + crow. Beng. also (dadkag). Title otherwise Indian corby, Indian raven, Karrial. Corvus culminatus, corvinæ, corvidæ. Alias Corvus corax, enca, macrorhynchos, orientalis. Above glossy black, dull black beneath; tail slightly rounded; wings reach nearly to end of the tail; bill straight at base and high, culmen raised, curving strongly towards tip; bill and legs black irides dark brown; length 21 inches; wing 13½; tail 7¾; almost as familiar as the common crow; voice hoarser and shorter than european crow.——Common crow (काक - káka, San.; زاغ - zágh, Ar.; کلاغ - kulágh, Pers.; کوا - kavvá, Hind. and Dec.; ಕಾಗೆ - káge, Can.; కాకి - káki, Tel.; കാക്ക - kákka, Mal.; காக்கை - kákkai, Tam.). San. from (kai, san. to caw). Hind., &c., from (káka, san. crow). San. also (váyasa), meaning the long-lived. Hind. also (desíkavvá), meaning country crow; (patikavvá); (kág). Tel. also (manchikáki), meaning good crow; euphemistic. Tam. also (nallakkákkai), meaning good crow. Corvus splendens, corvinæ, corvidæ. Alias Corvus dauricus, monedula, impudicus. Forehead, sinciput, and lores, glossy black; occiput, nape, hind neck, and sides of neck, purplish ashy; back, wings and tail black with rich purple and steel-blue reflections; chin, throat and sides of neck, in part black with steel reflections; breast ashy tinged dark; middle of abdomen dull black slightly tinged steel-blue; length varies from 15 to above 18 inches; bill and legs black; irides deep brown; found in vast numbers in every town and village; crow's nest almost exclusively selected by cuckoo to deposit her eggs in. The common crow is the vehicle of Shany [q.v.]. The sight of a single crow is inauspicious, two not so. The cawing of a crow is to be estimated by the following formula:—measure the length of the shadow by the foot and add 12 to the number of feet ascertained; then divide by 7 and the remainder will determine the import of the note; one good luck, 2 gain, 3 rain, 4 conflict, 5 feasting, 6 victory; if on dividing by 7 there is no remainder the note means death. Natives attribute to crows five peculiarities:—going forth very early of a morning; never being seen to pair; eating together; bathing before going to their nest; warningtheir companions of apparent danger. There is a Tamul proverb:—காகம் இல் லாத ஊர் பாவி இல்லாத ஊர்—"A village without a crow "is a village without a sinner;" the two are rare. The Tamul Cooral has the following:—காக்கை கரவா கரைந்துண்ணு மாக்கமு மன்னநீ ரார்க்கே யுள—"The crows do not "conceal their prey, but will call out for others while they eat "it; wealth will be with those who show a similar disposition."

CAUSH (काश् - kásh, San.). To shine.——Casie chetty (காசிச்செட்டி - kásiççetti, Tam.). From (káshí, san. benares, proper name + shetti, tam. member of the caste). A modern Singhalese author of a book called Tamul Plutarch.——Caushta calay (काष्ठाकला - kásht'hákalá, San.). From (kásht'ha, san. stick; a measure of length or time + kalá, san. part). Measure of time. Time taken up by one respiration. 10 caushta calays = 1 prauna calay; 6 prauna calays = 1 vicalay or palam [caulam, 6]. Approximate actual value, 1 caushta calay = ·4 second. $\frac{1}{3600}$th of dandam [caulam, 6]. Same as San. vipalam [caulam, 6] or param [caulam, 4, 5].——Caushtay (काष्ठा - kásht'há, San.). Measure of time. 15 nimishams or winkings = 1 caushtay; 30 caushtays = 1 calay [caulam, 2]. Approximate actual value, 1 caushtay = 3·2 English seconds. Also $\frac{1}{30}$th of a calay [q.v.] of 48 seconds or 1·6 seconds.——Caushy (काशी - káshí, San.).—"a" Benares, the sacred city. The first of six sacred places. The other five are Ayodhyay, ancient oudh; Mathooray or muttra; Mauyay or gaya; Canjy or conjeeveram; and Avanticay or oojjein. The Sheiva system had its earliest stronghold in Caushy. Pilgrimages from the south are still made thither on special occasions. Tencaushy, or South benares, is Madura. The Caushy of Sanscrit theoretical geography lies in 27° 35′ of latitude N. and 4° 37′ E. from Lunka. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name; common to both sexes. Similarly Caushinautan meaning Shiva, lord of Benares; and Caushy vishwa lingam, meaning the universe lingam of Benares [peyar]. Caushiyautray, from (yátrá, san. journey) is a pilgrimage to Benares [charitram].—"b" Plant first term. Compare:—Impatiens balsamia (kásittumbai), benares leucas indica; Impomæa coccinea (káshiratnamu), benares gem; Lagenaria vulgaris (káship'hal), benares fruit; Solanum pubescens (kásiuste), benares solanum verbascifolium. See gloss. paragraphs.——Caushy ratnam (కాశిరత్నము - káshiratnamu, Tel.). Tel. from (káshí, san. benares + ratna, san. precious stone). Title otherwise Crimson quamoclit, Scarlet creeper, Scarlet-flowered bind-weed, Star glory. Botanically Ipomæa [calamby] coccinea, linn., convolvulaceæ [vricsham, 93]. Alias Convolvulus phæniceus; Ipomæa phænicea; Quamoclit phæniceum. Creeper; leaves cordately subreniform, angularly toothed at the margin and sometimes three-lobed, lobes acute, dentato-sinuate at the margin, glabrous on both sides; peduncles many-flowered, loosely spiked; sepals equal, awned; flowers large, bright scarlet; common, flowering in cold season.

CAUSHT (کاشت - kásht, Hind.). From (káshtan, pers. to sow). Cultivation.

CAUT (காடு - kádu, Tam.). Oblique form of caud, forest. Prefix in place names, as in Cautpaudy, meaning forest + village.

CAUTCHY (காட்சி - kádchi, Tam.). From (kán, tam. to see). Appearance, so perception. Of perception seven species are recognised in the augamam logic of the south, viz.:—"a" Ayya cautchy, doubt perception or indistinct apprehension.—"b" Tirip cautchy, change perception or mistaking one thing for another.—"c" Vicalpa cautchy, difference perception or discrimination to distinguish things one from another especially in the five particulars of name, kind, quality, action and substance.—"d" Porivauyil cautchy, sense perception or perception through the senses with the aid of the mental faculties.—"e" Mana cautchy, mind perception or ideas formed in the mind of things perceived by the senses.—"f" Anoobhava cautchy, experience perception or perception by actual experience or exercise of the affections towards objects perceived.—"g" Yoga cautchy, meditation perception or spiritual perception by abstract devotion of knowledge of events past, present or future. Each of the above division has two sub-divisions; one pooram, relating to external or secular affairs and the other agam, relating to religious or spiritual affairs [matam].

CAUTHAM (കാതം - kátam, Mal.; காதம் - kátham, Tam.). From (kádam, ar. a step). League. Linear measure. 7½ nauzhivazhies = 1 cautham [alavay, 1 a, d]. Actual value varies from 5 to 10 miles. In Malabar between 5 and 6 miles. Compare San. yojanam, Pers. farsang, Hind. gow, Can. gauvada, Tel. aumada. See vol. I, 609; II, 505.

CAUVALAM (കാവളം - kávalam, Mal.). From (káya, mal. fruit + valam, mal. manure). Title otherwise Stink tree. Botanically the Sterculia genus, sterculiaceæ [vricsham, 26]. Trees or shrubs, native of tropical regions; leaves simple, palmately lobed or digitate; flowers in drooping panicles; fruits consist of five or fewer more or less woody pieces called follicles, each containing several albuminous seeds. The species best known to the natives are:—balanghas [q.v.], colorata [wild papaw], fœtida [bastard poon], guttata [piymaram], urens [false kateerah], villosa [odul tree]. Other s. indian species indigenous or naturalized are:—alata, populifolia.

CAUVALY (కావలి - kávali, * Tel.). Means guard.——(1) Talook, Nellore district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. Area 548 square miles; lat. 14° 40′ to 15° 04′ N.; long. 79° 38′ to 80° 09′ E. Centre coast part of district. Bounded:—north by Cundoocore talook; west by Oodayagherry talook; south by Átmacore and Nellore talooks; east by the sea. The talook is generally flat but there are a few isolated hills. The north-west is drained by the Appoolair and its tributaries. A smaller stream of the same name falls into the sea near Zoovvaldinney. Along the coast the climate is healthy and good water abundant. The west is dry and rocky. To the west and north-west are extensive low jungles, in parts very dense. Soil is poor. Large beds of laterite [q.v.] are frequently met with. Indigo [q.v.] and rice [q.v.] are the principal agricultural products. On the uplands there is a large area cultivated with dry crops. Along the coast are many palmyra [q.v.] and casuarina [chowkmaram] plantations both private and circar. Tanks are numerous except in the west and north-west, but their supply is uncertain being derived from local drainage. There are no ports proper in the talook; but Chennayapollem, Toommalapenta, and Zoovvaldinney are used by native craft. Since the construction of the Buckingham canal [q.v.], the sea-borne trade has fallen off. Weaving is carried on to a considerable extent, and there is an extensive trade in cattle with Cuddapah and Bellary. Camping grounds:—Bitragoonta, Bramhanacrauka, Cadanootla, Caligherry, Cauvaly, Jakkepully goodoor, Maddoorpaud, Moosnore, Roodracote, Taullapollem, Toommalapenta, Zoovvaldinney. Once a famous port near the extreme south of India, at the mouth of the Tamrapurny in the Gulf of Manaar, now long abandoned. Two or three miles higher up the river lies the site of Korkay, each port in succession having been destroyed by the retirement of the sea. Tuticorin may be considered the successor of those ancient marts. Marco Polo landed here and describes it as belonging to Ashar, the eldest of five brothers, who reigned in the Malabar and Tinnevelly regions. Abd oor ruzzauk names it as a place situated opposite the island of Serendib, otherwise called Ceylon. Nicholas Conti calls it Cahila, the site of a pearl-fishery. Vasco da Gama, writing the word Caell, notices that with a Caufir or Christian people it had a Mahomedan king. It is still inhabited partly by Mahomedans and partly by Roman catholics. For two or three miles north of the present village of Cauyal, and a mile and a half inland as far as Mauramungalam, the whole plain is covered with broken tiles, remnant of Arabian and other pottery and China porcelain [kaolin]. There are several Jeina statues. Two old Shiva and Vishnoo temples. Modern trade chiefly in pearls [moty] and precious stones [ratnam]; paddy [q.v.], rice [q.v.] and cocoanuts [q.v.] from Ceylon; timber and betel-nuts [q.v.] from Travancore; and palmyra jaggery [q.v.], &c.——Cauyalputnam (காயல்பட்டணம் - káyarbattanam, Tam. káyalpatnam *). North of the Tamrapurny and on the western shore of the Gulf of Manaar.——Cauyam (காயம் - káyam, Tam.). Pungency. Plant second term. Ex., where transl. is of first term:—Allium cepa (vengáyam), white; Cuminum cyminum (attuvákkáyam), red; Ferula narthex (perungáyam), large. See gloss. paragraphs.——Cauyancollam (കായങ്കുളം - káyankulam, Mal.). From (káyal, tam. lagoon + kóvilakam, mal. palace). Title otherwise Cully quilon, meaning stony + the town so called [collam].—"a" Town, Port, Travancore state, Quilon division, Caurtigapully tal.; lat. 9° 10′; long. 76° 33′; from Alleppey S.S.E. 23 miles; from Bombay S.S.E. 710 miles; from Poracaud S.S.E. 14 miles; from Trivandrum N.N.W. 57 miles; from Aripaud S. 7½ miles. Formerly a Dutch commercial town, and now a place of considerable inland and foreign trade. About 3 miles to the interior of the backwater of the same name between Alleppey and Quilon. Abreast the town is an opening into the Arabian sea, which only admits small coasters; but there is water communication by the backwater with Cochin on the north and Quilon on the south. Also connected with Madura by a road leading through the ghauts at the Atchancoil pass. Another road connects it with the one from Quilon to Shencottah, and by means of these two roads the town carries on an extensive trade with several important places in Madura and Tinnevelly districts. Formerly capital of the independent state of Quilon. In 829 A.D. the Syrian church was founded here. Captured by the Dutch in 1661. In 1745, the rajah submitted to Travancore; and fifteen years later, the state was finally absorbed by its more powerful neighbour. Some irregular fortifications are seen to the north.—"b" Backwater; Travancore state, Quilon division, Caurtigapully talook. One of the links of the chain of water communication between Trivandrum and Cochin. Extreme length 19 miles, extreme breadth 2 miles, average breadth one mile and a quarter. Area of the lake is 23 miles. Separated from the sea by a narrow strip of coast line. Along the banks extensive coir [q.v.] manufacture is carried on by hand labor.——Palaya cauyal (பழையகாயல் - pazhaiyagáyal, Tam.). From (pazhaiya, tam. old + káyal, tam. town, so called). Same as Cauyal.——Poonnacauyal (புன்னக்காயல் - punnakkáyal, Tam.). From (punai, tam. newness + káyal, tam. the town). New cauyal as distinguished from cauyal or old cauyal. Village, hamlet of Shendamungalam village; Tinnevelly dist., Tencaray tal.; lat. 8° 38′; long. 78° 10′; from Cauyal S.E. 2¾ miles; from Cauyalputnam N. 5 miles; from Madras S.S.W. 330 miles; from Shreeveicoontam E.S.E. 15 miles; from Tinnevelly E.S.E. 31 miles. With roadstead, on the north-west coast of the Gulf of Manaar, South of Tuticorin. The approach from the south is dangerous, in consequence of an extensive reef stretching in that direction; but a ship having safely made its way past that danger may anchor securely in 7 or 8 fathoms, with bottom soft mud, and 2 miles from the beach. In 1551, two hospitals and a seminary founded by Portuguese. In 1552, fort taken by the Vijianugger troops, Countinho, the Portuguese captain of the fishery, being defeated. In 1553, the fort retaken by a fleet from Calicut. In 1556, there was a garrison of fifty men only. Shortly after 1563, when Cæsar Frederic visited the coast, the fishers for pearls [moty] still continued to pay for permission to the representative of the King of Portugal; the Madura Naicks had therefore not yet succeeded in gaining supreme power. In 1570, great famine on the fishery coast. Father Henriquez established famine relief houses, in some of which fifty persons were fed daily. Don Sebastian limits to the Christian fishermen the tithes on pearls. Dutch factory demolished in 1782. See vol. II, 156.

CAVAR (கவர் - kavar, Tam.). To seize, to rob.——Cavara (കവറ - kavara, Mal.). Caste-title. Basket-makers of Malabar. They speak a corrupt Tooloo [jauty].——Cavarathy (കവരത്തി - kavaratti, Mal.). From (kavaru, mal. plunder + tívu, mal. island). Island; Malabar dist., pop. 2,021; from Calicut S.W. 220 miles. One of the Laccadives. In lat. 10° 32′ N. and long. 72° 40′ E. About 74 miles N.W. from Calpeny and 38 S.E. from Agatty. Coral [moongah] shoal least extensive of any. Length from north-east to south-west about 3½ miles; greatest breadth about three-quarters of a mile. Island is situated just within the reef on the east; on the west there is a lagoon [cauyal] which at its widest part is about half a mile broad. At southern end there was formerly a separate island, but it is now connected with the main island by a narrow strip of land about 50 yards wide. The islets attached are Pitty and Sooheliparra. The former, a mere sand bank on a coral limestone foundation, lies about 15 miles north-west of Cavarathy and is frequently visited for fishing purposes. The coral shoal of Sooheliparra lies about 40 miles south-west of Cavarathy. It is composed of Valiyakara or large shore at the northern extremity of lagoon, and of Cheriyakara or little shore at the southern extremity. These two islets, formerly common property of Cavarathy islanders, were confiscated by the Pundauram [q.v.] or circar. Valiyakara is completely overrun with jungle, throughout which scattered cocoanut [q.v.] trees occur; Cheriyakara lies east and west and has extreme length of three-quarters of a mile. Breadth at widest point does not exceed quarter of a mile. Area is 81¾ acres. It contains no jungle. Covered with coarse long grass and a kind of small shrub. The inhabited portion of Cavarathy is divided into four cherries, viz., Melacherry or Mecherry on the north-west coast; Tekkeycherry on the east coast; Poragacherry to the south; Pullicherry on the south-west shore; Poragacherry is separated from Mecherry and Pullicherry by a small valley apparently excavated formerly for grain cultivation. The body of the island is the common property of the people. Over a part however the Pundauram asserts exclusive claims. The soil of Cavarathy is poor. Beans, plantains [q.v.] and brinjauls [q.v.], areca [q.v.] palms, tamarind [q.v.] trees, and betel [q.v.] vines are grown to a small extent. People depend almost entirely upon their cocoanut cultivation. Manufactures consists mainly of coir [q.v.] yarn. Inhabitants are exclusively Mahomedans.

CAVVYE (കവ്വായി - kavváyi, Mal. kavváyi *). From (kai, mal. canal + váya, mal. mouth). Village, Port, River; Malabar dist., Chiracal tal.; lat. 12° 6′; long. 75° 14′; from Bombay S.S.E. 485 miles; from Calicut N.N.W. 69 miles; from Cannanore N.W. 26 miles; from Mangalore S.S.E. 56 miles; from Yetticoolam N. 5¾ miles; from the sea E. 2¼ miles. Northern frontier town of Malabar. At mouth of a backwater of same name near Mount delly. The ancient town and port of Neeleshwar were about 12 miles up this backwater. The surrounding country is a sandy plain. Inhabitants are Moplahs. The English established a factory in 1750, and about that time French built a fort on south side of river. This fort and another of native construction are now in ruins. Dolmen [coday cull] and four menhirs.

CAVY (कवि - kavi, San.). From (ku, san. sound). Poet in Telinga country. There were three Audycavies or original cavies, founders of Teloogoo literature; Nannayya bhatt, Ticcana somayaujy, and Yerrah pragada. The Audy cavies were followed by others nearly equal to them called Madhya cavies, or middle cavies; for instance:—Adidam sooranna, Amareshwaran, Anantamautyan, Bammera potarauz, Bhattoomoorty, Bhauscaran, Caucamauny moorty, Ketana, Mookkoo timmana, Mullanna, Peddanna, Pingaly sooranna, Pooshpagiry timmana, Raman, Ramabhadran, Runganautan, Shreenautan, Tautam bhatt, Telaganauryan, Tenauly ramalingam, Veerabhadran, Vennelacunty soorayya and Zakkanna. Antya cavies, or last cavies, are quite modern. Caviraja sawmy is a literary title [peyar]. Cavy royan is a general term for a great poet [inam].

CAWDER (قادر - kádir, Hind.). From (kadara, ar. to be strong). Powerful. An attribute of God [allah]. A common Mahomedan alam; as Cawder ally, double alam; Cawder beg, alam + alaumat [ism].——Cawder wally (قادر ولی - kádirwali, Hind.). From (above + walí, ar. saint). Mahomedan saint, with shrine at Nagore near Negapatam; the Mahomedan inhabitants of which are chiefly Lubbays [q.v.] of Shafayee sect. His sandal [q.v.] is ninth of sixth month Jamaudy ool aukhir [maheena], and his oors [q.v.] on tenth. Mussalman ship-captains and sailors frequently make vows to Cawder wally [meeraun sahib].

CAWNY (ಕಾಣಿ - káni, Can.; కాణి - káni, Tel.; காணி - káni, Tam.). From (kán, tam. to see); that which is known and recognised. Landed property, land.—"a" A land measure. 100 coozhies = 1 cawny [alavay, 2 a]. Approximate actual value, 1 cawny = 57,600 square feet or 1·322 acres; for purposes of cultivation a cawny is divided into 100 coozhies, and for house building purposes into 24 munnies [q.v.] or grounds of 60 by 40 feet each; in parts of madura and trichinopoly cawny is equal to 100 coozhies of 21 square feet or 44,100 square feet or 1·01 acres; sometimes cawny is equal to 57,600 square native adees, in which case it is less than an acre. See vol. I, 609; II, 506, 507, 509.—"b" In numbers, an 80th fractional part, or in Telinga usage one 64th.—"c" Cawnyautchy, from (ádchi, tam. possession), is a term given by Vellaular to communal rights of villagers, lands, offices, fees, held in free and hereditary property; when the lands fell into the hands of bramins, it was called swaustyam [q.v.]; when the same property was possessed by mahomedans or christians, it was called mirass [q.v.], which is the term now usually employed; pasancaray [q.v.] in tamul and Sarwadauyam mean the same thing; see vol. I, 112.—"d" Cawny cauran is a hereditary proprietor of land. Hill tribe living towards the south of travancore; same as those in the north called malaiyarasar [q.v.]; sometimes spoken of as vailanmaur or spearmen; live together in small clans, each hamlet under a headman; in south speak tamul and further north malayalam; somewhat superior in several respects and not regarded with abhorrence felt towards the poolayar [jauty]. See vol. I (111).

CAZHOO (கழு - kazhu, Tam.). Vulture [gidh].——Cazhoogoomullay (கழுகுமலை - kazhugumalai, Tam.). From (kazhugu, tam. vulture + malai, tam. mountain). Sanscrit name (gridhrachala), meaning vulture + mountain. Town, Hill, Place of pilgrimage; Tinneveliy dist., Shuncaraneinarcoil tal.; pop. 4,228; acres 23,445; lat. 9° 08′; long. 77° 45′; from Ottapidauram N.W. 27 miles; from Tinnevelly N. 28 miles; from the sea W. 49 miles. Large isolated rock in Yettiyaupooram zemindarry, with rock-cut temple and Jeina sculptures and inscriptions. The temple, to Soobramanyan, is a fine monolithic work, much in the style of Seven pagodas [q.v.], with porticos round. On the rock-face are inscriptions in archaic characters, with numbers of Jeina figures of saints. One side of the hill was occupied by Jeinas; the other by the Sheivas, who carved the small temple out of the solid rock, almost a counterpart of a portion of the Keilausam at Ellora. The Jeina inscriptions are written in Vattezhoot [q.v.]. Each is in a different form, but all in the same alphabet; the sculptors apparently having diversified the work by varying the exact shape of the letters on each inscription. In the same rock is a cave-temple dedicated to Ganesh, known as the Pillaiyaur coil, with a space round the shrine for the pradacshinam or circumambulation ceremony. Annual festival in January, February and March, at which time a large cattle-fair also takes place.

CAZHOOTHAY (கழுதை - kazhuthai, Tam.). Ass, sign of Vayoo regent of north-west [ashtadicpaulacan].

CEDED DISTRICTS (صوبجات مرفضہ - súbajátimuaffizah, Hind.). Territory south of Toongabudra ceded to company by Nizam in 1800 after defeat and death of Tippoo sultan. Embraced present districts of Anantapore, Bellary, Cuddapah, and Kurnool, with the Pulnaud. See vol. I (25) and the description of the separate districts in vol. II. For the history of the cession, see vol. I (186).

CEYLON (सिहल - simhala, San.; سرانديب - sarandíb, Hind.; ಸಿಂಹಳ - simhala, Can.; సింహళము - simhalamu, Tel.; ഈഴം - ízham, Mal.; இலங்கை - ilangai, Tam.). Ancient Tam. (ஈழம் - ízham). Title (sílan) is Malay or very ancient Dravidian, meaning cocoanut. Ancient Tamul means same as title. Compare the Ilavar of Malabar. Simhala is the name by which it was called by the later Booddhistic writers, being a Sanscrit corruption of the original, and meaning lion's abode. Hence the modern term Singhalese. Singhala dweepam or Singhala island appears in the Greek of Cosmas as σιελεδίβα. The Greeks thought this the largest island in the world. From Singhala dweepam comes the Arabic Serendib. A descriptive name for Ceylon in some pooraunams is Ratna dweepam, or island of gems. The Sanscrit Lunka again meaning beautiful was the old mythological name of Ceylon in the old literature of Booddhism and Braminism. This name was unknown to the Greeks and Romans. Lunka was in early Sanscrit legend the capital town of the kings of the race of Poolastyan known as Yacshans, and remarkable as the capital of Ravanan the abductor of Seeta, with whom Rama fought. The Ramayanam [q.v.] was written long before Ceylon was known to the Bramins; but, on their migrating south, their poets discovered in the then visible rocky chain across the gulf of Manaar the bridge built by Rama, with Hanooman, Soogreevan and their monkies represented by the Dravidian inhabitants. Thenceforward Lunka was held to be the island of Ceylon. The city of Ravanan itself was supposed to the south of Trincomalee and to have been swallowed up by the sea. In this sense Ceylon has always been considered the land of wonders. The following is a Hindostany proverb :—لنکا میں سے جونکلے سو باون گزکا— "All who come from Lunka are 52 yards high." The Greek ταπροβάνη represents the Sanscrit (támraparni), meaning copper-leaved. பொருணர் is the Tinnevelly river, meaning toddy river, but with copper-colored sand; and hence the Sanscrit by corruption. For history and account of the island, see vol. I, page 32.——(1) The following are places in the island which have been mentioned in connection with the history of this Presidency, with the Tamul identifications attached.——Adam's bridge (சேது - shéthu, Tam.). Title from the series of rings on back. Hind. from (sankal, hind. chain + dár, pers. having + sámp, hind. snake). Can. from (rakta, san. blood + masalu, can. to boil); from its poisonous bite. Tel. from (kattu, tel. stripe + purugu, tel. worm). Mal. from (chénattandu, mal. arum stem + an, mal. personal suffix); from similarity. Singh. from (tit, singh. spotted + polangá, singh. viper). Tam. from (kannádi, tam. looking glass + viriyan, tam. viper). Hind. also (chamaktásámp), meaning shining snake; (baingankekhetkásámp), meaning brinjaul field snake; (gobarkásámp), meaning dung snake; (khúnísámp), meaning bloody snake; (átishbársámp), meaning fire-emitting snake; (shaffáfsámp), meaning bright snake. Tel. also (penjera), meaning big + snake [penjera]. Mal. also (vellikkattan), meaning silver + band. Title otherwise Necklace snake, Russell's viper. Also Cobra monil and Cobra manilla from the Portuguese, meaning beaded cobra; but it is a viper, not colubriform. Also Tic polonga in Ceylon. Daboia elegans, viperidæ [viriyan], ophidii viperiformes, ophidia [sarpam], reptilia [sarpy, 30], of naturalists [jantoo]. There is only this species of the genus Daboia. Alias Coluber russellii; Daboia pulchella, russellii; Vipera daboia, elegans. One of the true vipers [viriyan]. Greyish brown or light chocolate color with three series of large black, white-edged rings, those of the middle series ovate, those of the outer circular; sometimes very small, black, white-edged ocelli are scattered between the rings. A yellow line on each side of the upper surface of the head, the two lines convergent on the snout. Rostral and labial shields yellow, with brown margins; a sub-triangular brown, black-edged spot below the eye. Belly uniform yellowish, or marbled with brownish; generally more or less numerous, semi-circular brown spots on the hinder margins of the ventral shields. It is not as venomous as the cobra [q.v.]. The blood usually remains fluid after death from the poison of the chain viper, the human subject being excepted; whereas after cobra poisoning it generally coagulates firmly on being removed from the heart and great vessels. The Chain viper is nocturnal in its habits; in confinement it is sluggish and does not readily strike, unless roused and irritated, when it bites with great force and determination. When disturbed, it hisses fiercely, and when it strikes, does so with great vigour. Its long, movable fangs are very prominent objects and with them it is capable of inflicting a very deep as well as poisoned wound. The markings on its body are very beautiful and justify the synonym, Vipera elegans; compare tamul above. It lives on small animals, such as rats [ely], mice [shoondely], and frogs [bhaicam]. It will go into water. It is, however, terrestrial in its habits. Its loud hissing when disturbed is calculated to warn those who come within its dangerous proximity. Though so deadly, it has not the reputation of causing many deaths; but this may be owing to the fact that it is less known. The adult varies in length from three to four feet or so. It prevails in the plains as well as in the hills [penjera].

CHAKKAN (ചക്കൻ - chakkan, Mal.). From (chekkan, mal. lad). Pariah proper name [chikka, peyar]. Dist. from chokkan.

Botanically Mesua ferrea, linn., guttiferæ [vricsham, 22]. Alias Calophyllum nagassar, nagassaricum; Mesua coromandelina, roxburghii, speciosa. Nagassar from sanscrit. Tree, 40 feet; straight stem, sepals four, unequal; petals four, alternate with the sepals; leaves oblong-lanceolate, acuminated, glaucous beneath, upper side shining, midrib and margins colored; flowers stalked, axillary, large, white, fragrant; fruit about the size of a small apple, one-celled, one to four-seeded. Cultivated about temples, very showy; bears flowers in february in great profusion; fruit reddish and wrinkled when ripe; rind like that of chestnut, in size, shape, and taste; the bark, wood, and roots are bitter and sweet-scented; at the bottom of the tender fruits, tenacious and glutinous oleo-resin [raul] exudes with a sharp aromatic smell. Religious; blossoms extremely fragrant; one of cauman's arrows [cauma baunam]. Kernels yield by expression a fixed oil useful in itch; the oleo-resin possesses all the properties of canada balsam. Fruit eaten. Oil used for burning; flowers dried are mixed with other aromatics, such as white sandalwood, and used for perfuming ointment; attar [q.v.] prepared from flowers; flower buds are used for dyeing [shauyam] silk; tree affords an excellent shade. Heart-wood dark red, extremely hard, very durable. No other common species here.——Neilgherry champak (पिवळाचांपा - pivaláchámpá, Mahr.; پیلا چمپا - píláchampá, Dec.; වල්සපු - valsapu, Singh.; நீலகிரிசண்பகம் - nílagirisanbagam, Tam.). Mahr. from hindostany. Hind. from (pílá, hind. yellow + champá, hind. michelia champaca, linn.). Singh. from (val, singh. wild + sapu, singh. champak). Botanically Michelia nilagirica, zenker., magnoliaceæ [vricsham, 3]. Alias Michelia pulneyensis. Leaves elliptic, glabrous, acuminated; stipules and spathes silky; petals eight, in two rows; stamens shorter than the column of fructification; carpels one-seeded, warty; ovaries numerous, one-ovuled; flowers white, sometimes with a tinge of yellow; flowering during the rains. Magnolia-like tree; common on higher ranges of western hills; wood strong, close, fine-grained, very hygrometrical; used for building purposes, beams and rafters.——Sultan champak (سلطان چمپا - sultánchampá, Hind.). Title from flower. Same as Common poon.——Wild champak (جنگلی چمپا - janglíchampá, Hind.). Same as Pagoda tree.

CHAMRAH (चर्म - charma, San.; جلد - jild, Ar.; چرم - chirm, Pers.; چمڑا - chamrá, Hind.; ಚರ್ಮ - charma, Can.; తోలు - tólu, Tel.; തോൽ - tól, Mal.; தோல் - tól, Tam.). Title from hindostany. San. from (char, san. to move), as protecting motion. Pers., hind. and can. from sanscrit. Mal. and tam. from (toli, tam. to strip off). Skin or hide. In English commercial language skins are of those animals such as calves, deer, goats, lambs, &c., which, when prepared, are used in the lighter works of book-binding, the manufacture of gloves, parchment, &c.; while hides are of the ox, horse, &c., which, when prepared are used in the manufacture of shoes, harness, &c.; the tamulians do not make this distinction. The manufacture of leather in this Presidency is considerable and the quality of the article good, considering the low rank of the artisans, called chucklers. Leather-working has been successfully practised by European tanners at Pondicherry, Hoonsoor in Mysore, Guntoor, Bangalore and Madras, the leather there made being scarcely inferior to that made in Europe. The following is the native method of working. First the skins, whether of sheep, goats, cows or buffaloes, are steeped in water in a pit with choonam [q.v.] at say two tooms [q.v.] for every hundred skins; this is within an hour after the skins are brought to the tannery; they are kept thus steeped for four days, by which time the hair on the skins will fall away; they are then taken out, and the choonam and other matter which may adhere is scraped off with a knife; after this they are well washed with water. Secondly, tungaid [q.v.] bark, at ten maunds for every hundred sheep and goat skins and for every ten cow and buffalo skins is thrown into water in a wooden trough and well soaked, so that the sap may come out and mix with the water; into this decoction the skins are thrown, after they have been scraped and washed as above said; they are left in the trough for eight days, being stirred up and down every day; on the ninth day, the tungaid bark is taken out, but nothing else which may be at the bottom of the trough; after this five maunds of new tungaid bark are thrown in, and the skins are left to soak in the juice for another eight days, turning them every day as before; this is sufficient for sheep and goat skins; but if they be skins of cows and buffaloes, new tungaid bark must be thrown in the same manner three times; that is to say, the skins must soak in the decoction for twenty-four days; afterwards they are taken out, the watery matter is wrung out, and the skins are well scraped. Thirdly, ink-nuts or chebulic myrobalans [q.v.] are well pounded, and the powder thrown into a wooden trough; into this trough hot water is poured; the decoction is left to cool; and subsequently the skins which have been steeped in the tungaid bark juice and scraped, are thrown into the decoction; there they remain one whole night; early morning next day, they are turned and left again the whole of a day and night; on the third day morning, they are taken out, wrung and smoothed with a knife. Fourthly, the skins are piled one above another, on a table; and oil at one maund for hundred sheep and goat skins or twenty cow and buffalo skins, is poured over them; after this they are dried on ropes in the shade so that the oil may soak into the skins. Fifthly, each of the skins is taken from the rope, and well rubbed over with a flat stone or a flat piece of wood; they are then dried again until they are completely dry; after this, every four skins are rolled together and thrashed upon a stone; then each of them is firmly drawn over the edge of an upright iron rail, until it becomes soft; after this, the inside of each skin is well rubbed over with a red hot brick. The expense of preparing skins in this way is some twenty rupees for every hundred sheep and goat skins and two hundred and fifty rupees for every hundred cow and buffalo skins. Skins and hides are principally from the goat, sheep [aud], buffalo [khoolgah], and bullock [mand]; also from the spotted deer [cheetal], hog deer [cheetal], dromedary [ottagam], barking deer [jungle sheep], elephant [q.v.], horse [ghorah], bison [gowr], ravine deer [q.v.], ibex [saddle back], nilghye [q.v.], samber [q.v.], pig [soor], wild boar. Mineral articles employed in the process of tanning are alum, iron filings, quick lime, rust of iron, sulphate of iron [annabhaidy]. The following are two key-lists in the briefest possible terms of the principal vegetable tanning materials of s. india for which vernacular names are known; further information must be traced in the glossary paragraphs through the small-type cross references at end of this volume; see also vricsham, 7, for the method of expressing the products, &c., of plants in the dravidian languages.—"a" Acacia arabica, babool, bark and pods; Acacia catechu, catechu, bark and cutch; Albizzia lebbek, common sirissa, bark; Albizzia procera, hill sirissa, bark; Anacardium occidentale, cashew, bark; Anogeissus acuminata, pauchimaun, leaf; Avicennia officinalis, ooppata mangrove, bark; Barringtonia acutangula, small indian oak, bark; Bridelia retusa, var. gennina, thorny vengay, bark; Bruguiera gymnorhiza, candel mangrove, bark; Buchanania latifolia, chironjee, bark; Cæsalpinia coriaria, divy-divy, pods; Careya arborea, hindostany slow match, bark; Cassia auriculata, tungaid, bark; Cassia fistula, indian laburnum, bark; Garuga pinnata, garooga, bark; Kandelia rheedii, candel mangrove, bark; Loranthus longiflorus, gooloom, bark and bruised wood; Odina wodier, wodier, bark; Prosopis spicigera, shamee, bark; Punica granatum, pomegranate, root-bark and fruit rind; Rhizophora mucronata, white candel mangrove, bark; Shorea robusta, common saul, bark; Terminalia belerica, belleric myrobalan, dried fruit; Terminalia chebula, chebulic myrobalan, dried fruit and galls; Terminalia citrina, citrine myrobalan, dried fruit; Uncaria gambier, gambier, cutch; Zizyphus jujuba, bair, bark.—"b" Babool, acacia; Bair, zizyphus; Cashew, anacardium; Catechu, acacia; Chironjee, buchanania; Divy-divy, cæsalpinia; Gambier, uncaria; Garooga, garuga; Gooloom, loranthus; Laburnum, cassia; Mangrove, avicennia, bruguiera, kandelia, rhizophora; Myrobalan, terminalia; Oak, barringtonia; Pauchimaun, anogeissus; Pomegranate, punica; Saul, shorea; Shamee, prosopis; Sirissa, albizzia; Slow match tree, careya; Tungaid, cassia; Vengay, bridelia; Wodier, odina.

CHAND (चन्द् - chand, San.). To please, gladden.——Chandanam (चन्दन - chandana, San.). Red-wood. The inner wood of any plant which is red or reddish black.——Chandas (छन्दस् - chhandas, San.). From (chhad, san. to please). Metre.——Chandoo (چنڈو - chandú, Hind.). Intoxicating substance made of babool [q.v.] leaves and opium [aphainam] boiled, distilled, and prepared in Chinese fashion [madak, mookhadiraut].——Chaund (چاند - chánd, Pers.). From (chandra, san. moon). Moon. Alam. In composition makes a lacab; as Chaund bee, moon-like lady [ism]. Plant second term from white flowers, as in:—Gardenia florida (gulichándní), moon rose; Rauwolfia serpentina (chhotáchánd), young moon. See gloss. paragraphs.

CHANDWAH (चांद - chánda, Mahr.; چندوا - chandwá, Hind.). From (chandra, san. moon); from silvery transparent color,

The genus Ambassis, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei, pisces [matsyam, 1], of naturalists [jantoo]. Small bony fishes; body deep and compressed, more or less transparent; eaten by the poorer classes, easily dried without salt. The species best known to the natives are shown below.——Red chandwah (लालचांद - lálachánda, Mahr.; لال چندوا - lálchandwá, Hind.). Hind. from (lál, hind. red). Mahr. also (rangachánda), meaning painted ambassis. Ambassis [chandwah] ranga, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei [matsyam, 1], of naturalists. Specific name from mahratta. Alias Ambassis alta, barlovi, lala; Chanda lala, ranga. Olive, having dark mark composed of spots on shoulder, being remains of band present in the young; margins of vertical fins usually dark; young is of bright yellow or orange color, with four or five dark vertical bands formed of fine black dots; first dorsal nearly black, second and anal as well as occasionally the ventral have deep black edges; yellow spots sometimes present, subject to great variations in accordance with age; freshwater; few inches.——Striped chandwah (गाउडेचिरि - gáudéchiri, Mahr.; ఆకురాతి - ákuráti, Tel.; କର୍ତ୍କନ - kartkana, Oor.). Mahr. from (gávadí, mahr. cow + chiri, mahr. fine stripe); from color and stripes. Tel. from (ákuráyi, tel. file); from oblong figure and markings on skin granulated like a file. Mahr. also (náma), meaning white striped; (p'húla), meaning flowery, from white spots on fish; (bágóda), meaning tiger-like, either from spots or from teeth curving forwards; (chándanáma), striped ambassis; (bágódanáma), meaning tiger-spotted and striped. Title otherwise Aukrauty. Ambassis [chandwah] nama, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei [matsyam, 1], of naturalists. Specific name from mahratta. Alias Ambassis bogoda, oblonga, phula; Bogoda nama; Chanda nama, phula et bogoda; bogoda from mahratta; phula from mahratta; bogoda nama from mahratta; chanda nama from mahratta. Lower jaw much longer than upper. Scales minute, scarcely visible on head; in young specimens captured from stagnant water, mucus often causes scales to be overlooked. Lateral-line always indistinct. Colors yellowish-olive covered over with minute black dots which on shoulder are collected into oblong patch, having longest diameter vertical; summit of head and top of eyes black. Fins orange, upper half of first dorsal deep black; dark upper edge to second dorsal; caudal dark with light outer margin; anal with black mark over bases of spines. Shows considerable local variations. Throughout freshwaters; three or four inches.——White chandwah (سفيد چندوا - sufedchandwá, Hind.). Hind. from (sufed, hind. white). Ambassis [chandwah] gymnocephalus, percidæ [panayairy], acanthopterygii, teleostei [matsyam, 1], of naturalists. Alias Ambassis dussumieri, vachelli; Chanda dussumieri; Lutjanus gymnocephalus; Priopis argyrozona. Chanda from mahratta. Lower jaw the longer. Scales two rows on suborbital ring of bones, the lower of which is much the deeper. Lateral line interrupted from eighth to twelfth scale, in some cases entirely. Colors silvery with bright longitudinal lateral band, brown spots on upper third of body in front half; blackish between second and third dorsal spines, black edge to caudal. Variation in length of second and third dorsal spines, sometimes one, sometimes the other being longer. Sea; four inches; captured in backwaters.

CHANGAUDA (ചങ്ങാടം - channátam, Mal.). From (sam, san. together + ghat, san. to unite). σάγγαρα of the Periplus. Canoe formed out of single tree [jungar]. See vol. I (44).

CHANNEL (கால் - kál, Tam.). Common irrigation term [caulvye].——River channel (ఏటికాలవ - étikálava, Tel.; ஆற்றுக் கால் - áttukkál, Tam.). Channel for irrigation issuing from a river as distinguished from a spring or tank.——Spring channel (جهرے کا نالا - jharekánálá, Hind.; ಊಟೆಕಾಲಿವೆ - útekálive, Can.; ఊటకాలవ - útakálava, Tel.; ஊற்றுக்கால் - úttukkál, Tam.). Channel for irrigation issuing from a spring instead of from a river or tank.——Supply channel (వరవకాలవ - varavakálava, Tel.; குளக்கால் - kulakkál, Tam.). Tel. from (vattsu, tel. to arrive + kálava, tel. channel). Tam. from (kulam, tam. tank + kál, tam. channel). Channel from any source or sources which feeds a tank.

CHAP (چپ - chap, Pers.). Left.——Chapraus (چپراس - chaprás, Hind.). From (above + rást, pers. right). The brass plate which a messenger wears on his shoulder belt, as a badge of office. On the chapraus is engraved the name of the office to which the messenger belongs [billa, chooprassy].

CHAPKAN (چپکن - chapkan, Hind.). From (chipakná, hind. to adhere); from its close fit. A long gown with flaps in the skirt and the skirt open and breast covered; sometimes having slits in the armpits [cabah, sheelay].

CHAR (चर - char, San.). To move, act, practise.——Characan (चरक - charaka, San.). A medical writer in Vedic times, and the author of Characa samhitay, one of the standard Hindoo medical works. He received materials from Agnivesan, and he from Atreyan. This book was translated into Arabic before the eighth century.——Charaucharam (चराचर - charáchara, San.). From (chara, san. movable + achara, san. immovable). The world, the aggregate of all things.——Charitram (चरित - charita, San.). History. Of the eighteen pooraunams, four only contain dynastic lists, representing all the indigenous history possessed by Hindoos; these are Matsyam, Vishnoo, Bhaugavatam and Vayoo [carnautaca rajakkal, congoodesha rajakkal]. See vol. I (110)—(188), and the following foot-notes:—Sans. legends I (114), dynasties of n. india I (116), ceylon I (117), paundy kingdom I (119)—(124), chola I (125)—(125), chera I (126)—(127), kerala I (128), pullava I (129), vengy I (132), andhra I (132), calinga I (132), knowledge of anc. foreigners I (133), hoysala ballaula I (140), yadava of devagherry I (140), tondaimundalam I (141), mahomedan imp. dynasties I (143), mahomedan sub-kingdoms I (146), condaveed I (150), nellore I (150), gajapaty I (151), vijiannagger I (151), hurpanhully I (154), growth of english I (155)—(160), madras in seventeenth century I (163), mahrattas I (166), e.i. company I (166)—(171), const. hist. of brit. government I (172), first siege of madras I (174), second siege I (178), northern circars I (179), british acquisitions I (188), native rulers II, 250, annals II, 257, governors II, 268, acquisitions II, 272, fort st. george II, 279, attached native states II, 285.——Charmaudy (ಚಾರ್ಮಾಡಿ - chármádi, Can.). From (charama, san. west + adri, san. mountain).—"a" Village; South canara district, Ooppinangady talook; pop. 700; lat. 23° 03′; long. 75° 28′; from Mangalore E.N.E. 42 miles; from Poottore N.E. 26 miles.—"b" Pass; South canara district, Ooppinangady talook also known as the Boon ghaut or Coffee ghaut, and as the Codicull ghaut. Opened in 1864, and now one of the main lines for wheeled traffic, specially for coffee [q.v.] transport, between Mangalore and Mysore.——Charry (चारि - chári, San.). From (char, san. to practise). An observer. Suffix in compounds as Bramhacharry, meaning religious devotion + observer, religious student.——Chauram (चार - chára, San.). From (char, san. to move). Motion. Especially the daily aspect or position of the planets [graham]. Chaura caundam, from (above + kánda, san. stick, measure) is ascensional difference. Chaurajyay, from (above + jyá, san. bow-string; sine) is the sine of the ascensional difference.——Chaurvaucan (चार्वाक - chárváka, San.). From (cháru, san. elegant + váka, san. speaking). The Pyrrho and Epicurus of India. Founder of the materialistic school of philosophy [sarwa darshana sangraham]. The Chaurvaucans are sometimes called Locauyatans. They reject all the Pramaunams [q.v.], except Pratyacsham, perception by the senses; they admit only four Tatwams [q.v.], viz., earth, air, fire, and water, and from these cheitanyam [q.v.] or intelligence is produced; they affirm that the soul is not different from the body, and that all the phenomena of the world are spontaneously produced without even the help of Adrishtam or the unseen. They deny the existence of god or any divine being or first cause; the earth, the visible sky, the expanse of either, the sun, the moon, are self-produced; there is no distinction between moral good and evil, and no state of rewards or punishments after death [samsauram]; hence there is no need to entertain any dread, or reverence, of any superior, or inspecting being. The divisions into which the Chaurvaucan class was formerly distinguished were eleven:—Sowtrauntican, Yogachauran, Veibhaushican, Nirgranta vaudy of the Shamanan, Ashwacan, Bhattacharry, Prabhacaran, Mayauvaty, Paraushariyan, Nishwausangy, Puncharautry. See vol. I (70) to (94), and the following foot-notes:—history of rel. and phil., I (70), existing hindoo sects I (88) [matam].

CHAR (چار - chár, Hind.). Four [chow, chatoor].——Charkhauny (چارخانی - chárkhání, Hind.). From (above + khánah, hind. square). Chequered muslin [doriyah, sheelay].——Charpoy (چارپائی - chárpái, Hind.). From (above + pái, pers. a foot). A bedstead being plain frame of wood set on four short legs; cords or broad tapes [navaur] are stretched along and across the frame to form the bed. Precisely the same are found in the old sculptures, and they are the same as those of the ancient Egyptians. It is correctly described in the following quotation from Ibn batuta:—"The bedsteads in India are very light. A "single man can carry one, and every traveller should have his "own bed, which his slave carries about on his head. The bed "consists of four conical legs, on which four staves are laid; "between these they plait a sort of ribbon of silk or cotton. "When you lie on it you need nothing else to render the bed "sufficiently elastic [cot, cuttil]."——Char yauree (چار یاری - cháryárí, Hind.). From (above + yár, pers. companion). Followers of the four companions, the Soonnees [q.v.].

CHAR (چاہ - chá, Dec.). From chinese. Same as Tea.

CHARAS (چرس - charas, Hind.). The exudation of the flowers of hemp [kinnab] collected in the early morning and prepared for use as an intoxicating drug [mooskiraut].

CHARAUNAH (چرانا - charáná, Hind.). Means grazing. So fines on cattle trespassing on corn fields [condy].

CHARCOAL TREE (کوئلے کا جھاڑ - kolsekájhár, Dec.). Title from making good charcoal [adooppkary] for gunpowder. Same as Indian nettle.

CHAR PALM (சாற்றுப்பனை - sháttuppanai, Tam.). Title means toddy palm. Same as Palmyra.

CHARVANAM (चर्वण - charvana, San.). Title from (charv, san. to masticate). Masticatory. Tobacco [pogauk] and many other vegetable substances are extensively used as masticatories by S. indian natives. They stimulate salivary glands, which adapt themselves to increased demand. The following are two key-lists of the principal masticatories of s. india for which vernacular names are known; further information must be traced in the glossary paragraphs through the small-type cross-references at end of this volume; see also vricsham, 7, for the method of expressing the products, &c., of plants in the dravidian languages:—"a" Acacia catechu, catechu, cutch; Alpinia officinarum, lesser galangal, root; Areca catechu, areca, nut; Caryota urens, bastard sago palm, fruit; Cinnamomum zeylanicum, ceylon cinnamon, bark; Cocos nucifera, cocoanut, dry nut; Elettaria cardamomum, cardamom, capsule; Eugenia caryophyllata, clove tree, flower buds; Myristica fragrans, common nutmeg, nutmeg and mace; Nicotiana tabacum, tobacco, leaf; Piper betel, betel pepper, leaf; Piper cubeba, cubeb pepper, berry; Strychnos nux-vomica, poison-nut, nut; Zingiber officinale, ginger, rhizome.—"b" Cardamom, elettaria; Catechu, acacia; Cinnamon, cinnamomum; Clove, eugenia; Cocoanut, cocos; Galangal, alpinia; Ginger, zingiber; Nutmeg, myristica; Pepper, piper; Poison nut, strychnos; Sago palm, caryota; Tobacco, nicotiana.

CHATOOR (चतुर - chatur, San.). Latin quatuor. Four.——Chatoor acarauthy (चतुरकारादि - chaturakárádi, San.). From (akárádi, san. dictionary). Dictionary of Tamul explained in Tamul, by Beschi [veeramaumoony]. Consists of four distinct dictionaries. The first, Peyar, shows the several meanings of every word. The second, Porool, shows the several words bearing the same meaning. The third, Togay, shows the subordinate species of the technical and general terms of science and literature. The fourth, Today, is a rhyming dictionary. The last is the only one which is entirely arranged in alphabetical order, the words in the others being collected into general classes and resembling therefore vocabularies rather than dictionaries [acarauthy, nigantoo].——Chatooram (ചതുരം - chaturam, Mal.). Quadrangular. Plant first term often joining two genera as in:—Averrhoa carambola (chaturappuli), quadrangular tamarindus indica.——Chatoordashy (चतुर्दशी - chaturdashí, San.). From (above + dasha, san. ten). The fourteenth day in a lunar fortnight. Lunar festival [pundigay, 3e] held on the fourteenth tity [q.v.] of either of fortnight of any month [anantachatoordashy, bhootachatoordashy, naracachatoordashy].——Chatoor mookhan (चतुर्मुख - chaturmukha, San.). From (mukha, san. face). The four-faced Bramha [matam, naul mookhan].——Chatoorta palam (चतुर्थफल - chaturt'hap'hala, San.). From (above + p'hala, san. result). The second inequality or equation of a planet [graham], answering to the annual parallax [sheeghram] of a superior planet and the elongation of an inferior one.——Chatoorty (चतुर्थी - chaturt'hí, San.). The fourth day in a lunar fortnight. Is sacred to Vigneshwaran. Lunar festival [pundigay, 3e] held on the fourth tity of either fortnight of any month [pillaiyaur chatoorty, vinauyaca chatoorty].——Chatoor varnam (चतुर्वर्ण - chaturvarna, San.). From (varna, san. color). The four castes of Hindoos [jauty].——Chatoor yoog (चतुर्युग - chaturyuga, San.). From (yuga, san. period of time). Same as mahayoog [caulam].——Chatoosunga (ಚತುಸ್ಸಂಗ - chatussanga, Can.). From (above + sanga, san. assemblage). The four old Aryan castes, Bramha, Cshatriya, Veisya and Shoodra.——Chatrangam (चतुरङ्ग - chaturanga, San.). From (above + anga, san. member). Chess. The Tamul cooral has the following:—அரங்கின்றி வட்டாடி யற்றே நிரம்பிய நூலின்றிக் கோட்டி கொளல்—"To speak in an assembly "without fulness of knowledge, is like playing at chess on a "board without squares" [chowsar, pacheesy, shatranj].

CHATTAM (చట్టము - tsattamu, Tel.; ചട്ടം - chattam, Mal.; சட்டம் - shattam, Tam.). Means a frame. Tabular account. A regulation.——Chattagar (چٹےکار - chattekár, Hind.; சட்டைக்காரன் - shattaikkáran, Tam.). Tam. from (shattai, tam. dress + káran, tam. possessor). One who wears European dress; an East indian.——Chattay (ಚಟ್ಟೆ - chatte, Can.; చట్ట - tsatta, Tel.; சட்டை - shattai, Tam.). Dress.——Chatty (भाण्ड - bhánda, San.; هانڈی - hándí, Hind.; هنڈی - handí, Dec.; بالنگا - bálanga, Malay; ಚಟ್ಟಿಗೆ - chattige, Can.; ಚಟ್ಟಿ - chatti, Too.; చట్టి - tsatti, Tel.; ചട്ടി - chatti, Mal.; சட்டி - shatti, Tam.). Title from tamul. Tam. from (shattam, tam. mould). Malay also (priyuk). Tel. also (kunda). Tam. also (pánai). Earthen pot, spheroidal in shape. There are three distinct branches of earthenware manufacture which though similar in their manipulation are different in their results; the red porous earthenware used for chatties and cooking vessels, the black used for similar purposes, and the fine white which resembles some of the biscuit earthenware of Europe. The red porous earthenware differs very materially in quality according to the locality from which the clay [calimunn] is selected; some is made of a common coarse earthy loam [pasalay munn] which has very little tenacity, and yields a brittle kind of pottery neither susceptible of much finish nor of being glazed; most of the pottery of southern india is of this description, the vessels which are mostly of round form are thrown thick in the neck and upper parts or sides; they are cut off the wheel and left open in the bottom with vertical sides, they are then allowed to harden a little in the necks and as soon as they will bear to be handled the sides are thinned out by beating with a flat mallet upon a rounded stone or very hard round piece of wood held inside the vessel which is turned about and beaten till it is closed; this makes a thin light vessel but at a great sacrifice of time, from eighteen to twenty of these is a good day's work. Black earthenware is a mere variety of the red and in most instances it is the same kind of pottery blackened by the simple process of damping or checking the fire when it is beginning to decline, and thus throwing a great deal of smoke amongst the wares when the heat is not sufficiently intense to burn it off; a better and stronger kind of black earthenware is manufactured at bangalore from a fine dense clay that contains both manganese [q.v.] and iron [auhan]; this approaches the black stoneware of egypt and is strong and sonorous when struck. White earthenware differs from the others in being conducted with more care and cleanliness, some attention being paid to the sifting of the materials and to the ornamenting and finishing of the articles; the material selected is a decaying white granite resembling the cornish stone of england or the grauen of germany; this is carefully washed and decanted to free it from sand or impurities, it is then allowed to subside, the water is poured off and the soft clay is collected on a clean cloth and laid on a heap of white wood ashes to dry; a small percentage of alkali [cauram] is thus absorbed through the cloth and is incorporated through the mass by kneading; this clay or decayed white granite is the true kaolin [q.v.] or porcelain earth of china and europe; it is abundant in southern india and occurs in beds of enormous extent and of every variety of color; it possesses the valuable qualities of combining with a large percentage of silica, felspar, baryta or other stony bodies and of resisting the most intense heats, but in southern india it is employed alone and produces a soft brittle porous ware which is not susceptible of being well glazed; the reason is that the kaolins require flint [teetatty cull], felspar [mauvayira cull], or stone to open them, and exposure to a long continued and steady heat before they are thoroughly burnt in the biscuit state; they also require a hard frit or porcelain glaze, which cannot be prepared without expensive machinery, the firing also involves a great consumption of fuel as the heat must be kept up steadily for forty or sixty hours.

CHATTRAM (छत्त्र - chhattra, San.). From (chhad, san. to cover). Umbrella or parasol [coday]. The umbrella is highest of insignia of regality. A vermilion umbrella everywhere in the east signifies imperial authority [maryauday]. Also name for the order fungi [caulaun].——Chattrapaty (छत्त्रपति - chhattrapati, San.). From (above + pati, san. lord). Title conferred on rulers, being higher than rajah or maharajah [q.v.].

CHAUGAL (چھاگل - chhágal, Hind.). A leathern bottle with spout to it, used for carrying water on journey [carboy].

CHAUGULMURRY (చాగలమఱ్ఱి - chágalamarri, Tel.). From (chágamu, tel. liberality + marri, tel. banyan, ficus bengalensis, linn.). Village, Head-quarters of Tahsildars; Kurnool district; Sirwail talook; pop. 3,115; acres 3,699; lat. 14° 58′; long. 78° 38′; from Cumbum S.W. 54 miles; from Kurnool S.S.E. 69 miles; from Madras N.W. 168 miles; from Nundiaul S.S.E. 36 miles; from Pyaupaly E.S.E. 60 miles. Built upon beds of calcareous limestone [choonam cull] and shale. About five miles north is Moottiaulpaud. Near is Shiva temple with tepid spring, resorted to at Shivarautry [pundigay, 6a].

CHAUKYAUN (ചാക്യൻ - chákyán, Mal.). From (shakya, san. buddhist ascetic). Caste-title. Half bramins in Malabar [ambalavausy]. They sing and play before the temple gods, or before Bramins. The women are called Nangiyaur [jauty].

CHAULA (ചാല - chála, Mal.). From (shálá, san. hall). A hut of the lower castes or of artizans.——Chaulacoody (ചാലക്കുടി - chálakkuti, Mal.). From (chála, mal. road + kuti, mal. house); being village in form of street, which on w. coast is not usual. River; Cochin state, Moocoondapooram tal.; lat. between 10° 10′ and 10° 25′; long. between 76° 10′ and 76° 45′. Chief river of Cochin state. Rises in the Anamullays in Coimbatore district, where it is known as the Cholayaur, and flows directly west into the sea at Paliport, being known by various names along its route. Total length about 80 miles.

CHAULMOOGRA (برنج موگرا - biranjmográ, Pers.; چال موگرا - chálmográ, Hind. and Dec.). Pers. from (biranj, pers. rice grain + mográ, pers. jasminum sambac, ait.); with reference to seeds. Hind. from (cháwal, hind. rice grain + mográ, hind. jasminum sambac, ait.). Title otherwise Fragrant marotty, Rice grain jasmine. Botanically Gynocardia odorata, r. br., bixineæ [vricsham, 14]. Alias Hydnocarpus odoratus. Large tree, attaining size of an oak or sycamore; entire, glossy, alternate leaves; large yellow sweet-scented flowers, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches across, growing in clusters on the old wood; the fruit is large and globular, about the size of a shaddock [pummelow], and contains numerous seeds immersed in pulp. The seeds, 1 to $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches long and about half as much in diameter, are of irregular ovoid form, and more or less angular or flattened by mutual pressure; they weigh on an average about thirty-five grains each; the testa is very thin, about $\frac{1}{50}$ of an inch, brittle, smooth, dull-grey; the copious oily albumen encloses a pair of large, plane, leafy, heart-shaped cotyledons with a stout radicle. The oil expressed from kernel of seeds is reddish brown and slightly viscid with a peculiar and nauseous smell and taste; it bears the greatest resemblance to croton [jamalgota] oil in its appearance and smell; during the rainy and cold seasons, a portion of it congeals and is thrown down at the bottom of the bottle in the form of a grey or yellowish-white crystalline fat; this fat is liquified by heat. The active principle of the oil is gynocardic acid; it is useful in all the forms of leprosy [cooshtam], tubercular, anæsthetic and mixed, but the first-named variety is the one most benefited; the internal use should always be assisted by its external application to the affected parts in combination with margosa [neem] oil, oil of pongamia glabra [karanj], &c. Preparation:—the oil taken floating on water or milk, the seeds in the form of pill or coarse powder. Doses:—of the oil, from five to fifteen minims or drops; of the seeds, from five to fifteen grains or more. Gives to pharm. chaulmoogra seeds, gynocardiæ semina, alterative tonic, in large doses emetic; and chaulmoogra ointment, unguentum gynocardiæ; officinal. In s. india, chaulmoogra is rarely obtainable, and marotty [q.v.] oil is a substitute.

CHAULYAM (ചാലിയം - cháliyam, Mal.). From (cháliyan, mal. a weaver). Island; Malabar dist., Yernaud tal.; lat. 11° 09′; long. 75° 51′; from Calicut S.S.E. 7 miles; from Munjery W.N.W. 21 miles; from the sea E. ½ mile. Rocky islet southward of entrance to Beypore river and connected with the mainland by a groyne. Contains old masonry foundations for formidable fortress for protection of entrance to Beypore river. Perhaps by Tippoo [furruckabad]. Site of abandoned Beypore railway station. Portuguese had factory here.——Chaulyan (ചാലിയൻ - cháliyan, Mal.). From (jála, san. woven texture). Weavers of Malabar [jauty].

CHAUMA (ಚಾಮ - cháma, Can.). Black. Common name of Mysore rajahs, as Chauma rajendra wodeyar.

CHAUN (ചാൺ - chán, Mal.). Span. Linear measure. 12 virals = 1 chaun; 2 chauns = 1 moolam [alavay, 1 d]. Approximate actual value, 1 chaun = 9 inches. Same as San. gocurnam, vitasty; Hind. bilisht; Can. guenoo; Tel. jena; Tam. jaun. Compare San. pradesham, Tam. adee, wottay.

CHAUPA (حصير - hasir, Hind.; చాప - tsápa, Tel.; பாய் - páy, Tam.). Hind. from (hasira, ar. to contract). Tel. from (tsápu, tel. to extend). Tam. from (pávu, tam. to spread). Mat; made of bamboo [q.v.], caldera bush [screw-pine], palmyra [q.v.] leaves, rattan [q.v.], &c. [boriyah]. Also sail of boat.

CHAUPAH (چھاپا - chhápá, Hind.; ചാപ്പ - cháppa, Mal.). A seal [moodray], stamp, punched coin [naunyam]. Chaupah kayitham, from (kákitamu, tel. paper) is stamped paper. Chaupah khana, from (khánah, pers. house) is a printing office.

CHAUTAH (چھاتا - chhátá, Hind.). Chest.——Chautahband (چھاتا بند - chhátáband, Hind.). From (above + band, pers. bound). Chest influenza in horses [ashwarogam].

CHAUVADY (چوری - cháurí, Hind.; ಚಾವಡಿ - chávadi, Can.; చావడి - tsávadi, Tel.; ചാവടി - chávati, Mal.; சாவடி - shávadi, Tam.). From (chau, mahr. four + váta, san. road); place where four roads meet. Appears in Anglo-indian as choultry [q.v.]. A hall, used by travellers as a resting-place, and also intended for the transaction of a public business. A building of this kind formed the earliest court-house. In the old Madras archives there is frequent mention of the Justices of the Choultry. The Moonsif of every village still holds court in the village choultry. Pillared hall attached to a temple [coil, pagoda] in front of the vimaunam [q.v.], but this is more properly called Mantapam [q.v.]. Distinguish from chuttram [q.v.]. Constantly used as suffix for place names [chowky, moosaufer khana].

CHAUVER (چاور - chávar, Hind.). From (cháhúra, mahr. the measure). Superficial measure. 120 beegahs = 1 chauver [alavay, 2 e]. Approximate actual value, 1 chauver = 75 acres. Varies with beegah. Same as candy applied to land.

CHAUYAY (छाया - chháyá, San.). From (chhad, san. to cover). Shadow, the consort of Sooryan.——Chauyah sootan (छायासुत - chháyásuta, San.). From (above + suta, san. son). Born from darkness. One of the names of Saturn [shany].——Madhyama chauyay (मध्यमछाया - madhyamachháyá, San.). From (madhyama, san. middle + above). The midday shadow of a gnomon [shunk].——Sama mundala chauyay (सममण्डलछाया - samamandalachháyá, San.). From (sama, san. equal + mandala, san. disc + above). The midday shadow of a gnomon when the sun is east or west of it.——Vishoova chauyay (विषुवछाया - vishuvachháyá, San.). From (vishu, san. equinox + above). The shadow of a gnomon when the sun is in the equinoctial points [ayanam, jyotisham].

CHAYROOT (چرول - chirval, Hind.; چرول کا جهاڑ - chirvalká-jhár, Dec.; ಚಾಯಬೇರು - cháyabéru, Can.; చిరివేరు - chirivéru, Tel.; ସୁରବୁଲି - surbuli, Oor.; ചായവേര് - cháyavér, Mal.; සායමුල් - sayamul, Singh.; சாயவேர் - sháyavér, Tam.). Title from malayalam. Can. from (cháya, can. color + béru, can. root). Tel. from (chiru, tel. small + véru, tel. root). Mal. from (cháyam, mal. color + vér, mal. root). Hind. also (chirvalkílakrí), meaning chirwal wood. Tam. also (imbúral), meaning iron-taint plant; (irámésuvaramvér), meaning rameshwaram root, from place of growth; (shiruvér), meaning small + root. Title othewise Chiroovair, Chirwal, Dye root, Indian madder, Rameshwaram root, Shauyavair. Botanically Oldenlandia [field parpatam] umbellata, linn., rubiaceæ [vricsham, 71]. Alias Hedyotis hispida, indica, umbellata; Oldenlandia hispida, puberula. Small plant, suffruticose, erect or diffuse, slightly scabrous; calyx four-parted; corolla rotate, four-cleft; leaves opposite or verticillate, linear, paler on the under side, margins recurved; stipules ciliated with bristles; peduncles alternate, axillary, bearing a short raceme; partial peduncles one to three-flowered; capsule globose with a wide dehiscence; flowers white. Weedy annual or biennial; growing spontaneously in sandy soil near the sea and extensively cultivated on coromandel coast; small, narrow, pale-green leaves. Cultivated roots orange-colored, very slender and from one to two feet, but wild are shorter and yield more coloring matter; the coloring matter resides entirely in the bark of the root, the inner portion being white and useless; roots of two years' growth are preferred when procurable; chayroot rapidly deteriorates by being kept in any dark place. Cultivated in sandy soil on sea coast; ground prepared on coromandel in pooshyam or january, maugham or february, and phaulgoonam [mausam] or march, land being first dug with momatties [q.v.] and then ploughed up four times and levelled; grounds afterwards watered regularly; seed sown in phaulgoonam or march and cheitram or april; seeds of one-fourth maunica [q.v.] mixed with sand of 16 maunicas are sown direct on the land; watered daily twice for nine days through sieve of palmyra [q.v.] fibre, so that the seeds may not be disturbed; on the tenth day when seeds sprout water mixed with dung is sprinkled on the crop by hand; from the eleventh day pure water is sprinkled forenoon and afternoon; thenceforward watered more rarely; after three months cattle dung mixed with sand is sprinkled; after six months the crop is rooted up; brought to market after one month; average price, 9 imperial seers for 1 rupee. The leaves are expectorant; dried and powdered are mixed with flour and made into cakes, and given in asthmatic complaints and consumption. Roots yield a blue dye, which by different mordants [cauram] is changed from pale to a very deep red, and with which turbans and handkerchiefs are dyed; the basis of the dye is alizarine; chayroot holds the same place amongst indian dye stuffs as madder does in europe; for producing the brilliant and fast red dye for which madras handkerchiefs were once famous, it is used along with the morinda [dyeing mulberry], and with alum [padicauram] as a mordant; when employed with ventilago [pappily] it gives the chocolate color formerly so much prized in the bandana [q.v.] or poolicat handkerchief; with iron [auhan] it gives a black, and with safflower [bastard saffron], lime [choonam] juice and soda [munn cauram] an unstable red color [shauyam]. The following is a detailed account of the mode of dyeing yarn with chayroot:—The yarn, being washed and untwisted that it may not become entangled, and being so separated that every part may be equally penetrated by the coloring matter, is divided into bundles of thirty or forty threads, through each of which at the middle and extremities a cotton thread is loosely sewed, but so as to allow of every thread being exposed to the sun's rays when hung up, and the threads spread out on a bamboo. The yarn is washed and cleansed in cold water, aided by half an hour's manipulation; it is then kept in water in covered vessels till it acquires a putrid smell, which takes place in from twenty-four to thirty-six hours, and during this period it is occasionally pressed and worked for a quarter of an hour together; it is then washed as clean as possible, beaten on a stone or earthen pot, and hung up to dry. While this process is going on, a lye or mordant [cauram] is prepared of the ashes of the plantain [q.v.] or other tree in cold water; it is an object to have the lye of sufficient strength, which is determined by adding to a small quantity about half as much gingelly [q.v.] oil and giving to it a gentle motion; should it turn immediately white, having no visible globules of oil swimming on the surface, it is good; the quantity required of clean lye being poured off and strained, sheep dung, in the proportion of three ounces to a pint of lye, is dissolved in one-half of it, and this solution is again strained; the other half of the lye is mixed with half its bulk of gingelly oil and half as much tsiky or saponaceous water procured during and retained from former process, being, in fact, a solution of soap in water; the two liquors are then mixed together, and if things are favorable a milky scum arises; the proportions required for say half a pound of yarn would be, gingelly oil half a pint by two pints, tsiky a quarter of a pint, sheep dung two or three ounces. The yarn having been soaked in this mordant is dried in the sun for some hours; it is then again soaked and dried as before; the same night it is treated with an additional portion of mordant, is put into covered vessels, and allowed to remain till morning; if any mordant remain the same process is again repeated; the yarn is at night moistened with the lye first prepared, diluted with one-third of its bulk of water, and put into covered vessels; the yarn in drying should have the position constantly changed, to prevent the lye from accumulating in the lower part; next day the yarn is spread out to dry; then it is taken in at night, and treated with lye; this alternate soaking or thorough moistening with lye at night and exposure during the day are continued without intermission till the yarn appears saturated with lye, or in fact till the oil is converted into soap [sauboon]; this, if the lye is sufficiently strong, may occupy five days; this is ascertained by washing a few inches from off the bundle in water holding some astringent in solution; a whitish scum will arise, and it is from the feeling of this scum when worked between the hands, and the appearance of it afterwards, that the state is determined; the workman being satisfied of the completion of this process, the yarn is again moistened for one day, morning and evening, with much diluted lye or plain water; the yarn may be immediately washed, but the process is much improved by retaining it for some weeks, to allow the animalizing matter to get fixed; the yarn is then washed in a tank till nothing of the mordant seemingly remains, but the smell and a certain softness to the touch; occasionally the whole process is again repeated. The yarn being thus thoroughly impregnated with the mordant, a cold infusion of cassa [q.v.] leaves in water is made, and after some hours the yarn is put into it and handled in such a manner as to expose every thread to its action; it is allowed to remain therein all night; the quantity of leaf used in the infusion is so great that it resembles a paste; next morning the water is wrung out from the yarn, the adhering leaves are shaken off, and fresh leaves with an equal quantity of chayroot substituted; for half a pound of yarn a handful of each is sufficient; after two hours the yarn is laid in the liquor; the same process is repeated on the third day; by this time the yarn usually changes to a reddish-yellow color, with occasional red spots. A liquor in which to soak the yarn is now prepared of a handful of chayroot in water; on the fourth day the yarn will appear in the evening of a light red color; it is treated in the same manner as on preceding days, and a similar liquor to the last-named is prepared for soaking it in at night. On the fifth day the yarn is washed in a tank, and afterwards dried in the sun; as usual, for soaking it in at night, a liquor is prepared of pounded cassa leaves, mixed with gingelly oil sufficient to form a dry paste, of which about half an ounce is mixed in the usual portion of water; after standing two hours, a handful of chayroot is added, and the yarn immediately immersed for the night. The mode of proceeding on the sixth day is similar, but the liquor for the night is prepared wholly of chayroot. On the seventh day the yarn is again washed, dried, etc.; on this and the next day it is immersed in a liquor composed of equal parts of cassa leaves and chayroot in water. The yarn is now boiled in a liquor composed of that strained from it at the last night's process, with the addition of chayroot, a handful for half a pound of yarn, and sufficient water to give room to agitate the yarn freely; the pot containing the liquor is placed on the fire, which is kept up briskly till it begins to boil; it is then kept simmering till a rose-colored froth rises and covers the surface, when the fire is withdrawn, and the pot with its contents allowed to cool gradually; during the boiling the contents of the pot are stirred quickly, so as to expose the yarn as little as possible to the action of the air. When cold, the yarn is taken out and washed in a tank, beaten as usual, and dried in the sun; its color should be a bright and lively red; if it fail, it is occasionally brightened by steeping once more in a liquor composed with cassa leaves and chayroot, the former being mixed first with a little gingelly oil; a temporary brilliancy is further given by putting it in a cold infusion of sappan [q.v.] wood. See also Shauyam for dyeing with other dyes.——Counterfeit chayroot (இம்பூறற்சக்களத்தி - imbúrar-chakkalatti, Tam.). Title from inferiority. Tam. from (imbúral, tam. oldenlandia umbellata, linn. + shakkalatti, tam. rival wife); meaning counterfeit chayroot. Botanically Oldenlandia [field parpatam] dichotoma, kœn., rubiaceæ [vricsham, 71]. Alias Hedyotis affinis, dichotoma, diffusa, linifolia; Oldenlandia affinis, capillaris, linifolia, pusilla. Annual, erect or decumbent with erect branches; branches slightly four-angled, scabrous on the angles; leaves linear, attenuated at both ends, flaccid; stipules usually with two to three bristles, sometimes without any; flowers on long and capillary pedicels, rarely axillary and solitary, sometimes two to three from the apex of a slender elongated peduncle, usually several, arranged in very lax peduncled axillary or terminal naked racemes; corolla infundibuliform; capsule nearly globose, with a not very prominent ridge on the apex; flowers white; flowering in rainy season.——Wild chayroot (क्षेत्रपर्पटी - kshétraparpatí, San.; کھیت پاپڑ - khetpápar, Hind.; వెఱ్ఱినేలవేము - verrinélavému, Tel.; වල්පත්පාඩගම් - valpatpádagam, Singh.). San. from (kshétra, san. field + parpata, san. mollugo genus). Cf. mollugo stricta [wild tirye]. Tel. from (verri, tel. mad + nélavému, tel. andrographis paniculata, nees.). Singh. from (val, singh. jungle + patpádagam, singh. mollugo cerviana, sering.). Botanically Oldenlandia [field parpatam] corymbosa, linn., rubiaceæ [vricsham, 71]. Alias Hedyotis biflora, burmanniana, intermedia; Oldenlandia biflora, herbacea, ramosa. Annual, diffuse, glabrous or scabrous; leaves linear or linear-lanceolate, tapering at both ends; peduncles solitary, axillary, alternate, shorter than the leaves, one to three-flowered; corolla shortly-tubular; calyx-segments in fruit somewhat subulate, distant, with the sinus wide; capsule glabrous, roundish-ovate, gibbous at the base, narrower towards the crown; flowers small, white; flowering in rainy season. Whole plant used medicinally in decoction, alterative.

CHEBEERA (اطریلال - atrílál, Hind.; ಶಿಬಿಗಿಡ - síbigida, Can.; చేబీర - chébíra, Tel.; കാരക്കാഞ്ഞിരം - kárakkáññiram, Mal.; මහනෙළු - mahanelu, Singh.; காரக்கானிராம் - kárakkánirám, Tam.). Title from teloogoo. Tel. from (chédu, tel. bitter + bíra, tel. luffa acutangula, rox.). Mal. from (kár, mal. black + káññiram, mal. strychnos nux-vomica, linn.). Singh. from (maha, singh. great + nelu, singh. strobilanthes sp.). Tam. from malayalam. Title otherwise Bitter luffa. Botanically Peristrophe bicalyculata, nees, acanthaceæ [vricsham, 101]. Alias Dianthera bicalyculata, malabarica; Justicia bicalyculata, ligulata, malabarica. Stem hexagonal, bough and hairy; leaves ovate-acuminate, glabrous or puberulous, peduncles axillary, bitrifid, their branches dichotomous; flowers solitary, pale-rose; common involucre of one leaf linear, double the length of the flower-head; calyx small, membranaceous; corolla pubescent, nearly half an inch long; flowering in cold season. Whole plant, macerated in an infusion of rice, a remedy in poisonous snake-bites; has properties of fumitory and is used in its stead, but has not its bitterness. Other common species are:—lanceolaria, montana, undulata. Cf. French chiretta.

CHECKBUNDY (چک بندی - chakbandí, Hind.). From (chak, hind. division of land + bandí, hind. limit). Defining of boundaries of detached piece of land [inam].

CHEE (چھی - chhí, Hind.). Fie.——Cheechee (چھی چھی - chhíchhí, Hind.). A disparaging term applied to half-castes.

CHEEKATY (చీకటి - chíkati, * Tel.). From (chitkiti, oor. a wild hog). Ancient zemindarry, Village; Ganjam dist., pop. of village 3,396; square miles 118; lat. of village 19° 12′; long. 84° 40′; from Berhampore S.W. 13 miles; from Chetterpore W.S.W. 27 miles. South-east of Pedda kimedy. In general open and well cultivated. Watered by the Bauhoodah. Said to have been granted by a king of Cuttack to Kashauno, a Sirdar, who conquered the country from the aboriginal wild tribes, and built a fort in A.D. 881. The number of villages is 129 and the country is divided into the six mittahs of Bodopolonko, Cotilingy, Jayantipooram, Krishnapooram, Patrapooram and Talatampara. The last named mittah is entirely separated from the rest of the estate and is the most fertile. The present zemindar is Shree vishwambhara rajendra deo. Peshcush Rs. 33,904. The Rajah possesses a substantially-built house at Cheekaty.

CHEEMA (చీమ - chíma, Tel.). Ant [choomtee].——Cheemacoorty (చీమకుర్తి - chímakurti, Tel.). From (chíma, tel. ant + gutti, tel. collection). Tel. also (chímakutika), meaning ant + hut. Village, Hill; Nellore dist., Ongole tal.; pop. 3,407; acres 14,282; lat. 15° 35′; long. 79° 55′; from Nellore N. 78½ miles; from Ongole W.N.W. 13 miles; from the sea W. 24 miles. On trunk road from Ongole to Cumbum. The deity is Sautchy ramalingasawmy, that at Ramateertam at foot of hill is Mocsharamalingasawmy. The ascent to the hill is exceedingly difficult, otherwise it could be made a good hot weather resort. Trig. station in lat. 15° 37′ 12·36″; long. 79° 52′ 04·69″; height 2,093 feet; from Ongole W.N.W. 17 miles; from the sea W. 23 miles.

CHEEN (चीन - chína, San.; چین - chín, Hind.; சீனம் - shínam, Tam.). China [bhoogolashastram, cathay, china].

CHEEPOORPULLY (చీపురుపల్లె - chípurupalle, * Tel.). From (chípuru, tel. broom + palle, tel. village). Tel. also (kótachípurupalle), meaning fort + the place.——(1) Division, Vizagapatam district; area 547 square miles; population 138,896; language Teloogoo. N. coast of district. Boundaries:—north, Palcondah talook; east, Chicacole talook of Ganjam and Bay of Bengal; south, Bay of Bengal and Bimlipatam division; west, Vizianagram and Gajapatinugger talooks and Bobbily division. Dry barren tract excepting a few localities. Intersected by hillocks in several places. Soil is of the red ferruginous series and sandy, with nodulous kankar [q.v.] underlying. Tobacco [pogauk] and chillies [chilly] are largely exported. Fine cloths of native thread are woven and exported to various places. Camping ground at Ranastalam. Places of archæological interest:—Cheepoorpully, Cotapollem, Dooppalvalsa, Gadabavalsa, Gargoobilly, Goozerattipett, Sher mahomed pooram. Principal trig. stations:—Cotcherla beacon, Pindy, Ramchendrapooram beacon, Rauvipulley, Tamauda, Yerramunty. The leading places, &c., in the division are the following.——Bontalacodoor (బొంతలకోడూరు - bontalakódúru, Tel.). From (bonta, tel. quilt + kódúru, tel. place so called). Title from hindostany. San. from (chitra, san. variegated). Mahr. from sanscrit. Ar. from (namara, ar. spotted). Pers. from (úzídan, pers. to seek); as used in hunting. Hind. from sanscrit. Can. from (chiru, can. small). Coorg from (kiru, can. small). Tel. from (chiruta, tel. small + puli, tel. tiger). Mal. from (chem, mal. red + puli, mal. tiger). Tam. from (shiruttai, tam. cheetah + puli, tam. tiger). San. also (chitravyághra), meaning spotted tiger. Pers. also (yúzpaláng), meaning cheetah tiger. Hind. also (lakarbágh), means tree-tiger. Can. also (sivangi). Called also the Hunting leopard because trained to hunt the antelope. Cynaelurus jubatus, felidæ [deeptaucsham] digitigrada, carnivora, mammalia [sastanam, 9], of naturalists [jantoo]. Alias Felis jubata, guttata, venatica; Gueparda guttata. This animal was the Leopardus of the ancients, who considered, with the Arabs of the present day in Northern africa, that it was a breed between the lion and the pard; arguing from the mane or tuft of hair on the neck. To this species the English have applied the Indian name cheetah, which however is a name really for all spotted cats; cheetah-baugh being spotted tiger, cheetal the spotted deer, &c. A tall, slim animal, with body much drawn in at the flanks like a greyhound; purely cat-like head with short round ears; long tail, much compressed at the end; in color a bright rufous fawn, more or less deep, sometimes a bright nankeen, dotted with numerous small black spots which are single, and not in rosettes, as in the pards; a black streak from the corner of the eye down the face; ears black at base externally, the rest whitish; the tail spotted, but having three or four black rings at the tip, and the extreme tip is always white; the hair of the belly is lengthened with a shaggy fringe-like appearance; the fur generally is coarse; the nozzle is black, whereas in the tiger it is pink, and in a pard dusky pink; the pupils of the eye contract circularly. The cheetah is in much request as a necessary appanage to regal state among native rulers. For this purpose the adult animal is always caught, it being considered that a young leopard would never turn out well for the purposes of the chase. Antelope [jinka], gazelle [q.v.], and nilghye [q.v.] are its chief food in the wild state. On a hunting party, the cheetah is carried on a cart, hooded; and when the game is raised the hood is taken off. The cheetah then leaps down, sometimes on the opposite side to its prey, and pursues the antelope. If the latter are near the cart, the cheetah springs forward with amazing velocity, perhaps exceeding that which any other quadruped possesses. This great velocity is not unlike the sudden spring by which the tiger seizes its prey, but it is often continued for three or four hundred yards. If within this distance the cheetah does not seize its prey, he stops; but apparently more from anger or disappointment than from fatigue for his attitude is fierce, and he has been known immediately afterwards to pursue with equal rapidity another antelope that happened to be passing. If the game is at too great a distance when the cheetah's eyes are uncovered, he in general gallops after it until it approaches so near that he can seize it by a rapid spring. This gallop is as quick as the course of well-mounted horsemen. Sometimes, but rarely, the cheetah endeavours to approach the game by stealth, and goes round a hill or rock until he can come upon it by surprise. An oil obtained from the cheetah's intestines is used in cases of rheumatic affections like tiger fat. The bones and hair are reduced to powder and mixed with gingelly [q.v.] oil, blue stone [mayil toottam] or bichloride of mercury [rascapoor], and used as an application in cases of syphilitic complaints. The flesh, boiled in milk, has virtues in epilepsy [honiga, pooly].

The men go nearly nude. The women dress in style of wandering female coravars [q.v.], wear copper ornaments and rosaries of Goorivenda ginjas [indian liquorice], and smear faces with oil of Buchanania latifolia [chironjee] and Pongamia glabra [karanj]. Formerly the chentsoo men used to wear on their heads caps made of leaves of trees; the elders still carry a spear, a hatchet, or a matchlock; the juniors a bamboo [q.v.] bow and an arrow of reeds, tipped with iron; sometimes poison is applied to the ends of the arrows; they are not now good marksmen, but serve as beaters.—" c " Chentsoos worship Ahobalam narsimha sawmy, and present honey [shahad], saurapappoo [chironjee], &c., on festivals at Ahobalam temple. They also worship Vencateshwaran, Veerabhadran, and Gandoolaveeran, to whom they make rice-offerings. They add a lamp sacrifice when they worship Goorappa, Ancaulamman, Yidamma, Potrauz, Sooncoolamma, Mauriyamman, Mullammah, &c. No forehead marks as a rule.—" d " When at home they live in small communities called goodems [q.v.]. They frequent chiefly the tract of jungle covering the westernmost range of the eastern ghaut line, between the pennair river and the kistna, and known locally as the nullamullays [q.v.] and the lunkamullays [q.v.]; also the palcondah hills to west of the nellore district, and specially the nundicanama pass, on the road between cumbum and gooty, where they serve as watchmen and guides. They inhabit clearings in the forest; they live in beehive-shaped huts like the nicobarian tribes, of wicker-work, with walls about three feet high, and a conical straw roof, with a screen for a door; they look on weaving and other manufacturing arts with contempt. Each goodem has a headman, who decides all disputes, assisted by elders of neighbouring goodem; he is not known by any particular titles, but is entitled to precedence on all occasions of marriage or other ceremonies, and to a portion of the flesh of the animals killed by any member of the goodem; in former times he used to dispose of murder cases also; the murderer, on proof of guilt, being put to death with the same weapons with which the murder was committed. They eat cholum [q.v.], and raggy [q.v.]; also a species of wild tubers called chentsoo gaddah, and the flesh of all animals killed in the chase excepting tiger [pooly], cheetah [q.v.] and wolf [konye]; in last case they do not boil the meat, but heat it over the fire; the flesh of the lungoor [q.v.] or condamoottsoo is much relished [malayarasa]; in the hot months a species of lizard is eaten. They have no distinction of caste such as prevents their eating and drinking together; they practise polygamy, but the western chentsoos do not intermarry with the eastern chentsoos, nor with those on the northern side of the kistna; the chentsoos do not marry with the teloogoos on the plains. Chentsoo widows, like the wandering lumbaudies [q.v.], generally marry the brother of their former husband; if there is no brother, they are allowed to marry others. Cremation is not practised by chentsoos. They look upon the jungle minor produce, such as honey, gall-nut [mauchicoy], and the like, as their exclusive property; they also claim the privilege of collecting a small fee from the pilgrims to srisheilam on occasions of festivals, in return for which they undertake to act as their guide without molestation; some chentsoos are employed by villagers on plains to watch fields during harvest; their chief occupation is collection of jungle produce and the chase.—" e " Numbers about 5,000. They are divided into five tribes or gotrams. Bonta chentsoo, from (bonta, tel. quilt), are a sub-division, who live in patch-work tents [jauty].

CHETTY (శెట్టి - setti, Tel.; செட்டி - shetti, Tam.). From (shettu, tam. trade). Not the same as the Bombay sait [q.v.]. See vol. I (66); II, 227 [jauty].—"a" Primarily a member of any trading caste in Southern india, answering to the Banyans [q.v.] of Western and Northern india. It is applied in this sense, without reference to caste or race, to the Parsee engaged in trade, the Mahomedan bohrah [q.v.], the Teloogoo comaty [q.v.], the Tamul vellaulan [q.v.], the Silk-weaver, and the Cavaray [q.v.]. Amongst the Teloogoo races the title is given to the Gauzoola balije [q.v.] or bangle-makers, the Vauniyar or oil-pressers, the Ilay vauniya or cloth-merchants, and the Comaties or grocers and general dealers. In the Tamul country it is given to the Nautcottays or general merchants, and to the Coosavar or potters. The Tooloo race take Chetty as a title.—"b" The word also represents a caste proper. Number in presidency about 260,000; mostly in Coimbatore, Madura, Malabar and Tanjore. Some of the Chetty families abstain from animal food and otherwise follow the pure Vellaula customs, and very probably are of the true Vellaula caste. Men of ordinary pully or vunniya castes, however, as they rise in the world, assume the title of chetty or pillay, according as they pursue trade or agriculture; and the classes of chetties and pillays thus newly formed have now become so numerous that it is difficult to distinguish the true castes from them. There are Tamul proverbs:—ஆதாயமில்லாத செட்டி ஆற்றைக்கட்டி இறைப்பானா?—"Will a Chetty dam up a river and drain out "its waters for nothing?" கெட்டாலும் செட்டி செட்டியே கிழிந்தாலும் பட்டு பட்டே—"Though reduced in circum-"stances a Chetty is a Chetty; silk is silk though never so "torn." செட்டிக்கு வேளாண்மை சென்மப் பகை—"The "chetty has a natural aversion to agriculture." செத்தால் தெரியும் செட்டியார் வாழ்வு—"The wealth of the Chetty "will be known after death."—"c" Also a mere Hindoo third name. Chettiar is honorific plural [peyar].——Berichetty (బేరిసెట్టి - bérisetti, Tel.). From (béramu, tel. trade). Claim to be the only representative of a true Veisya stock belonging to the left-hand castes [yidangay]. They are distinct from ordinary Comaties or Chetties. Some worship Shiva and some Vishnoo, and a few are Lingavant who do not marry into families with a different worship. All the divisions wear the sacred thread. None tolerate widow remarriage. Unlike Comaties, the daughters are sometimes married after puberty. About 20,000.——Chetty grass (ചെട്ടിപ്പുല്ല് - chettippullu, Mal.). Probably from being introduced into malabar by chetties or tamul shoodras. Same as raggy.——Nautcottay chetty (நாட்டுக்கோட்டைச்செட்டி - náttukkóttaiççetti, Tam.). Corruption of Nauttarasancottay, small village near Shivagunga. A trading class of the Vunniya or Pully caste of the Tinnevelly and other southern districts. They are found all over the coast and seaport towns in the peninsula and the islands of the Indian ocean. All speak Tamul and follow Hindooism; are large spice merchants, and have the marked African protruding lips and nose sharply cut at the forehead. They are keen, active traders. However wealthy they may be, they usually live in the most penurious manner. They seclude their wives [jauty]. They claim to be a good caste, and assert that they emigrated to Madura thousands of years ago from a town called Cauvery-putnam in consequence of persecution. But the other Chetties will not admit the truth of their story, and allege that they are the descendants of a Mahomedan man and a Culla woman.——Vellaun chetty (வெள்ளாஞ்செட்டி - velláñjetti, obl., Tam.). From (vellán, tam. a member of the vellála caste). A trading Vellaulan. About 40,000.

CHETWYE (ചേററുവായ - chéttaváya, Mal.). From (chettu, mal. to cut + vazhi, mal. way).—"a" Village; Malabar dist., Ponnany tal.; lat. 10° 32′; long. 76° 05′; from Bombay S.S.E. 608 miles; from Cochin N.N.W. 41 miles; from Calicut S.S.E. 52 miles; from Madras S.W. 340 miles; from Ponnany S.S.E. 19 miles; from Trichore W. 12 miles. A strip of land on sea-coast insulated by estuaries of the Chetwye and Cranganore. Sometimes called Manapooram, meaning sandy-side from nature of the soil. Has travellers' bungalow. Extends nearly 27 miles from south-east to north-west, with a breadth varying from 2 to 4 miles. Forms part of the township of Vaudanpully and adjoins the territory of Cochin. In 1715 permission granted by the Zamorin to the English to build a warehouse. In 1717, wrested from the Zamorin by the Dutch, who built a fort and made it the capital of their province of Pauppinivuttam. Taken by the Portuguese from the Dutch. In 1776 Hyder ally overran the district and captured the fort. In 1790 it was taken by Colonel Hartly, and passed into British possession on the conclusion of peace in 1792. It was leased to the Cochin rajah for Rs. 40,000 per annum until 1805, in which year it came under the direct administration of the East india company.—"b" River; Malabar dist., Ponnany tal.; lat. 10° 31′ N.; long. 76° 6′ E. The mouth and about 6 miles of course lie in British territory, and for about 2 miles more it forms boundary between British territory and Cochin native state. At end of this 8 miles the river widens out into a lake, partly natural and partly artificial.

CHEY (చే - ché, Tel.; செய் - shey, Tam.). From (shey, tam. to do). Cultivated ground; field [chainoo]. So measure of a corn field; very variable, from 1 to 2 acres [alavay, 2 a]. In tel. also means hand, from same root.——Chejerla (చెజెర్ల - chejerla, Tel.). From (above + cherla, tel. village). Sanscrit name (kapótéshvara), meaning dove + lord.—"a" Village; Kistna dist., Narsarowpett tal.; pop. 1,140; acres 2,329; lat. 16° 19′; long. 79° 53′; from Masulipatam W. 84 miles; from Narsarowpett W.N.W. 14½ miles. The legend told in the Mahabhaurat of the king who sacrificed his own flesh to redeem the life of a dove hunted by a hawk is transferred to this place. Three caves in the rock, probably ancient. Many remains of shrines. Ten inscriptions. A large baobab [q.v.] tree here considered indigenous. Between temple and west tank are heaps of debris from smelting of iron ore. Industry now extinct. Marble stone [shalavay cull] quarried.—"b" Village; Nellore dist., Atmacore tal.; pop. 2,665; acres 7,808; lat. 14° 31′; long. 79° 37′; from Atmacore S. 7 miles; from Nellore W. 28 miles. Ancient temple of Vishnoo as Chennakeshavan. Has an inam of acres 31·96. Temple to Shiva as Neelacuntan, with inam of acres 25·82. In some villages near this, viz., Canoopoorpulley shrotriem, Gollapully, Padair, and Timmayyapollem shrotriem, diamonds [vajram] were formerly found. The remains of the old works are still visible.——Cheyair (చెయ్యేరు - cheyyéru, Tel. cheyér *). From (above + éru, tel. river). Sanscrit corruption, for tel. (cheyyi), hand (báhudánadí), meaning hand-giving + river; from the legend of a person who regained his lost hand by bathing in the stream. River; Cuddapah dist., Madanapully, Voilpaud, Royachoty, Poollampett and Sidhout tals. Tributary of the Pennair. Formed by several streams rising in the south and south-west extremities of the sub-division of Cuddapah district, the principal of which are the Punchanuddy and the Bauhoodah nuddy. The several tributaries combine in Royachoty talook near Royavaram. The river then flows through the Palcondah hills, dividing the latter from the Sheshachellam range, receiving during this part of its course the combined waters of the Maundavair and the Chittair which drains the north-east portion of Royachoty talook. After winding through the valley which once formed the petty kingdom of Chitwail it flows into the Pennair near the boundary of Sidhout and Poollampett talooks. It finds an exit through the Soonkesala pass in the Eastern ghauts [q.v.]. Two miles from Culcada is a branch of this stream. Its water is extensively used for irrigation by means of channels. Crossed by a railway bridge at Nundalore. The original bridge was partly swept away by flood in October 1870 and 1874; on the former occasion many of the passengers in a train were drowned. The present bridge was completed in May 1879. The river is dry for six months in the year. It is not navigable.——Cheyaur (செய்யாறு - sheyyáru, Tam. cheyár *). From (above + áru, tam. river). Sanscrit corruption (báhudánadí), meaning hand-giving river; see cheyair. Sanscrit also (skandanadí), meaning soobramanyan's river; from a legend that the river arose from his peacock's pecking at the mountain. River; North arcot and Chingleput districts. Rises in the Jawandy range near Chengam in lat. 12° 30′ N.; long. 78° 50′ E. First flows southward into S. arcot. After passing through Polore talook and Arnee jaghire it forms boundary between Wandiwash and Arcot talooks. Tributaries in N. arcot are the Camandala nuddy or Padavaid, Mricanda nuddy, Bheemanuddy, and Munjalaur, all rising in the Jawaudy hills. Enters Chingleput district 10 or 12 miles west of Ootramallore, flowing past Trivettore and watering many rich villages in that division by channels taken off it. Among others it fills the tank of Ootramallore village, with a revenue of Rs. 25,000 dependent on it. It joins the Palaur in Chingleput district in lat. 12° 45′; long. 79° 55′.——Cheypota (చెయిపోత - cheyipóta, Tel.). From (cheyyi, tel. hand + póyu, tel. to pour). Irrigation by hand from pools.

CHICACOLE * (శ్రీకాకుళము - shríkákulamu, Tel.). From (shikhá, san. head + kula, san. house), as being capital of calingam. Sanscrit name (shikhápura), meaning extremity + town. Mahomedan name (mahfuzbandar), from the port, named after maufooz khan. Also called (gulshanábád), meaning happy rose garden.——(1) Talook; Ganjam district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. Area 461 square miles. Population 194,367. Language Teloogoo. S. coast of district. Bounded north by Parlakimedy and Tekkaly estates, east by Bay of Bengal and south, and west by Vizagapatam district. Consists of the Havelly [q.v.] or Home lands of the old Chicacole circar. Formerly part of the territory of the Gajapaty rajahs of Orissa, but shortly after their overthrow in 1568, came together with the rest of the Circars [q.v.] under the Cootb shahy rule, and their governors resided in the town. Hindoo influence finally succumbed in 1724 only when Asaf jah, Viceroy of the Deccan [q.v.] and first Nizam ool moolk, took actual possession, collected the revenue, and appointed a civil and military establishment. With the rest of the Northern circars [q.v.] it was assigned by the Nizam to the French in 1753. Ceded with the rest of the Northern circars by the Nizam to the British in 1759. Actual possession was taken in 1766. Under Mahomedan rule, divided into the three divisions of Cassimcote, Chicacole and Ichapore. The first two, on British occupation became parts of Vizagapatam district, the demesne lands or Chicacole havelly being leased to the Rajah of Vizianagram till 1787, when they came under direct administration. In 1802 transferred to Ganjam. The country rises gradually from the sea towards the northern boundary. There are a few hills and Vamshadhaura flows through it. The talook is not very fertile. Soil, regar [q.v.], sand, and black clay. Weaving, lacquered ware are the industries. Exports, rice [q.v.], gingelly [q.v.] and pulses [dholl]. Irrigation works are the Wadauda and Doosy channels of the Langoolya and the Bheiry, Nayira, Poorshottapore, Nagaricatacam, Joolmoor, Polauky, Malagaum, Loocoolaum and Garibools channels of the Vamshadhaura. Camping grounds, Chicacole, Cotabommauly and Narsannapett. Places of archæological interest:—Arsavully, Balaga, Bheiry, Booravully, Calingapatam, Chicacole, Corlaum, Cullepully, Dirghausy, Gaura, Goozerauttipett, Ippily, Joolmoor, Oorgam, Peddapaud, Polauky, Poorshottapore, Raugole, Ronanky, Santabommauly, Shreecoormam, Silagaum, Singoopooram, Vamarvully. CHICK (چق - chik, Hind.). From Turkish. Screen-blind made of finely-split bamboo [q.v.], loosely fastened together in parallel lines by perpendicular strings, and often painted. It is hung or framed in doorways or windows, both in houses and in tents [tatty]. Also on the West coast short for chickeen, a sum of four rupees; the Venetian zecchino, cecchino, or sequin [chequin]. See vol. I, 609.

CHICKEN MUTTY (چکنی مٹی - chiknímattí, Hind.). From (chikná, hind. unctuous + mattí, hind. earth). Potter's clay [calimunn].

CHICKLEDAR (صیقل گر - saikalgar, Hind.; చికిలిదారుడు - chikilidárudu, Tel.). From (saikal, ar. polish + agent suffix). Polisher of arms [inam], armourer.

CHICKRAINY (చికిరేణి - chíkiréni, Tel.). Same as Dark sirissa.

CHICKRASSY (چکرسی - chukrásí, Hind.; چٹگام - chatgám, Dec.; ದುಲ್ಮರ - dulmara, Can.; చిట్టిగాంగుచెట్టు - chittigángu-chettu, Tel.; അകില്‍ - akil, Mal.; හුලන්හික්ගස් - hulanhikgas, Singh.; மதகரிவேம்பு - mathagarivémbu, Tam.). Tel. means chittagong wood tree. Tam. from (mathagiri, tam. place, so called + vémbu, tam. neem tree, melia azadirachta, linn.) [javanese cedar]. Tel. also (máganimánu), meaning mahogany tree. Tam. also (agil) [eagle-wood, tiger's milk]. Title otherwise Bastard cedar [large neem, soymida], Jamaica cedar, Chittagong wood [toon], Indian mahogany. Botanically Chickrassia tabularis, ad. juss., meliaceæ [vricsham, 36]. Chickrassia from hindostany. Alias Chickrassia nimmonii, velutina; Swietenia chickrassia. Tree of large size, often 8–10 feet in girth with a thick straight trunk 60 or 80 feet to first bough, rust colored deeply cracked bark; calyx short, five-toothed; petals five-erect; leaves abruptly pinnated; leaflets five to eight pair, nearly opposite, obliquely ovate-oblong, unequal-sided, obtusely acuminated, quite entire, more or less conspicuous, hairy in the axils of the nerves beneath; panicles terminal, erect; capsule ovoid, three-celled, three-valved, dehiscent, septifragal; stamen-tube sub-cylindrical, rather shorter than the petals, striated, with ten short antheriferous teeth; seeds numerous, expanding downwards into a wing, and imbricated in a double series across the cells; flowers large, greenish white; found sparingly in most hill forests. Bark powerfully astringent, though not bitter. Flower yields red and yellow dyes [shauyam]; stem gives a transparent, amber-colored gum [gond]. Wood light color, well veined and close in the grain, much used for furniture; cedar-like smell; one of the woods known to europeans as bastard cedar; also one of the chittagong woods; its timber used in the interior of the palace of one of the candyan kings is known to have lasted many hundreds of years; much esteemed by cabinet-makers; as furniture it is light, cheap, and durable; but warps to the hot land-wind [q.v.]. No other common species here.

See sep. title.——(2) Town, Municipality, Talook head-quarters, S.I. railway station; pop. 18,640; acres 1,105; lat. 11° 24′; long. 79° 44′; height 16 feet; from Cuddalore S.S.W. 21 miles; from Madras S.S.W. 120 miles; from Tindivanam S. 57 miles; from Tranquebar N.N.W. 26 miles; from Tricalore S.E. 51 miles; from Vriddhauchellam E.S.E. 26 miles; from the sea W. 8 miles. In an alluvial plain on the route from Tranquebar to Arcot, half way between the Coleroon and the Vellaur. In 1749 the ill-fated expedition under Captain Cope against Devicottah halted at Chidambaram on its retreat to Fort St. David. In 1750 the armies of Moraury row and Moozuffer jung met here. In 1753 the French took the neighbouring fort of Bhoovangherry and occupied the Chidambaram pagoda on its being evacuated by the English garrison. In the same year the French and Mahratta forces met at Chidambaram before marching to Trichinopoly. In 1759 an attempt to capture the pagoda by the English failed; the garrison however surrendered in 1760. Hyder improved the defences and placed a garrison in the pagoda [q.v.] to maintain his line of communication with Pondicherry. In 1781, Sir Eyre Coote attacked the pagoda but was driven off. This attack was probably made on the west entrance. The Shiva pagoda covers an area of 39 acres in the centre of the town. Known as the Sabhanaicker coil. It contains the Aucausha lingam or air-lingam, also known as the Chidambara rahasyam, one of the five lingams [q.v.] of the elements found in Southern india. It was probably built by a Chola mundalam ruler. There are five halls known as Canacasabhay, Chit sabhay, Deva sabhay, Nritya sabhay and Rajah sabhay. There are also a Vishnoo coil and a Pillaiyaur coil, the latter containing an idol of Ganesh, the largest in India. In the centre is the shrine of Parvaty, a beautiful building containing a golden canopy with superb fringes of bullion. The mantapam [q.v.] has more than 1,100 carved pillars, each a solid block. The lights from the gopooram [q.v.], 122 feet high, can be seen at sea 10 miles distant. The greater part of the temple is of granite [caroom cull], and the whole of the stone must have been carried 40 miles and across the Vellaur river. The stone-work was mutilated by Hyder ally. The tank is called Shiva gungay or Hemapooshcarny. There is a black granular deposit at the bottom, the composition of which is curious. It does not adhere to the hand like mud. This is said to be owing to the quantity of oil, honey [shahad] and ghee [q.v.] which flowing into the tank from the temple daily when the idol is washed and anointed has in the course of years been carried to the bottom and affected the deposit. After two or three days' exposure to the sun thin deposit cakes into a stiff clay. The pagoda is the property of the class of Deecshita bramins. The Hindoos of Ceylon and the Nautcottay merchants of Madura contribute largely to its support. A French author mentions the existence of a remarkable stone chain in the pagoda, each link of which was 3 feet long, and its entire length 548 feet. No trace of this remains. The Ardrah darshanam [pundigay, 5e], held in December or January, lasts for ten days and is attended by from 60,000 to 70,000 persons. Weaving of silk and cotton cloths is carried on. A remarkable feature in the town is the large number of chuttrams; there are sixty-nine in all. The Caushimutt, the largest, is capable of holding eight hundred or nine hundred persons. There is a Tamul proverb :—சிதம்பரத்திலே பிறந்த பிள்ளைக்குத் திருவெம்பாவை கற்றுக் கொடுக்கவேண்டுமோ ?—"Is it necessary to teach holy "verses to a child born and brought up at Chidambaram?" And another—பொன்னம்பலத்துக்கும் புவனகிரிப் பட்டணத்துக்கும் என்றைக்கும் உண்டான இழவு—"The "golden hall of Chidambaram and the town Bhoovangherry are "always in trouble, having been so often attacked."

CHIKAN (چکن - chikan, Hind.). Net-work.——Chikan dozee (چکن‌دوزی - chikandozí, Hind.). From (above + dozí, pers. sewing); forming meshes by sewing. Cotton embroidery on muslin [q.v.]. Includes figured or flowered work; also net work formed by breaking down the texture of the cloth with the needle, and converting it into open meshes.

CHIKAT POOLDY (சிகத்துப்புழுதி - shigattuppuzhuthi, Tam.). From (sheykál, tam. field + puzhuthi, tam. fine mould). Wet lands which have been ploughed but not sown.

CHIKKA (ಚಿಕ್ಕ - chikka, Can.). Small. Common name of Mysore rajahs, as Chikka deva, Chikka rajah. Prefix in place names, as Chikmagalore, meaning small + daughter + village.

CHIKSAH (چکسا - chiksá, Hind.). A perfumed powder made up of a great variety of ingredients the principal being sandal [q.v.], zedoary [q.v.], benzoin [q.v.], camphor [q.v.], &c., used by Mahomedan females.

CHIKTY (چکٹی - chiktí, Hind.; அடையொட்டி - ádaiyotti, Tam.). Hind. from (chikat, hind. gummy). Tam. from (ádai, tam. dress + ottu, tam. to stick), from sticky fruit. Title otherwise Paroquet burr, West indian burweed. Botanically Triumfetta annua, linn., tiliaceæ [vricsham, 27]. Annual; leaves ovate, toothed, smooth above, somewhat hairy on the nerves beneath; peduncles axillary, three-flowered; flowers small, yellow. Fruit size of large pea [calanyam]. Other common species are :—Neglecta, flowers yellow. Pilosa, flowers yellow; fruit small, size of cherry. Rhomboidea, flowers yellow ; fruit about size of a vetch seed ; eaten as pot-herb in times of scarcity ; coarse, strong bark. Rotundifolia, flowers small, yellow.

CHILBINJ (چل بینج - chilbínj, Dec.). Same as Clearing-nut.

CHILKA* (చిలక - chilaka, Tel.). Means a parrot. Lake, Canal; Ganjam dist.; Biridy, Paulore and Cullicote zemindarries; lat. 19° 28′ to 19° 56′ N.; long. 85° 08′ to 85° 38′ E.—"a" The lake is an extensive marine lagoon [canyal] on the north-western side of the Bay of Bengal, forming the northern boundary of the Northern circars and dividing Ganjam from Pooree district in Bengal. Bounded east and south by a low sandy ridge in places little more than 200 yards wide, which separates it from the Bay of Bengal; and north-west by the mountains which extend from the Mahanuddy to the Godavery. Northward it loses itself in endless shallows, sedgy banks, and islands just above the surface, formed from the silt which the rivers bring down. It communicates with the sea by a single narrow mouth, cut through the sandy ridge, in lat. 19° 42′; long. 85° 40′. It is pear shaped; 44 miles in length from north-east to south-west; the northern half has a mean breadth of about 20 miles, while the southern half tapers into an irregularly curved point, barely averaging 5 miles wide. Area, 344 square miles in the dry weather, increasing to about 450 during the rainy season. Average depth, from 3 to 5 feet, scarcely anywhere exceeding 6 feet. The bed is a very few feet below the high-water level of the sea, although in some parts it is slightly below low-water mark. The distant inner portion of the lake keeps about 2 feet higher than the exterior ocean at all stages of the tide. It receives a branch of the Mahanuddy. The narrow tidal stream, which rushes through the neck connecting the lake with the sea, suffices to keep the water distinctly salt during the dry months from December to June. But as soon as the rains have set in, and the rivers come pouring down upon its northern extremity, the sea-water is gradually driven out, and the Chilka passes through various stages of brackishness until it becomes a fresh-water lake. The Chilka is the result of a breach of the sea over a flat sandy shore, whose elevation is above the level of the country within. Poolicat lake is of similar formation. Old documents show that a century ago the neck of land was only from half a mile to a mile broad in places where it is now two miles. On the other hand, the opening in the bar, which was a mile wide in 1780 and had to be crossed in large boats, was described forty years later as choked up. Shortly before 1825, an artificial mouth had to be cut; and although this also rapidly began to silt up, it remained as late as 1837 more than three times its present breadth. The villagers allege that it still grows narrower year by year; and the difficulty in maintaining an outlet forms one of the chief obstacles to utilizing the lake as an escapement for the floods that desolate the delta. The scenery is varied, and in parts picturesque. In the south and west it is dotted with a number of small rocky islands. Proceeding northwards, the lake expands into a majestic sheet of water. Half-way across is Nalbanah, or the reed forest, an island about 5 miles in circumference, scarcely anywhere rising more than a few inches above water level. It is altogether uninhabited, but is regularly visited by thatchers from the mainland, who cut the reeds and high grasses with which it is completely covered. On the eastern side lie the islands of Parikad, with new silt formations behind, and now partially joined to the narrow ridge of land which separates the Chilka from the sea. At some places they emerge almost imperceptibly from the water; at others they spread out into well-raised rice-fields. Their northern extremity slopes gracefully down to the lake like an English park, dotted with fine trees, and backed by masses of foliage. Water-fowl of all kinds are abundant. Salt-making is largely carried on in Parikaud. Beyond the northern end of Parikaud, the lake gradually shallows until it becomes solid ground. At this point the Pooree rivers empty themselves into the lake, and silting is going on steadily. The northern shores of the Chilka comprise the pergunnahs of Sirye and Chowbiskud, and these tracts have to bear the greatest suffering in times of general inundation in Pooree. Until Ganjam was deserted on account of its unhealthiness, the Chilka lake was during the hot months a frequent resort of Europeans from this Presidency. At the southern extremity of the lake stands the village of Rambha, having an extensive trade in grain with Orissa, for which it gives salt in exchange.—"b" The Chilka canal, connecting the southern extremity of the lake with the Rooshcoolya river, is 7 miles in length, and navigable throughout the year. Large quantities of grain and salt are carried along it. The present canal terminates at Ganjam.

CHILLA (چله - chhillah, Hind.). From (chehl, pers. forty). Any period of forty days; as a forty days' fast, forty days after child-birth, &c.; called mundalam by hindoos.

CHILLAM (चिल्ल - chilla, San.). From (chill, san. to sport). Milvinæ, falconidæ [bheroondam], raptores, aves [pacshy, 2], of naturalists [jantoo]. Kites. Bill short and weak, waved nostrils at base; wings long and pointed; tarsi short and strong; toes broad and well-padded beneath. Hind. also (dhobíchíl), meaning washerman's kite; (chúhámár), meaning rat-killer. Tel. also (garudálváru), meaning braminy kite + ruler [garoodan]; (shemberrid), from (shembarundu, tam.), meaning red kite; (pisgenda), from ghond. Title otherwise Maroon-backed kite, Rufous kite. Haliastur indus, alias Haliaetus ponticerianus; Milvus ponticerianus, rotundicaudus. Adult, head, neck and body below, as far as the middle of the abdomen, white, rest of the plumage rich chestnut rufous. Length 21 inches. Young bird pale brown, feathers of head, neck, and lower parts lighter streaked, upper feathers spotted, with fulvous or whitish wings, reach somewhat beyond the end of the tail. Abundant on sea coasts, and in the vicinity of wet cultivation; rare in dry plains. Usual food is carrion. Much on the wing. Usually selects a palm tree to build in. Has a peculiar squeal; but is not so noisy a bird as the pariah-kite [q.v.]. Natives regard it as the vauhan [q.v.] of Vishnoo. At the cry of Hary! Hary! the birds assemble, and animal food is tossed to them. The birds are expert fishers. There is a Tamul proverb:—வெண்டலைக் கருடன் வந்திடமாறுல் எவர் கைப்பொருளும் தன் பொருள் ஆகும்—"When a Braminy kite crosses one from "right to left he may become possessed of the wealth of all." Friar Jordanus, the Quilon Bishop of the fourteenth century, has the following:—"There is also in this India a certain bird, big "like a kite, having a white head and belly, but all red above, "which boldly snatches fish out of the hands of fishermen and "other people, and indeed these birds go on just like dogs."——Honey kite (माधव - mádhava, San.; شهديلا - shahdílá, Hind.; ಜೇನುಅಲವೆ - jénualave, Can.; తేనెగద్ద - ténegadda, Tel.; தேன்பருந்து - ténbarundu, Tam.). Title from feeding on honey. San. from (madhu, san. honey). Hind. from (shahad, hind. honey). Can. from (jénu, can. honey). Tel. from (téne, tel. honey + gadda, tel. kite). Tam. from (tén, tam. honey + parundu, tam. kite). Tel. also (jutalu), of yerkalas. Title otherwise Crested honey buzzard. Pernis cristata, alias Pernis bharatensis, elliotti, maculosa. Found in forest. Feeding by preference on honey [shahad], and the young of bees [tainee] and wasps. Thickly feathered in defence against the stings.——Pariah kite (घार - ghára, Mahr.; حداة - hidát, Ar.; غليواز - ghilíwáz, Pers.; چیل - chíl, Hind. and Dec.; ಹದ್ದು - haddu, Can.; మాలగద్ద - málagadda, Tel.; பறைப்பருந்து - paraipparundu, Tam.). Title from color. Mahr. from (gridhra, san. kite). Pers. from (ghiliu, pers. to fly high). Hind. from the cry. Tel. from (mála, tel. the caste + gadda, tel. kite). Tam. from (parai, tam. the caste + parundu, tam. kite). Ar. also (abulkhattáf), meaning father of swallows; (abussalti), meaning father of sharpness in seizing. Pers. also (zaghan). Tam. also (karumbarundu), meaning dark kite. Milvus govinda, alias Haliaetus lineatus; Milvus ater, cheele, indicus. Adult, head and neck pale brown, or rufous or reddish, upper plumage brown; male 23 to 24 inches. Young bird brown, numerously spotted with whitish, or streaked on the head, neck, and lower parts, and the other feathers edged and tipped pale. Closely related to Milvus ater of Europe. Very common. Pick up garbage of all kinds. Vast numbers in large towns. Collect in numbers without any apparent object, especially towards evening. May often be seen seated on the entablatures of buildings, with their breast to the wall, and wings spread out, as represented in Egyptian monuments. Cry is a prolonged tremulous squeal.

Title otherwise Curry pepper, Europe pepper, Guinea pepper, Large foreign pepper, Large-podded capsicum, Laul mirch, Pod-pepper, Red-pepper, Spanish pepper. Botanically Capsicum [chilly] annuum, linn., solanaceæ [vricsham, 94]. Alias Capsicum angulosum, cordiforme, longum, milleri, olivæforme, sphæricum, tetragonum. Annual of dark green color, introduced from south america. 1–2 feet, stem herbaceous; calyx five-toothed; corolla five-cleft; leaves solitary, scattered, entire; peduncles extra-axillary, one-flowered; fruit oblong, pendulous or erect, red, yellow, or variegated; flowers white. The pods are taper, scarlet or yellow-colored, and filled with a pulp which contains many small, flat, kidney-shaped seeds. The acridity of pod depends on an alkaloid capsicine; it differs from the other kinds of pepper [q.v.] in being pungent without being aromatic; the ash should not exceed six per cent., and the pepper should give up twenty-five per cent. of its weight to alcohol and 9 or 10 to ether. Cultivated in black loam dry or wet, chiefly in cold season; ground prepared in south in audy [mausam] or july, on coromandel in shrauvanam or august and bhaudrapadam or september, ploughing four or five times; seed of a year old sown in south in arpisy or october; on coromandel in shrauvanam or august and bhandrapadam or september; seeds sown in nursery in both cases; while under growth weeds are cleared and water given every four or five days; full grown crop shows chillies red, flowers white, leaves green, 2 feet high; chillies gathered when ripe three months after transplantation by the hand; chillies then dried on mats in sun and stored; produce brought to market in one month; dried chilly is sold in south by weight at the rate of about 1¼ rupee per toolaum [q.v.] of 14⅞ lbs.; on coromandel 1 viss [q.v.] per three or four annas. Dried ripe fruit is in medicine substituted for british peppermint oil and the mustard flour imported from europe; gives to pharm. capsicum fruit the ripe fruit dried, capsici fructus, activity residing in a resinous principle, capsicine; acrid stimulant, locally applied, rubefacient; preparation tinctura capsici; officinal. In veterinary practice, take a handful of cayenne pepper, make into paste with an ounce of black pepper, and apply to mange parts, wash after four hours and repeat after a week. Chillies are a principal ingredient in all curries, promoting digestion; by pouring hot vinegar upon pods, chilly vinegar is prepared. There are numerous varieties. There is a Tamul proverb:—ஆனைக்குத் தறடும் அன்னத்துக்கு மிளகாயும் வேண்டும்—"An elephant requires a goad, and "boiled rice a chilly."——Nepaul chilly (नैपालमरीच - naipála-marícha, San.). Botanically Capsicum [chilly] nepalense, owen, solanaceæ [vricsham, 94].——Shrubby chilly (बृहन्मरीच - brihan-marícha, San.; मिरची - mirachí, Mahr.; فلفل احمر - filfiliahmar, Ar.; پلپل سرخ - pilpilisurkh, Pers.; مرچ - mirch, Hind.; مرچی - mirchí, Dec.; چبئی سابرنگ - chabaisábrang, Malay; ಮೆಣಸು - menasu, Can.; మిరప - mirapa, Tel.; മുളക - mulaku, Mal.; ගසමිරිස් - gasamiris, Singh.; மிளகாய் - milagáy, Tam.). San. from (brihat, san. large + marícha, san. pepper). Mahr. from (maricha, san. pepper). Ar. from (filfil, ar. chilly + ahmar, ar. red). Pers. from (pilpil, pers. chilly + surkh, pers. red). Hind. from sanscrit. Tel. from (miriyamu, tel. pepper). Mal. from tamul. Singh. from (gasa, singh. tree + miris, singh. chilly). Tam. from (milagu, tam. pepper, piper nigrum, linn. + káy, tam. pod). Title otherwise Goat pepper, Golcondah chilly, Spur pepper. Botanically Capsicum [chilly] frutescens, linn., solanaceæ [vricsham, 94]. A common large species; qualities the same as annuum. Two varieties, red and yellow.

CHILWAH (چلوا - chilwá, Hind.). From sanscrit. Otherwise White carp. The genus Chela, cyprininæ, cyprinidæ, physostomi, teleostei, pisces [matsyam, 39], of naturalists [jantoo]. Bright silvery fishes, long in the body, with small heads and upturned mouths, the dorsal fin being placed very far back. They keep mostly at the surface of the water, feeding on insects. Good eating. The species best known to the natives are:—argentea, bacaila, clupeoides, gora, phulo, untrahi.

Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. Area 436 square miles Population 137,291. Languages Tamul, Teloogoo. S. centre of the district. Bounded south and south-east by the Palaur; east by the Bay of Bengal; north by Sydapett talook; and west by Conjeeveram talook. The East coast canal [q.v.] runs for about 26 miles along the eastern border and the South indian railway traverses the western side for about 21 miles. The country is rocky and poor, being covered with low hills and extensive scrub jungles. The soil is mostly red ferruginous loam in the interior and sandy towards the west. The talook produces no manufactures of any consequence. The only river irrigation is from the Palaur, either by spring channels bringing the water directly to the fields, or flood channels which fill tanks when the river is in fresh. The bulk of the irrigation is precarious, being derived from rain-fed tanks with small catchment basins. Camping grounds, Chingleput and Goodoovancherry. Petty zemindarries:—Aminjicaray, Ammanampaukam, Arambaukam, Attavuttam, Basavasamoodram, Bommarajapooram, Carmaurapaukam, Condacauricooppam, Coodiperambaukam, Coonnatore, Coonnavaukam, Iroombilicherry, Itchancauranay, Mercaundayoottangooly, Nadoovacaray, Narasancooppam, Neroombore, Panancautcherry, Pandore, Paukkam, Periyacauttpaukam, Peroombaid, Poondandalam, Shooracooppam, Shooraudimungalam, Tepanamputt, Vayalore, Vengapaukam, Vittalaupooram. Between village and Shingapermaulcoil railway station are sepulchral stone circles [azhauram].——(3) Town, Divisional, Talook, and Judge's head-quarters, Railway station; pop. 3,466; acres 233; lat. 12° 42′; long. 80° 01′; height 128 feet; from Arcot E. 45 miles; from Bangalore E. 162 miles; from Conjeeveram E.S.E. 23 miles; from Cuddalore N. 65 miles; from Madras S.W. 34 miles; from St. Thomas' mount S. 26 miles; from Sydapett S.W. 28 miles; from Tanjore N. 145 miles; from the sea W. 17 miles. At the junction of the Chingleput-arconum branch with the main line of the S.I. railway. The climate, except during hot winds, is cool, and place healthy. Surrounded by hills, 500 feet in height, and these with the large tank and several lesser sheets of water lend to the scenery, especially after rains, an appearance of picturesque beauty seldom met with on the plains. The large tank is two miles long by one broad, and is formed by bunding up surplus water of country ten miles to northward. The supply is far in excess of what is required for irrigation, and it is consequently full during hot weather. The clay of town is best in district for bricks [shengal] and there are many kilns [shoolay]. The town consists of the villages of Chingleput, Goondore and Nuttam, all reckoned separate for revenue. The fort was erected at the end of sixteenth century, when Vijianugger rajahs held their court alternately here and at Chundragherry. About 1644 it passed into hands of Golcondah chiefs, by whom it was surrendered to Nawaubs of Arcot. By latter it was surrendered in 1751 to Chundah sahib. In 1752 Clive bombarded it and compelled French garrison to surrender. After reduction of Fort St. David, Madras government, apprehensive of an attack on Madras, called in all the garrisons and stores from outlying forts; and Chingleput was abandoned in 1758. On advance of French from south it was again garrisoned. Lally finding it impregnable left it in his rear and passed on to Madras. During siege that followed the garrison of Chingleput rendered invaluable assistance by securing country north of Palaur, and by harassing rear of investing enemy. In 1780 British force, after destruction of General Baillie's column, found refuge here, and during the wars with Mysore this fortress was once taken by the enemy, re-occupied by the British, and twice unsuccessfully besieged. The fort is of Hindoo origin. Roman catholic and Free church missions here. A detachment, consisting generally of two companies of native infantry, were formerly stationed. A cave a mile east has been made into a Lingam [q.v.] temple. Formerly a Booddhist hermit's cell. Three miles from the town, close to the southern trunk road, are cairns. Between the town and the Palaur causeway are sepulchral circles [azhauram]; also near the suburb of Nuttam. On Trichinopoly road is a large mound surrounded by megalithic graves [raucshasagoondloo]. CHINNA (చిన్న - chinna, Tel.; சின்ன - shinna, Tam.). Small. Common prefix in place names. Chinnamma is a name of the village goddess. Chinnasawmy, from (svámí, san. master), hindoo 2nd or pers. name; and so many others, as chinnadoray, chinnayyan [peyar], &c. Chinnaye is term of endearment to children of either sex [peyar]. Plant first term often joining two genera as in:—Aloe littoralis (chinnarákásbimatta), small agave americana; walsura ternatea (chinavalasa), small guizotia abyssinica. See gloss. paragraphs.——Chinna cash (சின்னக் காசு - shinnakkásu, Tam.). Small cash. Money. 5 chinna cash = 1 cash or pie [naunyam, 2 a]. Same as cash in Teloogoo districts.——Chinna hagary (చిన్నహగరి - chinnahagari, Tel.). From (above + hagari, tel. river so called). Can. also (janagahalla), meaning janaga, proper name + river. River; Bellary dist., Royadroog tal.; rises in Mysore in lat. 14° 15′; long. 76° 22′; about 4 miles south-west of Chitaldroog. Flows north-easterly through Mysore and Bellary, and falls into the Hagary in lat. 14° 56′; long. 77° 05′.——Chinna kimedy (చిన్నకిమిడి - chinnakimedi, Tel. chinnakimedi*). From (above + kimedi, tel. the place). Sanscrit name (pratápagiri), meaning king so called + hill. Ancient zemindarry, Village; Ganjam dist., Zemindarry tracts; pop. 35,954; square miles 2,130; lat. of village 19° 29′; long. 84° 37′; from Chetterpore W.N.W. 29 miles; from Russellcondah S. 31 miles. Formerly a part of the adjacent zemindarry of Peddakimedy, and along with that estate originally belonged to Parlakimedy. In 1607 the Parlakimedy rajah gave his younger son, Ananga bheema deo kesary, that portion of his estate called Ananga bheema deo kimedy, subsequently sub-divided into Vijianugger or Pedda kimedy and Prataupagherry or Chinna kimedy. In 1768, the united estate was in the hands of Bheema deo, the most turbulent zemindar in the district. At his death in 1776, one of his sons, Mony deo, kept Vijianugger or Pedda kimedy, and the other, Juggannauta deo, succeeded to Pratanpagherry or Chinna kimedy. Owing to feuds and disturbances between the two families, the Privy council decided in 1876 that the estate was to be made over to the adopted son of the late zemindar's widow, herself a sister of the neighbouring zemindar of Pedda kimedy. Peshcush Rs. 20,826. Annual income Rs. 63,621. Sub-divided into the five Mittahs of Goodaury, Khaury, Prataupagherry, Siddheshwaram, and Votyausy. Number of villages, 159. There are besides nineteen agrahaurams [q.v.]. The Godahaddoh flows through the zemindarry, and joins the Rooshcoolya near Injily. The zemindar's fort is situated at Poodamary, and there the zemindars used to live. The extensive Chinna kimedy maliahs, 11,975 square miles, which were formerly attached to this zemindarry, have been resumed by Government.——Chinnam (చిన్నము - chinnamu, Tel.). Goldsmith's weight. 4 gooriginjas = 1 chinnam, 9 chinnams = 1 pagoda weight [niray, 3b]. Approximate actual value, 1 chinnam = 6 grains. Same as Can. hana, Tam. and Mal. pana tookkam. Compare Tel. chowlam.——Chinnapanam (சின்னப்பணம் - shinnappanam, Tam.). Small fanam. Money. 3¾ doodies = 1 chinnapanam; 2 chinnapanams = 1 panam [naunyam, 2a]. CHINTAUMANY (चिन्तामणि - chintámani, San.). From (chintá, san. thought + mani, san. jewel). The gem which gives all desires. Common pers. or second name among Jeina bramins [peyar]. Title of treatises as Ganita chintaumany, astrological; Tarca chintaumany, logical; Vivaica chintaumany, religious; &c.——(1) The great Tamul Jeina poem is Jeevaca chintaumany, Jeevacan being the hero. One of the five Tamul classics. Otherwise Jinamata nool, meaning jeina + doctrine + treatise. The design of this work is to represent the Jeina system in an attractive form. It is founded on a similar story in Maha pooraunam, a Sanscrit Jeina work. Author's name Tirtevar, lived in Mylapore some eight hundred years ago. The following stanzas may be taken as a specimen of the style:—இலங்கலாழியிஞன்களிற்றீட்டம்போற் கலங்குதெண் டிரைமேய்ந்துகணமழை பொலங்கொள்கொன்றையி ஞன் சடைபோன்மின்னி விலங்கல்சேர்ந்து விண்ணேறி விட்டார்த்தவே—"Like a herd of elephants belonging to some "resplendent emperor, the gregarious clouds, having grazed on "the clear waves of the troublous ocean, darting lightnings, "resembling the beautiful golden flowers of the Condray [q.v.] "on the dark hair of Shiva, having reached the mountains and "climbed the sky, wide opening bellowed aloud."—அஞ்சன கோலிஞற்று நாகமோராருவி குன்றிற் குஞ்சர மலறி வீழக் கூர்நுதியெயிற்றிற்கொல்லும் பஞ்சியின் மெல விதேனும் பகைசிறிதென்னவேண்டா மஞ்சித்தற் காக்கல்வேண்டுமெரும் பொருளாகவொன்றுன்—"A snake "that cannot sustain the blow of a bodkin, with its sharp pointed "tooth will kill an elephant like a mountain with a waterfall, "and cause it to fall roaring to the ground; think not a foe "small, though more unsubstantial than cotton, but fear and "guard yourselves against him. Such was his hard doctrine." The Chintaumany contains 3,145 stanzas or verses, and is divided into thirteen sections, called Ilambacam, as follows.—"a" Naumagal ilambam (நாமகளிலம்பம் - námagalilambam, Tam.). From (námagal, tam. sarasvatí, the tongue daughter + lamba, san. section). First book 408 verses, begins with invocations to deity, to Aroogan [q.v.], to virtue, and to the assembly of the wise; aim and analysis of whole work. Then book commences. Five parts:—Description of country Hemaungadam. Description of city Rajamaupooram. Description of king's palace. History of Satchandan the king and Vijayay his queen, father and mother of Jeevacan. The king leading a sensual life, neglected his kingdom; a plot formed by his minister, who assassinated him and usurped the throne. Jeevacan's birth in burning-ground of a wild forest, his rescue by a rich merchant, who educated him, &c. His mother had fled from country and was leading life of a devotee.—"b" Govindaiyaur ilambam (கோவிந்தியாரிலம்பம் - kóvindiyárilambam, Tam.). From (góvindá, san. cow finder, female proper name). Second book, 84 verses, early exploits of Jeevacan. Pashooauvalan gave his daughter Govindaiyaur to Jeevacan.—"c" Gaundharva tattaiyaur ilambam (காந்தருவத்தத்தை யாரிலம்பம் - kándaruvattattaiyárilambam, Tam.). From (gandharva, san. celestial singer + tattai, tam. parrot). Third book, 358 verses, story of Tattaiyaur, female player on veenay [q.v.]. Jeevacan entered lists with other competitors, excelled in his performance, and married her.—"d" Goonamaulaiyaur ilambam (குணமாலையாரிலம்பம் - kunamálaiyárilambam, Tam.). From (guna, san. merit + málá, san. garland). Fourth book, 315 verses, story of two young women Goonamaulay and Sooramunjary, who contended for superiority with regard to scented powders which they possessed. Jeevacan decided in favor of Goonamaulay, and she married him. Also account of a man who was metamorphosed into a dog and by Jeevacan was remetamorphosed into a man.—"e" Pudmaiyaur ilambam (பதுமையாரிலம்பம் - pathumaiyárilambam, Tam.). From (padmá, san. lakshmí, the lotus deity). Fifth book, 246 verses, travels of Jeevacan in distant lands, where he met with Pudmay, a daughter of the king of Pullavam. When she was gathering flowers, she was bitten by a snake, but was healed by Jeevacan, who married her.—"f" Cshemacharīyaur ilambam (கேமசரியாரிலம்பம் - shémasariyárilambam, Tam.). From (kshéma, san. the country of prosperity, so called + char, san. to move). Sixth book, 145 verses, visit of Jeevacan to Cshemadesham, where he performed prodigies and married Cshemasoondary, daughter of a king.—"g" Canacamaulaiyaur ilambam (கனகமாலையாரிலம்பம் - kanagamálaiyárilambam, Tam.). From (kanaka, san. gold + málá, san. garland). Seventh book, 332 verses, Jeevacan's journey to Sooshaina desham, where he shot at a mark and gained king's daughter.—"h" Vimalaiyaur ilambam (விமலையாரிலம்பம் - vimalaiyárilambam, Tam.). From (vi, san. suffix of privation + mala, san. stain). Eighth book, 107 verses, journey of Jeevacan to Nunnaud, where he met his mother in Dandacauranyam [q.v.]. He returned to his own city, and connected himself with a merchant, whose daughter, Vimalay, he married.—"i" Sooramunjariyaur ilambam (சுரமஞ்சரியாரிலம்பம் - shuramañjariyárilambam, Tam.). From (sura, san. god + mañjarí, san. flower cluster). Ninth book, 108 verses, Jeevacan's marriage with Sooramunjary, mentioned in Goonamaulaiyaur ilambam.—"j" Manamagal ilambam (மணமகளிலம்பம் - manamagalilambam, Tam.). From (manamagal, tam. the bride, the marriage daughter). Tenth book, 224 verses, Jeevacan shot at a target and married daughter of his maternal uncle, king of Videham. The assassin of Jeevacan's father tried to put him to death. Jeevacan met him, slew him, and ascended the throne of his ancestors.—"k" Poomagal ilambam (பூமகளிலம்பம் - púmagalilambam, Tam.). From (púmagal, tam. lakshmí, the flower daughter). Eleventh book, 251 verses, conquest of Hemaungadam, his father's dominions, from the hands of the usurper.—"l" Ilakkanaiyaur ilambam (இலக்கணையாரிலம்பம் - ilakkanaiyárilambam, Tam.). From (lakshana, san. lucky mark). Twelfth book, 249 verses, nuptials of Jeevacan and Ilakkanay, his maternal uncle's daughter.—"m" Moocty ilambam (முத்தியிலம்பம் - muttiyilambam, Tam.). CHINTZ (चित्रकार्पास - chitrakárpása, San.; छीट - chhíta, Mahr.; چھینٹ - chhínt, Hind.; ಚೀಟಿಗುದ್ದೆ - chítigudde, Can.; చీటిగుడ్డ - chítigudda, Tel.; ചീട്ടി - chítti, Mal.; சீட்டி - shítti, Tam.). Title from hindostany which is from (chitra, san. spotted); plural form has become singular. San. from (chitra, san. variegated + kárpása, san. cotton cloth). Can. from (chíti, can. print + gudde, can. cloth). Tel. from (chitra, san. variegated + gudda, tel. cloth). Mal. and tam. are short forms. Properly cotton stuffs printed in colors with white spots; same as Bandana [q.v.] for silk [puttoo]. Generally however cotton stuffs with patterns of different colors impressed upon a white or light-colored ground. The best known sites of present manufacture are Arnee, Masulipatam, and Sydapett. Those of Masulipatam are of various hues and each piece is two cubits in breadth and twelve in length. These are used for under garments by native women. They have enjoyed a world-wide celebrity ever since the days of Arrian, and probably of the Mahabhaurat. They are prized for the freshness and permanency of their dyes [shauyam], the colors being brighter after washing than before. There is still a great demand for them in Burmah, the Straits, and Persian gulf, but European goods have begun to destroy this immemorial industry of India. Nearly all the Masulipatam chintzes are copied from Persian designs of sprigs of flowers, and of the knop and flower and tree of life pattern. The chintzes of Arnee and Sydapett are eight by two cubits, and are used for pillow covers and other purposes as well as for under garments of native women. At Combaconum spotted chintzes are still printed for the Straits, and are there called Shaurangs [q.v.]. Very bold printing is done at Wallajahpett in North arcot for sale to Mussalmans at Hyderabad and Bangalore. At Madura large quantities of the stained cloths for which it is celebrated are manufactured. They are coarse and printed in only two colors, red and black, with mythological subjects taken from the Ramayanam and Mahabhaurat. They are made chiefly for the service of the temples, and are rare to get, except by favor of the priests. Sometimes they are worked up in yellow by hand-painting [calam caury]. At Poolicat peculiar chintzes have been made till recently. The practical industry of chintz manufacture may be divided into two branches:—the first including handkerchiefs [roomaul] and turbans [puggry], cloths for males and females, or dhoties [q.v.] and sauries [q.v.], bed-covers [palampores], canopies, and prayer cloths, all with the exception of the last being for strictly domestic use; the second including cloths of special manufacture, nearly always hand-painted, used as canopies over the images of Hindoo gods and at marriage or other ceremonies. Masulipatam in the Kistna district, Palcole and Gollapoilem near Cocanada in the Godavery district, Nagore and Combaconam in the Tanjore district, and Paramacoody and Paumben in the Madura district, are the chief places where the former kinds are made; and for the other variety Calastry, Salem, Palcole, and Masulipatam are noted. The fine deep red of chintzes is obtained from the roots of the small plant Oldenlandia umbellata, linn., rubiaceæ, growing wild in sandy soils which are occasionally overflowed by the sea [chayroot]. The blue is from indigo [q.v.]. The yellow is from the leaf galls of Terminalia chebula, retz., combretaceæ [chebulic myrobalan]. Green is obtained by the addition of yellow to the indigo blue. The plain cloth is first soaked in a preparation of milk and gall-nut [manchicoy]. When the cloth is dry the black outline of the pattern, if the pattern has one, is stamped by the block; or in the case of hand-painted cloths drawn with a rude brush or pencil of bamboo [q.v.] which is kept supplied with ink, a preparation of iron [auhan] and alum [padicauram], by pressure of the palm of the hand on a coil of thread soaked in the liquid and twisted round the middle of the instrument. The red color is applied next by block or hand. To bring out the color the cloth must then be boiled repeatedly, the red becoming deeper and deeper. If blue is also required the process is in every case performed by hand without the aid of blocks. The portions of the patterns which are required to remain red are covered with wax applied with an iron instrument divided at the end similarly to a draughtsman's inking pen, the wax melted by a slow fire being held in a bag or pouch formed generally of human hair through which the iron shaft passes. The cloth may then be dipped in the indigo dye as the parts covered by the wax will retain their original color uninjured. In some cases, such as in the sacred cloths of Calastry, the blue is applied with the same brush as the black outline and the waxing process is thus avoided, but the color is not so permanent. The yellow is also applied by the same method. The hand-painting process is precisely similar to the other only that the work is done without the aid of blocks. On account of the tedious process of repeated boilings which the red color needs, two months are required for the preparation of each cloth. For plain cotton, see Punj.

CHIPKALEE (मुसली - musalí, San.; पाल - pála, Mahr.; سام ابرص - sámmiabras, Ar.; چلپاسه - chalpásah, Pers.; چھپکلی - chhipkalí, Hind.; سپلك - siplak, Dec.; چچك - chichak, Malay; ಹಲ್ಲಿ - halli, Can.; బల్లి - balli, Tel.; പല്ലി - palli, Mal.; පල්ලි - palli, Singh.; பல்லி - palli, Tam.). San. from (mus, san. to destroy). Mahr. from (palli, san. lizard). Ar. from (sámm, ar. poisonous + abras, ar. leprosy); from use of electuary in leprous affections. Hind. from (chip, hind. the noise + palli, san. lizard). Dec. from hindostany. Malay from the noise. Tel. also (gauli). Title otherwise Gecko, House lizard, Wall lizard. Gecko is from the cry. The terms are co-extensive with family Geckotidæ, sauria [godhicay], reptilia [sarpy, 9], of naturalists [jantoo]. The chipkalee has a head broad and depressed with large eyes; body of moderate breadth; tail thick at the base, tapering, generally somewhat deformed, easily breaks off and easily renewed; limbs stout, of moderate length, with at least four toes well developed. Frequenting houses, rocks, and trees; generally able to run up and along the surface of a wall or of any other perpendicular object; carnivorous, destroying insects [poochy], moths [patingah], and even the younger and weaker members of their own species; have even been seen devouring their own tail; of fierce habits, fighting between themselves. The chirp of the chipkalee is never disregarded since it may bear a message of great consequence to the family or individual. A small book called the shastram of the lizard contains information regarding its chirping. On hearing it the facts to be observed are the point of the compass [ashta dic], the hour of the day [caulam, dinam], &c. These being known, recourse is made to formula, and it is ascertained whether the omen is auspicious or not. There is a Tamul proverb:—ஊருக்கெல்லாம் சாஸ்திரம் சொல்லுகிறபல்லி கூழ்ப்பானையில் விழுந்தாற் போல— "As if a lizard, the oracle of the whole village, should fall into "a pot of gruel;" spoken of a person injuring his own reputation. The following is a Hindostany proverb:—جتنا سانپ لنبا اتنی هی گوه چوڑی—"The lizard is as wide as the snake is "long;" that is to say, "six of one and half a dozen of the "other." Bruised body made into electuary, in conjunction with aromatics; used by veidyans in leprous affections [cooshtam]; hence arabic name. The following are the representative species in Southern india:—"a" Eublepharis hardwickii. Ground lizard unable to climb walls. Pale reddish white, two very broad bands across the trunk; three or four rings round the tail, deep brown or black, brown portions being edged with black, broader than the ground color; limbs reddish olive, with black dots on elbows, and knees.—"b" Gecko guttatus. Alias Gecko reevesii; Lacerta annulatus, gecko, guttatus, teres, verus; Platydactylus guttatus. Above ash-colored, with numerous round pale-orange spots; one of the most common.—"c" Gymnodactylus deccanensis. Reddish olive, with narrow white, black-edged cross-bands; first semi-circular, from one eye across the nape to the other eye; trunk with three and tail with five or six bands; similar band across the forearm and across the lower hind leg.—"d" Gymnodactylus indicus. Alias Goniodactylus indicus. Brownish or greenish, irregularly marbled with darker along the vertebral line; conceals itself under stones in daytime.—"e" Gymnodactylus littoralis. Brown, with a series of paler marks along the back and tail; a black spot on the nape; Malabar.—"f" Gymnodactylus malabaricus. Dark brown above, marbled with black spots, and a white spot on the nape; Malabar.—"g" Gymnodactylus mysoriensis. Greyish brown, with light stripe down the centre of back, and series of dark-brown marks on head, back and sides; legs and feet banded; two and a half inches long; the young has the tail flesh-colored.—"h" Hemidactylus leschenaultii. Olive-colored, marbled with grey.—"i" Hemidactylus maculatus. Alias Hemidactylus pieresii; Nubilia argentii. Brownish olive above, irregularly spotted or banded with brown; brown band runs from the first upper labial through the eye to above the ear; common.—"j" Hemidactylus punctatus. Scales of abdomen dotted, brown above; limbs and tail reddish, with dark bands; pale-yellow streak from muzzle to tail, bordered beneath by a dark line; another dark line from nostrils to behind the eye.—"k" Hemidactylus sykesii. Brownish olive above, with cross series of rounded brown spots, sometimes confluent into bands; two brown streaks behind the eye and one before it.—"l" Hemidactylus triedrus. Alias Gecko triedrus. Brownish olive.

CHIPPY (कोमलशरीरी - kómalasharírí, San.; گھونگے - ghunge, Hind.; ಚಿಪ್ಪುಹುಳ - chippuhula, Can.; చిప్పపురుగు - chippa-purugu, Tel.; ചിപ്പി - chippi, Mal.; சிப்பி - shippi, Tam.). Title from (shipi, san. light). San. from (kómala, san. soft + sharíra, san. body). Hind. from (kambuka, san. shell). Can. and tel. mean shell + worm. Mollusc. One of the primary sub-kingdoms of animals [jantoo], comprising cuttle-fish and ordinary univalve and bivalve shells, or Cephalopoda, Gasteropoda, Pteropoda, and Lamellibranchiata. Shell fish are largely used by natives for food when available. On the coast purely marine species are not common or easily procured, but in lagoons [cauyal] bivalves are abundant and often collected as food. The commonest edible shell fish are the Cockle, cordium edule [mutty], the Oyster, ostrea edulis [auly], and the Snail, helix pomatia [nuttay]. Other common molluscs are the Chunk [q.v.], turbinella rapa, and the Pearl oyster [sadaf], meleagrina margaritifera [moty].——Chippautchy (ಚಿಪ್ಪಾಚಿ - chippáchi, Can.). From (akshi, san. eye). Hill-tribe female proper name [peyar].

CHIRA (ചിറ - chira, Mal.). A tank [cherla, cheroo].

CHIRACAL (ചിറക്കൽ - chirakkal, Mal. chirakal *). From (chira, mal. tank + kal, mal. suffix of place); from the palace near the tank.——(1) Talook, Malabar district. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. Area 648 square miles; most northerly coast talook of the district. Bounded north by Cassergode talook of South canara; east by Coorg; south by Cottayam talook; west by the Arabian sea. Formerly comprised the talooks of Cavvye and Chiracal. The terraced character of the laterite [q.v.] formation is conspicuous, more particularly in that portion lying north of the Belliapatam river. These terraces are as a rule unproductive, but where they break off in abrupt cliffs the soil is extensively cultivated with cocoanut [q.v.], jack [q.v.] and pepper [q.v.]. The flats between the laterite terraces are thickly peopled; along the coast, the beach, except at Mount delly and to the south of Cannanore, is low and sandy; the outlying spurs of the ghauts are covered with scrub jungle and the ghauts themselves are in great part also covered with scrub, the heavy forest having disappeared. Laterite is met with in abundance. Coarse cotton cloths are made at places in the interior by rude appliances. At Cannanore is a weaving establishment under the German mission. In the Central jail, Cannanore, carpentry and other works are carried on. Coonyimungalam is noted for its brass [pittalay] works, chiefly lamps. Neither dams nor irrigation canals are to be met with. Sultan's canal, between the river of Payyangaudy and a branch of another which runs north, joins the Cavvye immediately to south of the town of that name. It is three miles in length, cut through low paddy [q.v.] ground. It was executed at the expense of the Beeby of Cannanore with the object of having a safe inland navigation from Neeleshwar in South canara to Caccaud. It is now shallow and impassable at low tide. Places of archæological interest:—Ayicode, Cadalye, Cadambairy, Calarivaudacull, Calliaud, Cannanore, Caunyarangaud, Cavvye, Cayaralam, Cayivellore, Chercoonn, Chertalam, Choolaly, Chova, Coonyimungalam, Coormattore, Coottiyairy, Coottiyauttore, Coottore, Cunnaupooram, Keelara, Madool, Malaputtam, Maniyore, Maudye, Molappilangaud, Mount delly, Oorpilatchicauv, Payyannore, Payyavore, Polaudy, Taliparamba, Trichambaram, Vaudeshwaram, Vellore, Yedacaud, Yelayavore, Yelome, Yeraumala. Five rock caves.——Cannanore (കണ്ണൂർ - kannúr, Mal.). See sep. title.——Caraur sheema (കരാർശീമ - karárshíma, Mal.). Means agreement territory. Mal. also (karárinakkam), meaning agreement + union; name by which known among natives. Tract of land about 2,364 acres in extent in Cannanore town belonging to the Moplah rajah of Cannanore, Ally rajah [audy rajah]; and held by his family under an agreement entered into with the British government. The rajah exercises no sovereign or judicial powers but in respect of this tract is merely an Inamdar. His palace is situated in the old town of Cannanore and is known as the Aracull palace. A lamp is kept burning day and night in one of the rooms in the palace, the belief being that if extinguished the prosperity of the house would be destroyed. The peshcush [q.v.] payable on Caraur sheema and the Laccadive islands is Rs. 15,000 per annum. An abatement of Rs. 5,250, was allowed in 1822 as compensation for the loss of the Amindivy islands attached to South canara district.——Cavvye (കവ്വായി - kavváyi, Mal.). See sep. title.——Chiracal (ചിറക്കൽ - chirakkal, Mal.). See below.——Coonyimungalam (കുഞ്ഞിമംഗലം - kuññimannalam, Mal.). From (kuññi, mal. child + mangala, san. prosperity); from Shaustav temple. Picturesquely situated in a bay just under Mount delly promontory, commanded by the old Mount delly redoubt. Inhabited by Moplah merchants, who supply Cannanore and Tellicherry with firewood.——(2) Village, amshom; Malabar dist., Chiracal tal.; pop. 10,390; lat. 11° 55′; long. 75° 24′; from Calicut N.N.W. 52 miles; from Cannanore N.N.W. 4 miles; from the sea E. 3 miles. Former head-quarters of the talook. The rajah of Chiracal, formerly a powerful chief, belonged to the Colattiry family. The country was in 1789 devastated by Tippoo sultan, and the rajah induced one of his followers to shoot him through the head. It was from one of these rajahs that the British first obtained a permanent footing at Tellicherry. Descendants of this line still live in the neighbourhood.

CHIRAM (चिर - chira, San.). Long.——Chiranjeevy (चिरञ्जीवी - chirañjíví, San.). From (above + jív, san. to live). Endowed with a long life. Seven immortal sages who will be produced in successive manwantarams [q.v.]:—Ashwattauman, Baly, Hanooman, Kripan, Parshooraman, Vibheeshanan, Vyausan. When Hindoos bathe in oil seven drops of oil are scattered on the ground in a row for the seven chiranjeevies and joined together by running the finger over them; after which the oiled finger is applied to the head, this being thought to promote longevity.

CHIRAUG (چراغ - chirágh, Pers.). Lamp [deepam]. Prefixed to alam makes a lacab; as Chiraug ally, lamp of Ally. Mostly taken by Shiahs [ism]. Cf. Becharaug.——Chiraughaun (چراغان - chírághán, Hind.); plural of chiraug. Head-quarters of the former petty principality of the Matly rajahs. The poligar was one of the chief Hindoo lieutenants of the Vijianugger kings west of the ghauts [q.v.]. He was wealthy, his dominions being situated in the rich Cheyair and Pennair valleys, which now form a portion of Poollampett talook. Munro found the poligar encumbered with debt, and the only mode of realizing the revenue was in dispossessing him. The two brothers, the heads of the family, were allowed 10 per cent. of the net revenue, represented by a pension of Rs. 1,723, which has lately ceased.

CHITTAGONG (چاٹگام - chatgám, Hind.). From (chatur, san. four + gráma, san. village). District along North-east of Bay of Bengal. Exports large quantity of rice [q.v.]. Chittagong wood is same as Toon, Chickrassy.

CHITTORE (చిత్తూరు - chittúru, Tel. chittoor*). From (chiru, tel. small + úru, tel. village).—(1) Talook, North arcot district. Population 200,249. Language Teloogoo. Tahsildar's pay Rs. 175. Area 793 square miles. Centre of district. Bounded north by Chundragherry; east by Carvetnugger and part of Wallajah; south by Goodiyattam; and west by Pulmanair and Poonganore. Length from north to south, about 30 miles, and breadth about 25 miles. Includes polliems of Bungaur, Goodipaud, Naraganty and Toomba. The talook a plain, broken by an infinite number of naked rocky hills, which rise abruptly and are difficult of access, being covered with enormous granite [caroom cull] boulders. The plain of the north, out of which these hills rise, is fairly level; but in the south there is a fall of some 500 feet to the level of the Palaur. The trees are small, though large enough for agricultural implements, and afford an ample supply of firewood. Soil is good, being generally a red clay mixed with sand and fertilized by the vegetable matter and rocky detritus carried down from the hills. These are covered with a scanty scrub jungle, affording abundance of leaf manure, and with coarse grasses upon which many cattle graze. The mineral products are iron [auhan], lime [choonam] and building stone, and a soft sort of soap stone called Balapam [q.v.], found near Narsingaroyanipett and formed into cups and kitchen utensils, in Calijaveed, Gungaudharanellore, and Mooccanapully. The iron was once largely utilized and smelted in the villages of Eechinairy, Pootramuddy, Veerishettipully, but the industry has greatly declined. Weaving [nesavoo] is carried on in a few villages. In Græmespett and Santapett, suburbs of Chittore, the fabrics are of a superior quality; but elsewhere only the common cloths are woven. The formation of the country is such as naturally to produce an immense number of jungle streams, which eventually form four principal rivers, called Aragonda, Chittore, Eiraula and Vencatagherry. These generally flow eastwards into the Poyney, which passing southwards forms the boundary between Chittore and Wallajah talooks. All have sandy beds which only contain water during the rainy season, and are at times impassable torrents. The number of dasbandam [q.v.] tanks is very great, and most of them are in bad repair. As the valleys are small no reservoir is of any great size. Places of archæological interest:—Adenapully, Ammavaurpulley, Aragonda, Artala, Baulecooppam, Bommasamoodram, Calavagoonta, Cattamanchy, Cawnipaukam, Chittore, Eiraula, Gerigelapulley, Govindareddipulley, Irvauram, Krishnapooram, Mahadevamungalam, Mahimundalam, Mailpaudy, Mogily, Nargull, Pardaraumy, Paulauntope, Poolicull, Pootalputt, Taulambaid, Vailcore, Vauvilitote, Vencatagherry, Veppancherry, Vullimullay, Yaudamurry. The stalk was the reed of St. Mathew, and its spikelets the hyssop of St. John. Title otherwise Dhourra, Great millet, Guinea corn, Indian millet, Jawaury, Jonna, Soft grass. Botanically Sorghum vulgare, pers., graminaceæ [vricsham, 156]. Alias Andropogon sorghum; Holcus bicolor, dona, durra, rubens, sorghum; Sorghum bicolor, nigrum. An annual, cane-like, corn-grass, 8–10 feet; culms erect; panicles contracted, dense, hermaphrodite; calyxes hairy; corolla three-valved, awned; similar to indian corn [mecca cholum], but not so strong in growth, producing a dense head of spikelets, bearing numerous small corn-grains, thrice the size of mustard seed [rayaun]; the heads of some kinds are so heavy that three or four stems have to be tied together near the top for mutual support; the grains enclosed in, but free from the hard shining outer glumes; very hard; little different from maize [mecca cholum] in chemical composition; contain about 9 per cent. of nitrogenous matter and 70 of starch. Cultivated in black loam; cultivation, dry; ground prepared in south in pungoony [mausam] or march or chittray or april, on coromandel in jyeshtam or june and ashaudham or july, on w. coast in maidom or april and yedavam or may; ploughing the ground several times, folding sheep three or four nights and otherwise manuring; seed sown in south at the end of veiyaushy or may or at the beginning of auny or june, on coromandel in caurteecam or november and margashiram or december, on w. coast in maidom or april and yedavam or may; no nursery; crop is dependent on rain; cut after four or five months; brought to threshing floor [calam] and trodden by cattle; grain is separated from chaff by winnowing fans; brought to market at once if wanted; average price eighteen imperial seers for 1 rupee. In places where the arid soil and scorching influences of the sun are uncongenial to the production of other grain, this millet can be most successfully cultivated; the best season is when the rain is light and not too frequent; a year of heavy rain is invariably a bad cholum season; under suitable irrigation several crops may be secured during the year; red gram and green gram [q.v.] are often sown with it. Forms the principal article of food among agricultural classes on tablelands, as rice [paddy] does of those of the lower country; the meal is made into cakes; or the grains are parched and eaten with salt, or made into a paste and mixed with chillies [q.v.], goor [q.v.], &c.; occupying the same place to many natives that oats do in scotland; when crushed makes also a good auxillary food for cattle [maud], horses [ghorah], swine [soor], poultry, and sheep [aud]; dry stalks and leaves are chopped to form the ordinary cattle fodder of the country for some months of the season; also a forage for horses when gram [q.v.] is not obtainable. An intoxicating drink called pachwye [q.v.], is made from this grain in ganjam. Three varieties, black, white and yellow cholum. There is a Teloogoo proverb:—తెల్లపూలు పండితే, తెల్ల జొన్నలు పండును, బలుసు పండ్లు పండితే పచ్చజొన్నలు పండును—"If fruits "from plants bearing white flowers are plentiful, the white "jonna grows well; if the balsoo or canthium parviflorum "[canray] fruits well, the yellow cholum grows well." There is a Tamul proverb:—சோம்பேறிக்குச் சோளம் வெள்ளாண்மை—"Cholum is the crop for a lazy man." Requires little care. Cf. Soppa.——Cholum bird (گلابی مینا - gulábimainá, Hind. and Dec.; పరిగెపిట్ట - parigepitta, Tel.; ചോളപ്പക്ഷി - chólappakshi, Mal.; சூறைக்குருவி - shúraikkuruvi, Tam.). Makes surprising jumps when disturbed. Bites severely. Nest underground. Feeds on insects.——Red ant (لال چیونٹی - lálchiúntí, Hind.; لال چمٹی - lálchumtí, Dec.; ಕೆಂಪಿರಿವೆ - kempirive, Can.; ಕೇಪಿಜಿನ್ - képijin, Too.; కొరవిచీమ - koravichíma, Tel.; ചോനൻ - chónan, Mal.; දිමියා - dimiyá, Singh.; முசிறு - musiru, Tam.). Title from color. Hind. from (lál, hind. red + chiúntí, hind. ant). Can. from (kempu, can. red + irive, can. ant). Tel. from (koravi, tel. fire brand + chíma, tel. ant); from burning on biting. Mal. means red one. Formica smaragdina, formicidæ, hymenoptera, holometabola, insecta [poochy], of naturalists. Female pale, shining green. Found in Malabar, but rare in the Carnatic [q.v.]. Forms a nest of living leaves, which it draws together without detaching from the branch, and unites with a fine white web; bites severely; lives chiefly on vegetable secretions. Forms a temporary web round the flowers or fruit of the Eugenia malaccensis [malaca jaumoon], Artabotrys odoratissimus [madmaunty], &c., for the purpose of feeding undisturbed.——Small red ant (چھوٹی لال چمٹی - chhotílálchumtí, Dec.; ಚಿಕ್ಕಿರಿವೆ - chikkirive, Can.; ಮರ್ಲಪಿಜಿನ್ - marlapijin, Too.; ఎర్రచీమ - errachíma, Tel.; പാമ്പിറുമ്പ - pámbirumpu, Mal.; சிற்றெறும்பு - shitterumbu, Tam.). Dec. from (chhotí, hind. small + lál, hind. red + chumtí, dec. ant). Can. from (chikka, can. small + irive, can. ant). Too. from (marla, too. to madden + pijin, too. ant). Tel. from (erra, tel. red + chíma, tel. ant). Mal. from (pámbu, mal. snake + irumpu, mal. ant). Tam. from (shiru, tam. small + erumbu, tam. ant). Formica timida, formicidæ, hymenoptera, holometabola, insecta [poochy], of naturalists. All the body covered with long scattered hairs. Found on Malabar coast; lives chiefly on vegetable secretions. Has nest underground.

CHOONAM (चूर्ण - chúrna, San.; चुण्णा - chunná, Mahr.; كلس - kils, Ar.; آهک - áhak, Pers.; چونہ - chúnah, Hind.; چنہ - chunnah, Dec.; کپور - kapur, Malay; ಸುಣ್ಣ - sunna, Can.; ಸುಣ್ಣ - sunna, Too.; సున్నము - sunnamu, Tel.; നൂറ - núru, Mal.; හුණු - hunu, Singh.; சுண்ணாம்பு - shunnámbu, Tam.). Title from sanscrit through hindostany. San. from (chúrn, san. to powder). Pers. from (áh, pers. vapour). Mal. from (nurunnu, mal. to be pulverized). Lime, whether slaked or unslaked, but the former is generally meant. Calx of chemists. Slaked lime or quicklime is limestone mixed with wood, coal [nilakary], or charcoal [adoopp kary], and exposed to a strong heat; the carbonic acid is expelled, and a substance results white, of a pale gray tint, opaque, inodorous, and its taste acrid and alkaline; when water is poured upon this it heats, crackles, swells, and a bulky white powder is obtained. Choonam is prepared in the interior from a gravelly sort of limestone dug out of quarries, and then called cull choonam; and along the coast from shells washed out of salt-water marshes, and then called kilinjal choonam; the following is the mode of preparing the former; the pebbles or gravel stones are first beat with wooden pestles to separate the aluminous clay which adheres to them; after they are thus cleaned, they are sorted, as of a white or brown quality; in some places the stone is burnt, by simply laying alternate layers of stone and charcoal on the ground, in the proportion of two parts of charcoal to one of stone, and thus allowed to burn out; the stone, after being burnt, is slaked by laying small quantities in heaps and throwing water on them, and as soon as the heat begins, the whole is mixed up together and stirred about till it is reduced to a dry powder; the lime is now considered fit for the use of the builder. Kilinjal choonam is manufactured much in the same way, excepting that it is again cleansed by the manufacturer in a dry state, by strewing it down against the wind, as corn is winnowed to separate the chaff; the burning also is differently performed; the charcoal is mixed up with the shells, and burnt in large open kilns [collvye], with a grated bottom and longitudinal flue, communicating with four or more lateral openings. Cull choonam forms a coarse sandy powder, and kilinjal choonam a very fine impalpable one. From these two substances all the mortar for building throughout Southern india is prepared. They are mixed with clean sharp river sand in various proportions, according to the use for which they are intended. For brick-work one part and a half to three of sand [manal] is mixed, with one or two of the fine slaked lime; for the coarse undercoat plastering from one to two of sand with two of lime; and for the last and fine upper coating two to three of sand with as many of lime. When the mortar [cauray] is prepared for the brick-work in rough plastering it is beat up with pure water in long stone troughs, with wooden pestles about a yard and a half long and shod with iron hoops. The following is a Hindostany proverb :—کوٹو تو چونا نہیں خاک سے دونا—"Well-beaten it is "plaster; unbeaten it is worse than dust." Choonam intended for fine plastering and ornamental works is ground by women on an oblong granite [caroom cull] stone and a cylindrical upper stone about four inches in diameter; the mixture is sometimes ground two, three and four times, to bring it to the required fineness and purity. In all the operations of choonam work jaggery [q.v.] water, that is to say, a solution of molasses or coarse sugar [q.v.], is invariably added by the builders; intimate union of the coarse particles of the lime with the sharp sand is effected by the saccharine acid in the molasses. Lime water [choonam tunny] is a useful antacid. Lime liniment is composed of equal parts of lime water and a bland oil. Lime is used internally in enlargements of spleen; externally as a caustic. Pharm. preparations of quicklime are:—Calcis hydras, properties caustic and escharotic, internally administered a corrosive poison, masticatory [charvanam]; liquor calcis, antacid, alterative, astringent; liquor calcis saccharatus; linimentum calcis. Calx chlorata is the well known deodoriser. Calcis phosphas is alterative, antacid. The finest choonam from oyster shells [chippy choonam] is chewed with betel-leaf [betel]. There is a Tamul proverb :—சுண்ணாம்பில் இருக்கிறது சுகம்—"The essence of paun [q.v.] is in the choonam." Slaked choonam in conjunction with butter milk [paul] is sometimes used in preparing a stringy mixture, employed by painters to give adhesion to colors [rangh].——(1) Choonam çauray (ಸುಣ್ಣದಗಾರೆ - sunnadagáre, Can.; சுண்ணாம்புக்காரை - shunnámbukkárai, Tam.). Tam. from (above + kárai, tam. mortar). Flooring with plaster alone, not with brick [shengal] or stone [cull].——Choonam cull (चूर्णखण्ड - chúrnakhanda, San.; چونے کا پتھر - chúnekáphattar, Hind.; ಸುಣ್ಣದಕಲ್ಲು - sunnadakallu, Can.; సున్నపురాయి - sunnapuráyi, Tel.; കുമ്മായക്കൽ - kummáyakkal, Mal.; சுண்ணாம்புக்கல் - shunnámbukkal, Tam.). San. from (chúrna, san. choonam + khanda, san. fragment). Hind. from (chúná, hind. choonam + patthar, hind. stone). Tel. from (sunnamu, tel. lime + ráyi, tel. stone). Mal. from (kummáyam, mal. lime + kal, mal. stone). San. also (karkara), meaning nodular stone. Tam. also (shukkángal), meaning fragment stone; very common. Limestone. Indurated carbonate of lime. See vol. II, 39. Lime is an oxide of metal calcium. It is known as quicklime before being slaked with water; the expression quicklime is in allusion to its corrosive property. It is literally calcic oxide or carbonate of lime deprived of its carbonic acid. On being slaked it is converted into calcic hydrate, which on being mixed with sand [manal] forms mortar or cement [cauray]. The quality or richness of a limestone is generally perceptible to the eye, but when this is not the case it may be detected by the violence of the effervescence produced on the application of sulphuric or muriatic acid [gandhac ka tezaub, namak ka tezaub], or by heating a fragment before the blow-pipe so as to convert it into quicklime. Chalk [sheemay choonam] is a soft amorphous carbonate of lime, which can be converted into quicklime by calcination and used for all the purposes of ordinary limestone; it is composed of forty-four parts of carbonic acid and fifty-six parts of lime; pure chalk dissolves readily in dilute muriatic acid, and gives no precipitate with the addition of ammonia water. Marble [shalavay cull] is limestone capable of receiving a polish. The two uni-colored conditions are white marble and black marble; but streaked and parti-colored marbles are frequent. The coloring is derived from accidental minerals, or from metallic oxides producing the coloring and veining, and from the presence of imbedded shells [chippy], corals [moongah], and other organisms.——Choonam tunny (चूर्णजल - chúrnajala, San.; چونے کا پانی - chúnekápání, Hind.; ಸುಣ್ಣದನೀರು - sunnadaníru, Can.; సున్నపునీళ్లు - sunnapuníllu, Tel.; சுண்ணாம்புத்தண்ணீர் - shunnámbuttannír, Tam.). Employed in bleaching and washing linen, in paper-making, in certain dyeing [shauyam] processes, and also in dressing leather [chamrah]. Veidyans prepare it as Europeans do; adding to ½ lb. of quicklime 12 pints of boiling soft water; they prescribe it mixed with gingelly [q.v.] oil of sesamum seeds, and sugar [q.v.], in obstinate cases of gonorrhœa. ——(2) Chippy choonam (சிப்பிச்சுண்ணாம்பு - shippiççunnámbu, Tam.). Lime made from oyster [auly] shells.——Chunk çhoonam (சங்குச்சுண்ணாம்பு - shanguççunnámbu, Tam.). From conch shells.——Cull choonam (கற்சுண்ணாம்பு - karchunnámbu, Tam.). From common limestone.——Kilinjal choonam (கிளிஞ்சிற்சுண்ணாம்பு - kiliñjirchunnámbu, Tam.). From sea-shells. ——Moottoo choonam (முத்துச்சுண்ணாம்பு - muttuççunnámbu, Tam.). Lime of pearls [moty], said to be luxury of kings with their betel [q.v.] leaf.——Nuttay choonam (நத்தைச்சுண்ணாம்பு - nattaiççunnámbu, Tam.). From snail [nuttay] shells.——Sheemay choonam (पाण्डुमृत् - pándumrit, San.; विलायतीचुण्णा - viláyatíchunná, Mahr.; طین ابیض - tíniabyaz, Ar.; گل سفید - gilisufed, Pers.; کھری مٹی - kharímattí, Hind.; ولایتی چنہ - viláitíchunnah, Dec.; کپور ڠڬريس - kapuringgris, Malay; ಶೀಮೆಸುಣ್ಣ - shímesunna, Can.; ಶೀಮೆಸುಣ್ಣ - shímesunna, Too.; సీమసున్నము - símasunnamu, Tel.; ശീമനൂറു - shímanúru, Mal.; රටහුණු - ratahunu, Singh.; சீமைச்சுண்ணாம்பு - shímaiççunnámbu, Tam.). San. from (pándu, san. white + mrit, san. clay). Mahr. from (viláyatí, mahr. foreign + chunná, mahr. lime-stone). Ar. from (tín, ar. earth + abyaz, ar. white). Pers. from (gil, pers. earth + sufed, pers. white). Hind. from (kharí, hind. chalk + mattí, hind. earth). Dec. from (viláití, hind. european + chunnah, hind. choonam). Malay from (kapur, malay, lime + inggris, malay, english). Can. from (shíme, can. europe + sunna, can. lime). Too. from (shíme, too. england + sunna, can. chalk). Tel. from (síma, tel. foreign + sunnamu, tel. lime). Mal. from (shíma, mal. europe + núru, mal. lime). Singh. from (rata, singh. foreign + hunu, singh. choonam). Tam. from (shímai, tam. foreign + shunnámbu, tam. lime). San. also (dvípasudhá), meaning island lime. Hind. also (kharí). Chalk. Otherwise carbonate of lime. Carbonas calcis, Creta of chemists. A soft limestone. Contains much carbonic acid. Imported, native chalk being too hard for use. Opaque, of a white-gray color. Geological chalk formations occur at Ootatoor near Trichinopoly; and these extend towards Vriddhauchellam, Cuddalore and Pondicherry, where the chalk occurs tinged of various colors, of red, purple, grey and black. Red chalk is plentiful in Travancore; black chalk occurs near Vullam in Tanjore. Creta præparata or prepared chalk is medicinally antacid, astringent and absorbent; finely-powdered chalk, sprinkled over ulcers, excoriations, &c., acts by absorbing discharges. Used in polishing metals [loham], and glass [cunnaudy], and in painting [rangh] and whitewashing.

CHOONDY (చుండి - tsundi, Tel. chundi *). From (tsundu, tel. dung-fly). Zemindarry, Village; Nellore district, Cundoocore talook; pop. 3,670; lat. of village 15° 10′; long. 79° 44′; from Cundoocore W.S.W. 14 miles; from Nellore N.N.W. 53 miles; from the sea W. 25½ miles. Peshcush Rs. 21,219. The zemindarry is separated from Canigherry talook by a range of hills running north and south for about 15 miles of considerable elevation and the slopes covered with dense jungle. Consists of forty-four villages and forty-four hamlets in Cundoocore talook; extent 124⅗ miles. Sunnud [q.v.] confirmed in 1842. Ruined fort west of the village. North of the tank on a hill is a ruined temple built by the ancestors of the present zemindar. Old fort near Pauta choondy, built by Reddy chiefs. Some other old temples built by same. Festival of Janardanasawmy in March. Festival of Ramalingasawmy in February. Large tank. Betel [q.v.] gardens. A fine garden founded by present zemindar. Trig. station in lat. 15° 11′ 05·93″; long. 79° 43′ 58·76″; height 834 feet; from Cundoocore W.S.W. 14 miles; from Timmareddipollem N.N.W. 6 miles; from the sea W. 26 miles.

CHOONGAM (ചുങ്കം - chunkam, Mal.). From (shulka, san. duty). Duty, tax. Choonga chauvady is toll-gate or custom-house [chowky].

CHOONTAL (ചൂണ്ടൽ - chúntal, Mal.). From (chúntu, mal. to fish). Fish-hook.——Choonta palm (ചൂണ്ടപ്പന - chúntappana, Mal.). From (above + pana, mal. palm), from use made of the branches. Same as Bastard sago palm.

CHOOP (چپ - chup, Hind.). Be silent!

CHOOPATTY (چپاتی - chapátí, Hind.). A thin flat unleavened cake of bread generally of coarse wheaten meal, baked upon a griddle or slightly baked or toasted over an open fire. The usual form of native bread [hopper, rotee].

CHOOPRASSY (چپراسی - chaprásí, Hind.). From (chap, pers. left + rást, ar. right). A servant wearing a chapraus [q.v.] or badge. Bengal term. In Madras, Peon from Portuguese.

CHOORNAM (चूर्ण - chúrna, San.; சுண்ணம் - shunnam, Tam.). From (chúrn, san. to powder). Carbonate. A salt, formed by the union of carbonic acid with base as the carbonate of lime, of copper, &c. For different carbonates see several heads under Cauram.

CHOORWEY (چُروے - churwe, Hind.). Paddy [q.v.] well soaked in water, and dried in the sun; then toasted in an earthen pot till one or two grains begin to burst, after which pounded in a wooden mortar and winnowed.

CHOOVANNA (ചുവന്ന - chuvanna, Mal.). Red. Compare in plants:—Aloe indica (chuvannakattázha), red aloe; Ficus infectoria (chuvannál), red banyan. See gloss. paragraphs.

CHORA (चोर - chóra, San.). Pali for Chola [cholam].

CHORNAULY (ചുരനാലി - churanáli, Mal.). From (svarna, san. gold + áryan, mal. the paddy so called). Gold colored paddy [q.v.]. Cautt chornauly means jungle variety; Cheriya chornauly means small; Mala chornauly means hill; Valiya chornauly means large; Velootta chornauly means white.

CHORY (چوری - chorí, Hind.). From (chur, san. to steal). Theft. Chorimaul is stolen property. Chorinam is land enjoyed free of rent unauthorizedly.——Choram (चोर - chóra, San.). Means theft, corresponding to english bastard or false [cullan]. Plant first term often joining two genera, as in:—Adansonia digitata (chóramlí), false tamarindus; Atalantia monophylla (chornimbuve), false citrus. See gloss. paragraphs.

CHOTA (چھوٹا - chhotá, Hind.). Small [cher, chinna, chiry, chit, coor, shir]. Plant first term often joining two genera, as in, where transl. is of second term:—Aloe littoralis (chhotárákaspattá), agave americana; Alpinia officinarum (chhotákulanjan), galangal; Canavalia ensiformis (chhotísem), dolichos lablab; Enicostema littorale (chhotácharáitah), swertia chirata; Trichodesma indicum (chhotákhurfá), portulaca oleracea; Xanthium strumarium (chhotágokhrú), tribulus terrestris. See gloss. paragraphs.——Chota hazree (چھوٹا حاضری - chhotaházirí, Hind.). From (above + házirí, ar. attendance). Small breakfast; refreshment taken by Europeans in the early morning before or after the morning exercise.——Chotee (چھوٹی - chhotí, Hind.). Little, feminine. In composition makes a lacab; as Chotee begum, little lady [ism].——Chotey (چھوٹے - chhote, Hind.). Little, masculine. In composition makes a lacab; as Chotey sahib, little lord [ism].

CHOTY (చోటు - tsótu, Tel.). Place; suffix in place names as Royachoty, meaning the king's place.

CHOULTRY (چاوڑی - cháurí, Hind.). Anglo-indian form of Chauvady [q.v.].

CHOVOOR (ചോവൂർ - chóvúr, Mal.). From (shiva, san. the deity + úr, mal. village). Sanscrit name (shukapura), meaning bird + village. Ancient village, Malabar district, Ponnany talook, 6 miles E. of Ponnany. Close to modern Yedappaul. One of the sixty-four graumams of Keralam [keraloputty]. This was the second or seceding colony of Numboory bramins, adopting Sheivite religion. Cf. Punniyore in Chiracal talook.

CHOW (چو - chau, Hind.). Four [char, chatoor, naul].——Chowanny (چوانی - chauanní, Hind.). Four-anna piece.——Chowdry (چودھری - chaudhrí, Hind.; చౌదరి - chaudari, Tel.). Means holder of four. The headman of a trade [inam]. Title of a class of Mahomedans.——Chowgaun (چوگاں - chaugán, Hind.). From persian. Four corners, viz., the meidaun; so Polo or horse-golf.——Chowk (چوک - chauk, Hind.). From (chatushka, san. quadrangle). A square, market.——Chowkam (చౌకము - tsaukamu, Tel.; சவுக்கம் - shavukkam, Tam.). From (chatushka, san. consisting of four). A square. The box containing the lingam [q.v.] of lingayets.——Chowkidar (چوکیدار - chaukídár, Hind.). From (above + dár, pers. keeper). A watchman.——Chowky (چوکی - chaukí, Hind.). Station of police or of customs, originally placed where four ways meet [chauvady].——Chowlam (ಚೌಲ - chaula, Can.; చవలము - tsavalamu, Tel.).—"a" Money. 2 doogoolams = 1 chowlam; 4 chowlams = 1 mauda [naunyam, 2b]. Approximate actual value, 1 chowlam = ¼ rupee. Nellore and Kistna. ⅛th of a kurruck pagoda. No coin current. Same as Hind. neem tunkah.—"b" Goldsmith's weight. 2 doogoolam = 1 chowlam; 4 chowlams = 1 mauda [niray, 3b]. Approximate actual value, 1 chowlam = 6¾ grains. ⅛th of a pagoda weight. Compare Can. hana, Tel. chinnam, Mal. and Tam. pena tookkam. See vol. I, 609.——Chowrausy (چوراسی - chaurásí, Hind.). From (chatur, san. four + ashíti, san. eighty). Eighty-four. Multiple of number of months [mausam] by number of days in week [vauram]; multiple of signs of zodiac [raushy] by number of planets [graham]; multiple of terrestrial years making up Jupiter's year [brihaspaty] by the days of a quarter lunation [chaundra mausam] by which the moon passes through seven nacshatrams [q.v.]. Enters into the whole scheme of the Hindoo, Booddhist, and Jeina religions, cosmogonies, rituals, and legendary tales. There are eighty-four forests, eighty-four bazaars, eighty-four places of pilgrimage, eighty-four gooroos of the sect of Ramaunoojan. An ankle ring or an elephant's howdah [q.v.] is called Chowrausy from that number of bells upon it. The Shwetaumbarans have eighty-four siddhauntams [q.v.]. There are eighty-four points of difference between the Digambarans and Shwetaumbarans, regarded as of importance. Asoca raised 84,000 columns throughout India. In the opinion of Booddhists the life of man reached at one period 84,000 years. Compare the number 360, the days comprised in the year, adopted by most eastern nations; founded on the natural lunar year before the exact period of a lunation [chaundra mausam] was fully understood. The 360 parts into which the circle was divided by the Hindoos, as well as the Greeks, are evidently dependent on the number of the days of the early year. 360 is 6 times 60 or the years of the Jovian cycle [brihaspaty chuckram]. The respirations of a healthy man are said by the Jogies to be 360 in the course of a ghurry [q.v.]. Rama's auxiliaries, in his attack on Lunka, were 360,000 monkeys. Compare again 1,008 or 12 × 84. Shiva has, like Krishnan, 1,008 names.——Chowsar (چوسر - chausar, Hind.). From (above + sár, hind. dice). Otherwise Takhta i nard, meaning chess board. Cloth chess played with dice four or six-sided, and thrown by the hand and not from boxes, and full lengthways [chatrangam, pacheesy].——Chowsingha (रोहिष - róhisha, San.; भेकर - bhékara, Mahr.; چوسنگھا - chausinghá, Hind.; جنگلی بکرا - janglíbakrá, Dec.; ಕೊಂಡಕುರಿ - kondakuri, Can.; కొండగొర్రె - kondagorre, Tel.; କୁତ୍ରା - kutra, Oor.; വരിമാൻ - varimán, Mal.; மலையாடு - malaiyádu, Tam.). Title from hindostany. San. from (róhita, san. red). Hind. from (chau, hind. four + singh, hind. horn), Dec. from (janglí, hind. wild + bakrá, hind. sheep). Can. from (kónda, tel. hill + kuri, can. sheep). Tel. from (konda, tel. hill + gorre, tel. sheep). Mal. from (vari, mal. stripe + mán, mal. deer). Tam. from (malai, tam. mountain + ádu, tam. sheep). Tel. also (adavigorre), meaning forest + sheep. Title otherwise Four-horned antelope. Tetraceros quadricornis, antelopinæ, bovidæ, ruminantia, mammalia [sastanam, 23], of naturalists [jantoo]. Color a uniform brownish bay above, beneath lighter, and whitish inside the limbs and in the middle of the belly; forelegs dark, also the muzzle and edge of the ears, which are white within, with long hairs; fetlocks dark within, with more or less distinct whitish rings. Length from 40 to 42 inches; height at shoulder 2 feet to 26 inches; at the croup a little higher. Anterior horns up to 1½ inches; posterior horns 4 to 5. The anterior horns [sing] in the South of India generally have rarely more than a knob or corneous tip, which often falls off, leaving a black callous skin. Abounds in the hills of the Eastern ghauts [q.v.] from near Madras northwards.——Chowt (چوتھ - chauth, Hind.; சவுத்து - shavuttu, Tam.). From (chaut'ha, mahr. from chaturt'hi, san. fourth). One-fourth part. The tribute; equal ¼th, of actual Government collections, formerly levied by the Mahrattas from provincial governors as compensation for leaving their districts unplundered. See vol. I, 112.——Chowtah (چوتھا - chauthá, Hind.). A canvas covered palankeen used in the army.——Chowty (چوتھی - chauthí, Hind.). Same as Chatoorty. A Mahomedan ceremony observed fourth day after marriage when the wedding bracelets are untied from the wrists of the bride and bridegroom [shaddy].

CHOW (చవు - tsavu, Tel.). From (chava, mahr. taste); examination or test. A weight equal to 5¾ grains, by which pearls [moty] are valued.

CHOWGHAUT (ചാവക്കാട് - chávakkátu, Mal. chávakád). From (chávu, mal. death + kátu, mal. forest).—"a" Deputy tahsildarry, Malabar district. Pay Rs. 70.—"b" Town, Deputy tahsildar's and Munsif's station, Port; Malabar district, Ponnany talook; pop. 6,077; lat. 10° 35′; long. 76° 05′; from Bombay S.S.E. 605 miles; from Calicut S.S.E. 48 miles; from Cannanore S.S.E. 98 miles; from Chetwye N. 3½ miles; from Madras S.W. 334 miles; from Malapooram S. 32 miles; from Manantoddy S. 82 miles; from Palghaut W.S.W. 42 miles; from Ponnany S.S.E. 16 miles; from Tellicherry S.S.E. 87 miles; from Trichore W.N.W. 12 miles; from Velliangode S.S.E. 12 miles. Half way between Cochin and Calicut at north end of backwater, with small ports of Attacooy and Coorcooy subordinate to it. The port is not at Chowghaut itself, which is inland but at Chetwye. Head-quarters of Chowghaut talook till 1860, when latter was amalgamated with Cootnaud and Bettatnaud into present Ponnany talook. Inhabitants chiefly Christians and Moplahs. Trade in salt-fish and cocoanuts [q.v.].

CHOWK (چوک - chauk, Hind.). Whip [coradah].——Chowk maram (सर्पूहल - sarpúhala, Mahr.; चाबकरूकु - chabkirúku, Conc.; جنگلی سرو - janglísaro, Hind. and Dec.; اراو - aráu, Malay; ಕೇಸರಿಕೆಮರ - késarikemara, Can.; ចាបុកុមារ - chabukumara, Too.; చవుకుమాను - tsavukumánu, Tel.; ചവുക്കു - chavókku, Mal.; കാസാഗാ - kasagaha, Singh. ; சவுக்கு - shavukku, Tam.). Title from tamul. Hind. from (jangli, hind. wild + saro, pers. cypress, cupressus sempervirens, linn.). Can. from (késha, san. hair + mara, can. tree). Tel. from (tsavuku, tel. whip + mánu, tel. tree). Singh. from (kasa, singh. whip + gaha, singh. tree). Tam. from persian, meaning whip; from slender cord-like branches. Hind. also (janglíjháú), meaning wild tamarisk. Mal. also (chólamaram), meaning shade tree; (káttáti), meaning wind + shaking. Tam. also (shivamaram), meaning red tree; from reddish wood.—"a" Terms for the whole genus casuarina, casuarinaceæ [vriçsham, 127]. Leafless trees, with slender cord-like, generally pendulous branches, which are striated with sheathing joints, having much resemblance to the genus equisetum or horse-tails; flowers inconspicuous; male flowers in spikes or catkins; female flowers in compact heads, becoming a woody cone about an inch in length, with many cells, each containing a small winged nut-fruit.—"b" Terms apply particularly to Casuarina equisetifolia, forst. Alias Casuarina litoralis, litorea, muricata. Title otherwise Australian fir, Australian swamp oak, Beef wood, Casuarina, Casuarina pine, Forest oak, He-oak, Horse-tail casuarina, Iron-wood tree [cassa, dark vail, deccany doodar, foreign ilanjy, naugachampak, yellow condray], Shade tree, She-oak, Swamp oak, Tinian pine, Whip tree, Wild cypress, Wild tamarisk, Wind-whirl. Tree, 60 feet high; trunk straight, as in firs and pines; bark smooth, brown; branches scattered; leaves verticelled, slightly furrowed, jointed, joints ending in a cup, in which the next joint sits; stipules annular; male aments cylindric, terminating the leaves; scales six to eight in a verticel, united at the base, pointed and woolly; flowers, as many as divisions in the verticel; corolla two opposite, boat-shaped, ciliate scales; filaments single; anthers two-lobed; female flowers on a different tree; aments oval, short, peduncled; scales six to eight in a verticel, with a single flower between each; corolla none; germs oblong; style dividing into two long, recurved, garnet-colored portions; stigmas simple; strobiles oval, size of a nutmeg, armed with the sharp points of the two-valved capsule; seeds small, with a large, wedge-shaped, membranaceous wing; flowering in hot season. Indigenous on the coast of chittagong and the burmese provinces and southward as far as queensland; introduced here beginning of century; has a considerable superficial resemblance to a larch or other finally-feathered conifer, making an acceptable variety in the plains, where real pines will not grow; it flourishes in a low sandy soil and is always the first that springs up from land relinquished by the sea. Grows freely, ripening its seed in great abundance; it grows in ten years to the height of about 30 feet, generally very straight, and where the main shoot is broken or lopped off, throws out secondary shoots readily which are usually erect; it requires to have water at the roots, at least 10 feet from the surface of the ground. Cut down to 6 feet, and kept clipt, forms a dense bush hardly to be recognised. Bark slightly astringent, employed in infusion as tonic; quoted in pharm. but non-official. Favorite avenue [shaulay] tree, especially in narrow roads, and if kept stunted as above-mentioned forms good hedge; largely planted for fuel [lukdy]; great changes have been made along the east coast by planting dry tracts of drifting sand with it; bark gives brown dye [shauyam] called extract of casuarina; stem gives a resin [raul]. Wood of equisetifolia is very hard, reddish in color, and in density and appearance somewhat resembles trincomalee [trincomalee tree]; is well adapted for posts, and bears submersion in water; much grown for firewood, but is well adapted for rafters and building purposes; the timber, according to weight, is without exception the strongest wood known for bearing cross strains.—"c" The species stricta, quadrivalvis, paludosa and leptoclada have also been introduced on the neilgherries from australia.

CHOWLAH (چولا - chaulá, Hind.). Same as Cow gram.

CHOWRY (चामर - chámara, San.; چونری - chaunrí, Hind.; சவரி - shavari, Tam.). From (chamara, san. yak). A fly-waver. Next in dignity to the umbrella. May be made either of strips of sandal-wood, or of ivory [dant]; but the most esteemed are those made of the tail of the Himalayan yak set in a handle, whence title [chamaram, maryanday].

CHUCKLER (சக்கிலி - shakkili, obl.; சக்கிலியன் - shakkiliyan, pers. sing.; சக்கிலியர் - shakkiliyar, pers. pl., Tam.). Caste-title. The corresponding terms are:—Hind. chamaur; Can. and Tel. maudiga; Mal. tolcollan. Occupation is leather working, in which they had a monopoly until the Mahomedans and Lubbays disturbed it. Whether they or the pariahs are the lowest is subject of dispute. Chucklers will not take food or water from pariahs, nor latter from former. Chucklers, like pariahs, are outside the Hindoo caste system. They are not allowed to enter the portico of a pagoda [q.v.]. Chucklers dwell outside the village walls, are as above said tanners, workers in raw hides and in leather [chamrah], shoe and harness makers; also messengers, scavengers, and executioners. They make the leather bags for drawing water and any other leather article for villagers of their own village gratis. They are never horse-keepers. Very few read or write. The race as a rule are of a dark black hue, short in stature, and of very slender frame; lower limbs particularly slight, and calf and foot delicate. They still eat creatures that most races regard as unclean. In villages, where they perform the lowest menial offices, they are paid by portions of the crops and some small privileges. Though low in caste, their women are held to be of the Pudminy [q.v.] kind, that is to say of peculiar beauty of face and form, and very virtuous. In Madura the men are left-hand and the women right-hand [jauty, yidangay].

CHUCKRAM (चक्र - chakra, San.). From (kram, san. to move). A wheel or circle. The sharp quoit or discus, an ancient Hindoo missile weapon, whirled from forefinger; so especially the miraculous weapon of either Vishnoo or Shiva. An ancient silver coin once generally current in the s. of India, being the same to the gold pagoda that the anna is since to the silver rupee. It had under it again the copper cash [q.v.], which was its sixteenth. There was once a Tanjore silver chuckram, $22\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 star pagoda [q.v.]. A very small silver chuckram still remains in Travancore. This is in size the split half of a pea. It weighs grains $5\frac{7}{10}$, and $28\frac{1}{4}$ go to 1 rupee. The present Travancore circulation consists of this coin in whole and half pieces; and the copper cash in four forms, single, double, quadruple and octuple or eight cash. The last is equal to the half silver chuckram. Chuckrams being small and globose, are exceedingly difficult to count or handle; they are measured or counted by means of a chuckram board, a small square wooden plate with a given number of holes, the exact size and depth of a chuckram; a small handful of coins is thrown on the board, which is then shaken gently from side to side, so as to cause a single chuckram to fall into each cavity, and the surplus if any is swept off with the hand. See vol. I, 609; II, 292. Chuckram means a cycle of years. Also a wheel used to drain water from fields on the west coast. Also Hindoo 2nd or pers. name; common to both sexes [peyar].—(1) Chuckerbutty (ചക്രവർത്തി - chakravatti, Mal.). Bengal form of Chuckravurty [peyar].——Chuckrabala (चक्रबल - chakrabala, San.). From (above + bala, san. power). Multiplication of the square. The principle on which algebraic problems of the form $ax^2 + b = y^2$ are solved.——Chuckrapauny (சக்கரபாணி - shakkarappáni, Tam.). From (above + páni, san. hand). Epithet of Vishnoo, the discus-handed deity. Hindoo 2nd or pers. name [peyar].——Chuckraunkam (चक्राङ्क - chakránka, San.). From (above + anka, san. figure caused by branding). Mark of the discus of Vishnoo, stamped with a hot iron on the persons of his worshippers [matam].——Chuckrauvaul (چکراول - chakrával, Hind.). From (above + ávali, san. row). Ring-bone in horses [ashwarogam].——Chuckravurty (चक्रवर्ती - chakravartí, San.). From (above + vartí, san. turning). He whose chariot wheels roll; a king. Veishnava second name. In Bengal Chuckerbutty [peyar]. Title assumed by many small rajahs.——Chuckroon (ചക്രം - ckukram, Mal.). Anjengo coin, 27 to 1 rupee.——Chuckry (چکری - chakrí, Hind.). Hindoo gold coin struck by the princes of Bednore [ikkairy].

CHUDDER (چادر - chádar, Pers. and Hind.; چدر - chaddar, Dec.). A large piece of cloth or sheet, of one and a half or two breadths, thrown over the head, so as to cover the whole body. Men sleep rolled up in it [sheelay]. Term is applied to the cloths spread over Mahomedan tombs. Also to woollen shawls [q.v.] manufactured at Rampore in the Punjaub.

CHULLAH (چهلا - chhallá, Hind.). Toe ring made of gold or silver, very thin [zewar].

CHUNDA (ചന്ത - chanta, Mal.). From (sam, san. together + dhá, san. to hold). Association. Market [santa, shandy].——Chundavila (ചന്തവില - chantavila, Mal.). From (above + vila, mal. price). Market price.

CHUNDAH (چندا - chandá, Hind.). Moon-like [chand, chundran]. In composition forms a lacab; as Chundah miyaun, moon-like lord [ism].——Chundah sahib (چنداصاحب - chandá-sáhib, Hind.). Son-in-law of Dost ally [q.v.], the second of the Carnatic [q.v.] nawaubs of the first hereditary line. Rival of Wallajah [q.v.] for the Arcot throne. Put an end to the Naick government of Madura by seizing on Trichinopoly and Madura. Subsequently defeated by the Mahrattas and confined at Sattaura for eight years, when he was released by Dupleix, who espousing his cause marched to Trichinopoly against Mahomed ally. Defeated there, Chundah sahib surrendered himself to a Tanjore general, by whom he was assassinated. See vol. I (177) and 44 [charitram].

CHUNDAN (चण्ड - chanda, San.). From (chanda, san. wrathful). Yaman, the god of death. Also Shiva. Also an asooran killed by cauly; hence Chundy is parvaty [chamoondy]. ——Chundaula (चण्डाल - chandála, San.; چنڈال - chandál, Hind.). As supposed to be savage and cruel. Sanscrit term for outcaste, especially one sprung from union of Shoodra man and Bramin woman [jauty].
